PURITAN.† n. s. [from pure.] ‘It is to be seen by Camden’s Annals, that when the recusants first forbore coming to church, about that time did this party begin to be known by the name of puritans.’ Thorndike, Discourse of Forbearance, &c. p. 8.] ‘A sectary pretending to eminent purity of religion.’

I believe there are men that would be puritans, but not any that are!

Feltham, Res. i. 5.

From these disorders we must pass to those people called puritans, who being now numerous, and observing their private meetings in Oxford, [there] were not wanting certain scholars that made it their recreation to scoff at and jeer them.

— They imitated them in their whining tones, with the lifting up of eyes; in their antick actions; and left nothing undone, whereby they might make them ridiculous.

A. Wood, Ann. Univ. of Ox. in 1632.

The schism which the papists on the one hand, and the superstition which the puritans on the other, lay to our charge, are very justly chargeable upon themselves.

Bp. Sanderson.

PURITAN.* adj. Of, or belonging to, puritans.

I mean not puritanically.

Sir M. Sandys, Ess. (1634), p. 162.

PURITANISM.† n. s. [from puritan.] The notions of a puritan.

I go no farther, but leave you to yourselves; and, if it be possible, unto more charitable conceits of those that deserve no other imputation, but “They are no puritans;” which God in goodness keep out of this church and state, as dangerous as popery, for any thing I am able to discern. The only difference being, popery is for tyranny; puritanism for anarchy; popery is [the] original of superstition; puritanism the high-way unto profaneness: both alike enemies unto piety.

Mountagu, App. to Cas. (1625), p. 321.

A serious and impartial examination of the grounds, as well of popery as puritanism, according to that measure of understanding God hath afforded me.

Walton.

To PURITANIZE.* v. n. [from puritan.] To deliver the notions of a puritan.

M. Perkins in his problem, though he saith would puritanize it and so goeth on, yet confesseth that the fathers used to arm themselves against the devil with the sign of the cross.

should read and make observations of such things as they find for their purpose. Dryden, Dufrenoy.
He travelled the world, on purpose to converse with the most learned men. Guardian.

The common materials, which the ancients made their ships of, were the ornus or wild ash;
the fir was likewise used for this purpose. Arbutnot.

I do this, on purpose to give you a more sensible impression of the imperfection of your knowledge. Watts.

Where men err against this method, it is usually on purpose, and to shew their learning. Swift.

2. Effect; consequence; the end desired.
To small purpose had the council of Jerusalem been assembled, if once their determination being set down, men might afterwards have defended their former opinions. Hooker.

The ground will be like a wood, which keepeth out the sun, and so continueth the wet, whereby it will never graze to purpose that year. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Their design is a war, whenever they can openit with a prospect of succeeding to purpose. Temple.

Such first principles will serve us to very little purpose, and we shall be as much at a loss with as without them, if they may, by any human power, such as is the will of our teachers, or opinions of our companions, be altered or lost in us. Locke.

He that would relish success to purpose, should keep his passion cool, and his expectation low. Collier on Desire.

What the Romans have done is not worth notice,
having had little occasion to make use of this art,
and what they have of it to purpose being borrowed

3. Instance; example.

And falling from a hill, he was so bruise'd

That the pursuers took him.

Shaks. Hen. IV.

His swift pursuers from heaven's gates discern

The advantage, and descending tread us down

Thus drooping.

Milton, P. L.

Like a declining statesman left forlorn

To his friends' pity and pursuers' scorn.

Denham.

2. One who endeavours to attain an object.

Dr. Johnson notices only the preceding sense.

Is not all this to dictate magisterially? A thing very unpleasant to the ingenious and free pursuers of rational knowledge.

Worthington to Hartlib, (1661.)

Ep. 15.

Our pursuer soon came up and joined us with all the familiarity of an old acquaintance.

Goldsmith, Ess. 10.

PURSUIT. n. s. [poursuite, Fr.]

1. The act of following with hostile intention.

Arm, warriors, arm for fight! the foe at hand,

Whom fled we thought, will save us long pursuit.

Milton, P. L.

2. Endeavour to attain.

This means they long propos'd, but little gain'd,

Yet after much pursuit, at length obtain'd.

Dryden.

Its honours and vanities are continually passing before him, and inviting his pursuit.

Rogers.

He has annexed a secret pleasure to the idea of any thing that is new or uncommon, that he might encourage us in the pursuit after knowledge, and engage us to search into the wonders of his creation.

Addison.

The will, free from the determination of such desires, is left to the pursuit of nearer satisfactions, and to the removal of those uneasinesses it feels in its longings after them.

Locke.

3. Prosecution; continuance of endeavour.

He concluded with sighs and tears, to conjure them, that they would no more press him to give his consent to a thing so contrary to his reason, the execution whereof would break his heart, and that they would give over further pursuit of it.

Clarendon.

PURSUIVANT. n. s. [poursuivant, Fr.] A state messenger; an attendant on the heralds.

How oft do they with golden pinions cleave
The flitting skies, like flying pursuivants. Spenser.

These grey locks, the pursuivants of death,
Argue the end of Edmund Mortimer. Shaks.
Send out a pursuivant at arms

To Stanley's regiment, bid him bring his power
Before sun-rising. Shakespeare, Rich. III.

For helmets, crests, mantles, and supporters, I leave the reader to Edmund Bolton, Gerard Leigh, John Ferne, and John Guillim Portsmouth, pursuivants of arms, who have diligently laboured in armory. Camden, Rem.

The pursuivants came next,
And like the heralds each his scutcheon bore. Dryden.

PURSY. adj. [poussiff, Fr.] the same.
Serenius conjectures it to come from the Icel. porre, a cough. Menage explains it by pulsivus, quasi ibia pulsans,
Lat.] Short-breathed and fat.

In the fatness of these pursy times,
Virtue itself of vice must pardon beg,
Yea court and woo for leave to do it good. Shaks.

Now breathless wrong
Shall sit and paint in your great chairs of ease,
And pursy insolence shall break his wind
With fear and horrid fright. Shaks. Timon.

An hostess dowager,
Grown fat and pursy by retail
Of pots of beer and bottled ale. Hudibras.

By these, the Medes
Perfume their breaths, and cure old pursy men.

Yourself of sword before that bloody day. Spenser.
His house with all convenience was purvey'd.

The rest he found. Dryden.
2. To procure.

What though from outmost land and sea purvey'd
For him; each rarer tributary life
Bleeds not; it does. Thomson, Summer.

TO PURVEY. † v. n. To buy in provisions; to provide.

Yield thee, so well this day thou hast purvey'd.
Milton, P. L.

It is the active arm, and the busy hand, that must both purvey for the mouth, and wital give it a right to every morsel that is put into it.

South, Sermon, vii. 46.

PURVEYANCE. n. s. [from purvey.]
1. Provision.

Whence mounting up, they find purveyance
meet
Of all, that royal prince's court became. Spenser.

2. Procurement of victuals.

3. An exaction of provisions for the king's followers.

Some lands are more changeable than others; as for their lying near to the borders, or because of great and continual purveyances that are made upon them. Bacon.

PURVEYOR. n. s. [from purvey.]
1. One that provides victuals.

The purveyors of victuals are much to be condemned, as not a little faulty in that behalf.

And wing'd purveyors his sharp hunger fed
With frugal scraps of flesh, and maslin bread. Harte.

2. A procurer; a pimp.

These women are such cunning purveyors!
Mark where their appetites have once been pleased,
The same resemblance in a younger lover,
Lies brooding in their fancies the same pleasures. Dryden.

The stranger, ravish'd at his good fortune, is introduced to some imaginary title; for this pur-veyor has her representatives of some of the finest ladies. Addison.

3. An officer who exacted provision for the king's followers.

PURVIEW. † n. s. [pourveu, Fr.] Proviso;
providing clause.

These are profanations within the purview of several statutes; and those you are to present.

Bacon, Charge at the Sessions of the Verge.
Though the petition expresses only treason and felony, yet the act is general against all appeals in parliament; and many times the purview of an act is larger than the preamble or the petition.

Hale, Comm. Law.

PURULENCE. n. s. [from purulent.] GE-
PURULENCE. n. s. Generation of pus or matter.

Consumptions are induced by purulency in any of the viscera. Arbuthnot on Diet.

PURULENT. adj. [purulent, Fr. purulensus, Lat.] Consisting of pus or the running of wounds.

A carcase of man is most infectious and odious to man, and purulent matter of wounds to sound flesh. Bacon.

It is no easy thing always to discern, whether the suspected matter expectorated by a cough be really purulent, that is, such as comes from an ulcer. Blackmore.

It spews a filthy froth
Of matter purulent and white,
Which happen'd on the skin to light,
And there corrupting on a wound,
Spreads leprosy. Swift, Miscell.

An acrimonious or purulent matter, stagnating in some organ, is more easily deposited upon the liver than any other part. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

PUS. n. s. [Latin.] The matter of a well digested sore.

Acrid substances break the vessels, and produce an ichor instead of laudable pus. Arbuthnot.

TO PUSH. v. a. [pousser, Fr.]
1. To strike with a thrust.

If the ox push a man-servant, he shall be stoned.
Ex. xxi.

2. To force or drive by impulse.

The youth push away my feet. Job, xxx. 12.

3. To force not by a quick blow, but by continued violence.

Shew your mended faiths,
To push destruction and perpetual shame
Out of the weak door of our fainting land.

Through these will we push down our enemies.
Shakespeare, Shakspeare.

Waters forcing way,
Sidelong had push'd a mountain from his seat,
Half sunk with all his pines. Milton, P. L.

This terrible scene which might have proved dangerous, if Cornelius had not been pushed out of the room. Arbuthnot.

4. To press forward.

He forewarns his care
With rules to push his fortune or to bear. Dryden.
With such impudence did he push this matter,
that when he heard the cries of above a million of people begging for their bread, he termed it the clamours of faction. Addison.

Arts and sciences, in one and the same century, have arrived at great perfection, and no wonder,
since every age has a kind of universal genius,
which inclines those that live in it to some particular studies, the work then being pushed on by many hands, must go forward. Dryden.

5. To urge; to drive.

Ambition pushes the soul to such actions as are apt to procure honour to the actor. Addison, Spect.

6. To enforce; to drive to a conclusion.

We are pushed for an answer, and are forced at last freely to confess, that the corruptions of the administration were intolerable. Swift.

7. To importune; to teaze.

TO PUSH. v. n.
1. To make a thrust.

None shall dare
With shortened sword to stab in closer war,
Nor push with biting point, but strike at length. Dryden.

A calf will so manage his head, as though he would push with his horns even before they shoot.

Lambs, though they never saw the actions of their species, push with their foreheads, before the budding of a horn. Addison.

2. To make an effort.

War seem'd asleep for nine long years; at length
Both sides resolv'd to push, we try'd our strength. Dryden.

3. To make an attack.

The king of the south shall push at him, and the king of the north shall come against him. Dan. xi. 40.

Abp. Cranmer, Answ. to Bp. Gardiner, p. 56.

Q.

Q U A

Q,† Is a consonant borrowed from the Latin or French, for which, though q is commonly placed in the Saxon alphabet, the Saxons generally used cp, cw; as cpellan or cwellan, to quell: qu is, in English, pronounced as the French, and the Spaniards cu; as quail, quenck, except quoit, which is spoken, according to the manner of the French, coit: the name of this letter is cue, from queue, French, tail; its form being that of an O with a tail.

Johnson.

The letter q was borrowed from the Roman alphabet. The Saxons had no q, as Martin states, Gram. p. 28; and as Mrs. Elstob shows, Sax. Gram. Nor does it appear in the Icelandic. See Andreas's Icel. Dict., Monosyll. Iceland., and the Icel. Dict. in Hicke's Thesaurus. The Roman q, and qu, had been introduced into the orthography of several Anglo-Saxon words, in the place of the Saxon cp, (cu) long before the Anglo-Saxon was mixed with the Norman French. See Hicke's Thes., Benson's Sax. Gram., and Lye's Anglo-Sax. Dict. The qu and quh, in the orthography of the old English and Scottish, were introduced from the Roman alphabet, to represent the powers and pronunciation of the Sax. cu, hw, and w; and of the British gw, and chw. Bailey. The q was also substituted for c in many French words.

G. Chalmers.

QUAB.† n. s. [derived, by Skinner, from gobio, the Latin name. Dr. Johnson.—The Lat. gobio is a gudgeon: the Teut. quabbe, or quappe, holothuria, piscis genus, a prickly fish.] A sort of fish.

Wandering Pr. of Troy.

At this the arrant's courage quails. Cleaveland.

TO QUAIL. v. a. [cpellan, Saxon.] To crush; to quell; to depress; to sink; to overpower. Not used. Dr. Johnson. — It was formerly much used: and the modern colloquial phrase, to cool the courage, seems to have been adopted from this old word.

To drive him to despair, and quite to quail, He shew'd him painted in a table plain

The damned ghosts.

Spenser, F. Q.

The sight of our ensigns and cornets so quailed their courage, that having no other remedy, they yielded to his mercy.

At our quaint spirits. Shaks. M. N. Dream.

Lest the place
And my quaint habits breed astonishment.

Long stories of absurd superstitions, ceremonies, quaint habits. Milton, Hist. of Moscow. Pref.

Where'er the power of ridicule displays
Her quaint-ey'd visage, some incongruous form,
Some stubborn dissonance of things combin'd,
Strikes on the quick observer.

3. Subtile ; artful. Obsolete.
As clerkes been full subtile and quaint.

What's the efficient cause of a king ? surely a quaint question ? Yet a question that has been moved.

4. Neat ; pretty ; exact.
But for a fine, quaint, graceful, and excellent fashion, yours is worth ten on't.

Her mother had intended,
That, quaint in green, she shall be loose enrob'd
With ribands pendent, flaring 'bout her head.

I never saw a better fashioned gown,
More quaint, more pleasing, nor more commendable.

5. Subtly excited ; finespun.
I'll speak of frays,

Like a fine bragging youth, and tell quaint lies,
How honourable ladies sought my love,
Which I denying, they fell sick, and died. Shaks.

He his fabrick of the heavens
Hath left to their disputes, perhaps to move
His laughter at their quaint opinions wide, Hereafter.

6. Quaint is, in Spenser, quailed ; depressed. I believe by a very licentious irregularity. Dr. Johnson.—This is a great mistake ; for, in the passage which Dr. Johnson cites from Spenser, the word quaint is the old participle quenched ; a word of no connection with the adjective before us. See QUEINT.

7. Affected ; foppish. This is not the true idea of the word, which Swift seems not to have well understood.

To this we owe those monstrous productions, which under the name of trips, spies, amusements, and other conceited appellations, have over-run us ; and I wish I could say, those quaint fopperies were wholly absent from graver subjects. Swift.

- QUAINTLY. adv. [from quaint.]

1. Nicely ; exactly ; with petty elegance.
When was old Sherwood's hair more quaintly curl'd,
Or nature's cradle more enchas'd and pur'd ?

2. Artfully.
Breathe his faults so quaintly,

That they seem the taints of liberty,
The flash and outbreak of a fiery mind. Shaks.

3. Ingeniously with success. This is not the true sense.

As my Buxoma

With gentle finger strok'd her milky care,
I quaintly stole a kiss. Gay.

QUAINTNESS. n. s. [from quaint.] Nicety ; petty elegance.

There is a certain majesty in simplicity, which is far above all the quaintness of wit. Pope.

TO QUAKE. v. n. [cpacanz, Saxon.]

1. To shake with cold or fear ; to tremble.
Dorus threw Pamela behind a tree, where she stood quaking like the partridge on which the hawk is ready to seize.

If Cupid hath not spent all his quiver in Venice, thou wilt quake for this. Shakspeare.

Do such business as the better day
Would quake to look on. Shakspeare.

Who honour not his father,
Henry the fifth, that made all France to quake,
Shake he his weapon at us, and pass by. Shaks.

The mountains quake at him, and the hills melt, and the earth is burnt at his presence. Nah. i. 5.

The quaking powers of hight stood in amaze.
Cowley.

In fields they dare not fight where honour calls,
The very noise of war their souls does wound,
They quake but hearing their own trumpets sound.

2. To shake ; not to be solid or firm.
Next Smedley divid'd ; slow circles dissolv'd o'er
The quaking mud, that clos'd and op'd no more.

TO QUAKE. * v. a. To frighten ; to throw into trepidation. Obsolete.

I'll report it,
Where senators shall mingle tears with smiles ;
Where great patricians shall attend and shrug,
I'll end admire ; where ladies shall be frighted,
And gladly quak'd, hear more. Shaks. Coriol.

QUAKE. n. s. [from the verb.] A shudder ; a tremulous agitation.

As the earth may sometimes shake,
For winds shut up will cause a quake ;
So often jealousy and fear
Stol'n, to mine heart, cause tremblings there.

QUAKER. * n. s. [generally supposed to be from quake, on account of the tremblings with which the speakers of this sect are described : as, "Will any sober person believe, that a quaking speaker is divinely inspired, when he commits endless tautologies ?" &c. Hallywell's Acc. of Familism as revived by the Quakers, 1679, p. 14. Mr. Malone considers this etymology doubtful, on account of Sir G. Wharton, in 1660, having connected the word with quack in the following lines :

"Let's tear our ribbons, burn our richer laces,
"Wear russet, and contrive bewitched faces ;
"With thee and thou let us go quack awhile," &c.

And accordingly the poet afterwards calls them mummers. The term, however, is said by their own writers, to have been given on account of a justice in Derbyshire, before whom George Fox, shoemaker and founder of their order, was brought, deriding Fox for having bidden him and those about him to tremble at the Word of the Lord. From that period, 1650, the name of quaker is said to have been applied to Fox's followers ; who, however, denominated themselves friends.] One of a religious sect, distinguished by several particularities in opinions and manners ; and especially by peaceable demeanour.

Quakers, that, like to lanterns, bear
Their light within 'em, will not swear. Hudibras.

Friend, 19th of the seventh month. Being of that part of Christians whom men call quakers ; and being a seeker of the right way, I was persuaded yesterday to hear one of your most noted preachers : the matter he treated, was necessity of well living grounded upon a future state.

Tatler, No. 72.

Seeing a book in his [a quaker's] hand, I asked our artist what it was, who told me it was the quaker's religion. Upon perusal, I found it to be nothing but a new-fashioned grammar, or an art of abridging original discourse. The nouns were reduced to a very small number, as the light, friend, Babylon. The principal of his pronouns was thou. — There were no adverbs besides yea and nay. — The conjunctions were only hem ! and ha ! — There was at the end of the grammar a little nomenclature, called The Christian Man's Vocabulary, which gave new appellations, or (if you will) Christian names to almost every thing in life. I replaced the book in the hand of the figure, not without admiring the simplicity of its garb, speech, and behaviour.

Addison, Tatler, No. 257.

QUAKERLY. * adj. [from quaker.] Resembling quakers.

You would not have Englishmen, when they are in company, hold a silent quakerly meeting.

Goodman, Wint. Ev. Conf. P. I.

QUAKERISM. * n. s. [from quaker.] The QUAKER. * notions of quakers.

This man's faction, that man's quakerism, and another's popery.

South, Serm. v. 513.

Quakerly, though it pretend high, is mere Sadducism at the bottom.

Hallywell, Acc. of Fam. ch. 4.

Suppose presbytery, anabaptism, quakerism, independency, &c. or any other subdivided sect among us, should be established.

Plainness, simplicity, and quakerism, either in dress or manners, will by no means do.

Swift on Repealing the Test.

QUAKING. * n. s. [cpacanz, Saxon.] Trepidation.

Son of man, eat thy bread with quaking, and drink thy water with trembling and with carefulness.

Ezek. xii. 18.

A great quaking fell upon them. Dan. x. 7.

The quakings of the earth were more terrible in former ages. Hakevill on Prov. p. 125.

QUAKING-GRASS. n. s. [phalaris, Lat.] An herb.

Ainsworth.

QUALIFIABLE. * adj. [from qualify.] That may be abated or qualified. Sherwood.

As to that extermination of the Canaanites, which carries so horrible an appearance of severity, we may find it qualifiable, if we consider that, for the nature of the trespasses, which procured it, they were insufferably heinous and abominable.

Barrow, vol. iii. S. 37.

QUALIFICATION. n. s. [qualification, Fr. from qualify.]

1. That which makes any person or thing fit for any thing.

It is in the power of the prince to make piety and virtue become the fashion, if he would make them necessary qualifications for preferment.

Swift.

2. Accomplishment.

Good qualifications of mind enable a magistrate to perform his duty, and tend to create a publick esteem of him.

Atterbury.

3. Abatement ; diminution.

Neither had the waters of the flood infused such an impurity, as thereby the natural and powerful operation of all plants, herbs, and fruits upon the earth received a qualification and harmful change.

Raleigh, Hist. of the World.

QUALIFIER.* n. s. [from qualify.] That which modifies, or qualifies.

Tobacco, being hot and dry, must have a qualifier of cold and moist from the pot; and that again being cold and moist, must have a qualifier of hot and dry from the pipe, which makes them like ratsban'd rats drink and vent, vent and drink, Sellenger's round, and the same again!

Junius, Sin Stigm. (1639), p. 269.

TO QUALIFY. v. a. [qualifier, Fr.]

1. To fit for any thing.

Place over them such governours, as may be qualified in such manner as may govern the place.

Bacon, Adv. to Villiers.

I bequeath to Mr. John Whiteway the sum of one hundred pounds, in order to qualify him for a surgeon.

Swift's Will.

2. To furnish with qualifications.

That which ordinary men are fit for, I am qualified in, and the best of me is diligence.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

She is of good esteem,
Her dowry wealthy, and of worthy birth,
Beside so qualified as may beseech
The spouse of any noble gentleman.

Shakespeare.

3. To make capable of any employment or privilege: as, he is qualified to kill game.

4. To abate; to soften; to diminish.

I have heard,

Your grace hath ta'en great pains to qualify
His rigorous course.

Shaks. Merch. of Ven.

I do not seek to quench your love's hot fire,
But qualify the fire's extreme rage,
Lest it should burn above the bounds of reason.

Shakespeare.

I have drunk but one cup to-night, and that was craftily qualified too; and behold what innovation it makes here.

Shakespeare.

They would report that they had records for twenty thousand years, which must needs be a very great untruth, unless we will qualify it, expounding their years, not of the revolution of the sun, but of the moon.

Abbott.

It hath so pleased God to provide for all living creatures, wherewith he hath filled the world, that such inconveniences, as we contemplate afar off, are found, by trial and the witness of men's travels, to be so qualified, as there is no portion of the earth made in vain.

Raleigh, Hist. of the World.

So happy 'tis you move in such a sphere,
As your high majesty with awful fear
In human breasts might qualify that fire,
Which kindled by those eyes had flamed higher.

Waller.

Children should be early instructed in the true estimate of things, by opposing the good to the evil, and compensating or qualifying one thing with another.

L'Estrange.

My proposition I have qualified with the word, often; thereby making allowance for those cases, wherein men of excellent minds may, by a long practice of virtue, have rendered even the heights and rigours of it delightful.

Atterbury.

5. To ease; to assuage.

He balms and herbs thereby apply'd,
And evermore with mighty spells them charm'd,
That in short space he has them qualified,
And him restor'd to health that would have dy'd.

Spenser.

6. To modify; to regulate.

It hath no larinx or throttle to qualify the sound.

Brown.

QUALIFIED.* adj. [from quality.] Disposed with regard to the passions.

Here Episcopius took occasion to clear himself of that imputation lately fastened upon him, that he had abused the delegates, in giving them a counterfeit copy of his speech; protesting he was not so ill qualified, as that in so great a matter, and that before God and so grave a congregation, he would deal doubly and dishonestly.

Hales, Lett. from the Synod of Dort, (1618), p. 36.

QUALITY. n. s. [qualitas, Lat. qualité, Fr.]

1. Nature relatively considered.

These being of a far other nature and quality, are not so strictly or everlastingly commanded in Scripture.

Hooker.

Other creatures have not judgement to examine the quality of that which is done by them, and therefore in that they do, they neither can accuse nor approve themselves.

Hooker.

Since the event of an action usually follows the nature or quality of it, and the quality follows the rule directing it, it concerns a man, in the framing of his actions, not to be deceived in the rule.

South.

The power to produce any idea in our mind, I call quality of the subject wherein that power is.

Locke.

2. Property; accidental adjunct.

In the division of the kingdom, it appears not which of the dukes he values most; for qualities are so weighed, that curiosity in neither can make choice of either's moiety.

Shakespeare.

No sensible qualities, as light and colour, heat and sound, can be subsistent in the bodies themselves, absolutely considered, without a relation to our eyes and ears, and other organs of sense: these qualities are only the effects of our sensation, which arise from the different motions upon our nerves from objects without, according to their various modification and position.

Bentley.

3. Particular efficacy.

O mickle is the powerful grace, that lies
In plants, herbs, stones, and their true qualities.

Shakespeare.

4. Disposition; temper.

To-night we'll wander through the streets, and note
The qualities of people.

Shaks. Ant. and Cleop.

5. Virtue or vice.

One doubt remains, said I, the dames in green,
What were their qualities, and who their queen?

Dryden.

6. Accomplishment; qualification.

He had those qualities of horsemanship, dancing, and fencing, which accompany a good breeding.

Clarendon.

7. Character.

The attorney of the dutchy of Lancaster takes of both qualities, partly of a judge in that court, and partly of an attorney-general.

Bacon, Adv. to Villiers.

We, who are hearers, may be allowed some opportunities in the quality of standers-by.

Swift.

8. Comparative or relative rank.

It is with the clergy, if their persons be respected, even as it is with other men; their quality many times far beneath that which the dignity of their place requireth.

Hooker.

We lived most joyful, obtaining acquaintance with many of the city, not of the meanest quality.

Bacon.

The masters of these horses may be admitted to dine with the lord lieutenant: this is to be done, what quality soever the persons are of.

Temple.

9. Rank; superiority of birth or station.

Let him be so entertained, as suits with gentlemen of your knowing to a stranger of his quality.

Shakespeare, Cymb.

10. Persons of high rank. Collectively.

I shall appear at the masquerade dressed up in my feathers, that the quality may see how pretty they will look in their travelling habits.

Addison, Guardian.

Of all the servile herd, the worst is he,
That in proud dullness joins with quality.
A constant critick at the great man's board,
To fetch and carry nonsense for my lord.

Popc.

To quality belongs the highest place,
My lord comes forward; forward let him come!
Ye vulgar! at your peril give him room.

Young.

QUALM. n. s. [q̄ealm, Saxon, a sudden stroke of death.] A sudden fit of sickness; a sudden seizure of sickly languor.

Some sudden qualm bath struck me to the heart,
And dimm'd mine eyes, that I can read no further.

Shakespeare.

Compar'd to these storms, death is but a qualm,
Hell somewhat lightsome, the Bermudas calm.

Donne.

I find a cold qualm come over my heart, that I faint, I can speak no longer.

Howell.

All maladies

Of ghastly spasm, or racking torture, qualms
Of heart-sick agony.

Milton, P. L.

For who without a qualm, bath ever look'd
On holy garbage, though by Homer cook'd?

Roscommon.

They have a sickly uneasiness upon them, shifting and changing from one error, and from one qualm to another, hankering after novelties.

L'Estrange.

Thy mother well deserves that short delight,
The nauseous qualms of ten long months and travail to requite.

Dryden, Virg.

When he hath stretched his vessels with wine to their utmost capacity, and is grown weary and sick, and feels those qualms and disturbances that usually attend such excesses, he resolves, that he will hereafter contain himself within the bounds of sobriety.

Calamy.

The qualms or ruptures of your blood
Rise in proportion to your food.

Prior.

QUALMISH. adj. [from qualm.] Seized with sickly languor.

I am qualmish at the smell of leek.

Shakespeare.

You drop into the place,

Careless and qualmish with a yawning face.

Dryden.

QUANDARY.† n. s. [qu'en dirai je, Fr. Skinner.] A doubt; a difficulty; an uncertainty. A low word.

I leave you to judge into what a quandary—
Pharicles was brought. Greene, Mamillia, (1583.)
Much I fear, forsaking of my diet
Will bring me presently to that quandary,
I shall bid all adieu.

Bacon and Fl. Kn. Burn. Pestle.

TO QUANDA'RY.* v. a. [from the noun.]

To bring into a difficulty.

Methinks I am quandary'd, like one going with a party to discover the enemy's camp, but had lost his guide upon the mountains.

Owey, Soldier's Fortune.

QUANTITATIVE.* adj. [from quantity.] Estimable according to quantity.

This quantitative adultery, by such patching and piecing of the body, makes far more gross alterations and substantial changes of nature.

Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 44.

QUANTITIVE. adj. [quantitivus, Lat.] Estimable according to quantity.

This explication of rarity and density, by the composition of substance with quantity, may give little satisfaction to such who are apt to conceive therein no other composition or resolution, but such as our senses shew us, in compounding and dividing bodies according to quantitative parts.

Digby.

QUANTITY. n. s. [quantité, Fr. quantitas, Lat.]

1. That property of any thing which may be increased or diminished.

Quantity is what may be increased or diminished.

Cheyne.

2. Any indeterminate weight or measure : as, the metals were in different quantities.

3. Bulk or weight.

Unskill'd in heliobore, if thou should'st try
To mix it, and mistake the quantity,
The rules of physick would against thee cry.

Dryden.

4. A portion; a part.

If I were saw'd into quantities, I should make four dozen of such bearded hermits staves as master Shallow.

Shakespeare.

5. A large portion. This is not regular.

The warm antiscorbatic plants, taken in quantities, will occasion stinking breath, and corrupt the blood.

Arbutnot.

6. The measure of time in pronouncing a syllable.

So varying still their moods, observing yet in all
Their quantities, their rests, their censures metrical.

Drayton.

The easy pronunciation of a mute before a liquid does not necessarily make the preceding vowel, by position, long in quantity; as patrem.

Holder, Elem. of Speech.

QUANTUM. n. s. [Latin.] The quantity; the amount.

The quantum of presbyterian merit, during the reign of that ill-advised prince, will easily be computed.

Swift.

To QUAP.* See To QUOB.

QUAR.* See QUARRE.

QUARANTAIN.† n. s. [quarantain, Fr.
QUARANTINE. } from the Lat. quaranta,
Lent, or the term of forty days.]
See CARENTANE.

1. The space of forty days, being the time which a ship, suspected of infection, is obliged to forbear intercourse or commerce.

Pass your quarantine among some of the churches round this town, where you may learn to speak before you venture to expose your parts in a city congregation.

Swift.

2. [In law.] A benefit allowed by the law of England to the widow of a man dying seized of land, whereby she may challenge to continue in his capital messuage, or chief mansion-house, (so it be not a castle,) by the space of forty days after his decease.

Cowel.

The space of 40 days has had with us divers applications; as, the assise of Freshfore in cities and boroughs; and the widow's quarantine, which seems to have had beginning either of a deliberative time given to her, to think of her convenience in taking letters of administration, as in another country the reason of the like is given; or else from the 40 days in the esseoin of child-birth, allowed by the Norman customs.

Selden, on Drayton's Polyolb. S. 17.

QUARRE.† n. s. A quarry. Quar is the common term for a quarry in Gloucestershire. Grose. And so in Jennings's West Country Words.

Behold our diamonds here, as in the quarrs they stand.

Drayton.

The very agate

Of state and policy, cut from the quar

Of Machiavel.

B. Jonson, Magn. Lady.

QUARREL.† n. s. [querelle, Fr.]

1. A breach of concord.

You and I may engage in this question, as far as either of us shall think profitable, without any the least beginning of a quarrel, and then that will competently be removed from such as of which you cannot hope to see an end.

Hammond.

2. A brawl; a petty fight; a scuffle.

If I can fasten but one cup upon him,
With that which he hath drunk to-night already,
He'll be as full of quarrel and offence,
As my young mistress' dog.

Shaks. Othello.

3. A dispute; a contest.

The part, which in this present quarrel striveth against the current and stream of laws, was a long while nothing feared.

Hooker, Dedication.

It were a matter of more trouble, than necessity, to repeat in this quarrel what has been alleged by the worthies of our church.

Holyday.

As if earth too narrow were for fate,
On open seas their quarrels they debate;
In hollow world they floating armies bear,
And force imprison'd winds to bring 'em near.

Dryden.

4. A cause of debate.

I could not die any where so contented as in the king's company; his cause being just, and his quarrel honourable.

Shakespeare, Hen. V.

If not in service of our God we fought,
In meaner quarrel if this sword were shaken,
Well might thou gather in the gentle thought,
So fair a princess should not be forsaken.

Fairfax.

5. Something that gives a right to mischief, reprisal or action.

He thought he had a good quarrel to attack him.

Holinshed.

Wives are young men's mistresses, companions for middle age, and old men's nurses; so a man may have a quarrel to marry when he will.

Bacon, Ess.

6. Objection; ill-will.

Herodias had a quarrel against him, and would have killed him, but she could not.

St. Mark, vi. 19.

We are apt to pick quarrels with the world for every little foolery.

L'Estrange.

I have no quarrel to the practice; it may be a diverting way.

Felton on the Classics.

7. In Shakspeare, it seems to signify any one peevish or malicious.

Better

She ne'er had known pomp, though it be temporal;

Yet if that quarrel, fortune, do divorce
It from the bearer, 'tis a suff'rance panging

As soul and body's sev'ring.

Shaks. Hen. VIII.

8. [Quarrel, old French; quadrella, Ital. quarrellus, quadrillus, low Lat. from quadrum.] An arrow with a square head.

It is reported by William Brito, that the arcubalista or arbolist was first shewed to the French by our king Richard I. who was shortly after slain by a quarrel thereof.

Camden.

Twang'd the string, outflow the quarrel long.

Fairfax.

9. A square of glass. [quadrum, Lat. See also the preceding etymon.]

Sherwood.

10. The instrument with which a square or pane of glass is cut; the glazier's diamond. [from the same root.]

The glazier's instrument is a diamond, usually cut into such a square form as the supposed diamonds on the French and English cards, in the former of which it is still properly called carreau, from its original; the square iron head of the arrow used for the cross bow. In English it was called a quarrel, and hence the glazier's diamond and the pane of glass have received their names of square and quarrel.

Douce, Illustr. of Shakspeare, i. 181.

To QUARREL. v. n. [quereller, Fr.]

1. To debate; to scuffle; to squabble.

I love the sport well, but I shall as soon quarrel at it as any man.

Shakespeare.

Your words have taken such pains, as if they labour'd

To bring manslaughter into form, set quarrelling
Upon the head of valour.

Shakespeare, Timon.

Beasts called sociable, quarrel in hunger and lust; and the bull and ram appear then as much in fury and war, as the lion and the bear.

Temple, Miscell.

2. To fall into variance.

Our discontented counties do revolt;

Our people quarrel with obedience.

Shakespeare, K. John.

3. To fight; to combat.

When once the Persian king was put to flight,
The weary Macedons refus'd to fight;
Themselves their own mortality confess'd,
And left the son of Jove to quarrel for the rest.

Dryden.

4. To find fault; to pick objections.

To admit the thing, and quarrel about the name,
is to make ourselves ridiculous.

Bra mhall against Hobbes.

They find out miscarriages wherever they are,
and forge them often where they are not; they quarrel first with the officers, and then with the prince and state.

Temple.

In a poem elegantly writ,

I will not quarrel with a slight mistake.

Roscommon.

I quarrel not with the word, because used by Ovid.

Dryden.

5. To disagree; to have contrary principles.

Some things arise of strange and quarrelling kind,
The fore part lion and a snake behind.

Cowley.

To QUARREL.* v. a. To quarrel with.
Harsh, and not in use.

That they would say : and how that I had quarrel'd

My brother purposely, thereby to find
An apt pretext to banish them my house.

B. Jonson, Every Man in his Humour.

QUARRELLER.† n. s. [from quarrel.] One who quarrels.

Mockers, murmurers, quarrellers, and proud speakers.

Bale, Yet a Course, (1643), fol. 89.
Besides that he's a fool, he's a great quarreller.

Shakespeare, Tw. Night.

To speak evil of no man, to be no quarreller,
but gentle, showing all meekness unto all men.

Barrow, vol. i. S. 29.

QUARRELLING.* n. s. [from quarrel.]
Breach of concord; dispute; objection;
disagreement.

Wine, drunken with excess, maketh bitterness of the mind, with brawling and quarrelling.

Eccles. xxxi. 29.

In these quarrellings of some severer spirits against all auxiliary beauty, and helps of hand-someness in women, I observe that commonly what they want in force of arguments, rational or religious, they make up in clamour and confidence.

Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 65.

For divorce, a power to break that bond would too much encourage married persons in the little quarrellings that may rise between them.

Burnet, Life of Rochester, p. 113.

QUARRELOUS.† adj. [querelleux, Fr.]
Petulant; easily provoked to enmity;
quarrelsome.

Ready in gibes, quick answered, saucy, and
As quarrelous as the weazel.

Shakespeare, Cymb.
Pursepride is quarrelous, domineering over the humble neighbourhood, and raising quarrels out of trifles.

B. Hall, Sol. Th. Supern. § 4.

QUARRELSOME. adj. [from quarrel.]
Inclined to brawls; easily irritated; irascible; choleric; petulant.

Choleric and quarrelsome persons will engage one into their quarrels.

Bacon, Ess.

There needs no more to the setting of the world in a flame, than a quarrelsome plaintiff and defendant.

L'Estrange.

QUARRELSOMELY. adv. [from quarrelsome.]

In a quarrelsome manner; petulantly; cholericly.

QUARRELSOMENESS.† n. s. [from quarrel-some.] Cholericness; petulance.

To curb the lawless insolence of some, the seditious machinations of others; the extortious cruelties of some, the corrupt wresting of justice in others; the giddiness of some, others' quarrelsomeness.

Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 77.

If he perceive in company any discourse tending to ill, either by the wickedness or quarrelsomeness thereof, he either prevents it judiciously, or breaks it off seasonably by some diversion.

Herbert, Country Parson, ch. 18.

QUARRY.† n. s. [quarré, Fr.]

1. A square.

To take down a quarry of glass to scowre, soder, band, and to set it up again, is three halfpence a foot.

Mortimer.

2. [Quarreau, quadreau, Fr.] An arrow with a square head.

The shafts and quarries from their engines fly
As thick as falling drops in April showers.

Fairfax.

3. [From querir, to seek, Fr. Skinner; from carry, Kennet.] Game flown at by a hawk: perhaps, any thing chased; prey.

His ladie, which this outrage saw,
Whilst they together for the quarry strove,
Into the covert did herselfe withdraw.

Spenser, F. Q.

She dwells among the rocks, on every side
With broken mountains strongly fortify'd;
From thence whatever can be seen surveys,
And stooping, on the slaughter'd quarry preys.

Sandys.

So scented the grim feature, and up turn'd
His nostrils wide into the murky air,
Sagacious of his quarry.

Milton, P. L.

They their guns discharge;
This heard some ships of ours, though out of view,
And swift as eagles to the quarry fly.

Waller.

An hollow crystal pyramid he takes,
In firmamental waters dipt above,

Of it a broad extinguisher he makes,
And hoods the flames that to their quarry strove.

Dryden.

No toil, no hardship can restrain
Ambitious man inur'd to pain;
The more confin'd, the more he tries,
And at forbidden quarries flies.

Dryden.

Ere now the god his arrows had not try'd,
But on the trembling deer or mountain goat,
At this new quarry he prepares to shoot.

Dryden.

Let reason then at her own quarry fly,
But how can finite grasp infinity?

Dryden.

4. A heap of game killed. So it seems to mean in the following passages.

Your wife and babes
Savagely murdered; to relate the manner,
Were, on the quarry of these murdered deer,
To add the death of you.

Shaks. Macbeth.

Let me use my sword, I'd make a quarry
With thousands of these quarter'd slaves, as high
As I could pick my lance.

Shakspeare, Coriol.

5. [Quarriere, quarrel, Fr. from carrig, Irish, a stone, Lye; craigg, Erse, a rock.] A stone mine; a place where they dig stones.

The same is said of stone out of the quarry, to make it more durable.

Pyramids and towers
From diamond quarries hewn, and rocks of gold.

Milton, P. L.

Here though grief my feeble hands up lock,
Yet on the soften'd quarry would I score
My plaining verse as lively as before.

Milton, Ode Pass.

An hard and unrelenting she,
As the new-crusted Niobe;

VOL. III.

Or, what doth more of statue carry,
A nun of the Platonic quarry.

Cleaveland.

He like Amphion makes those quarries leap
Into fair figures from a confus'd heap.

Waller.

Could necessity infallibly produce quarries of stone, which are the materials of all magnificent structures.

More.

For them alone the heav'ns had kindly heat
In eastern quarries, ripening precious dew.

Dryden.

As long as the next coal-pit, quarry, or chalk-pit will give abundant attestation to what I write, to these I may very safely appeal.

Woodward, Nat. Hist.

To QUARRY. v. n. [from the noun.] To prey upon. A low word not in use.

With cares and horrors at his heart, like the vulture that is day and night quarrying upon Prometheus's liver.

L'Estrange.

it hath served me instead of a quart pot to drink in.

Shakspeare.

You have made an order, that ale should be sold at three halfpence a quart.

Swift, Miscell.

3. [Quarte, Fr.] The vessel in which strong drink is commonly retailed.

You'd rail upon the hostess of the house,
And say you would present her at the leet,
Because she bought stone jugs and no seal'd quarts.

Shakspeare.

4. A sequence of four cards at the game of piquet.

QUARTAN.† n. s. [quartaine, old French; febris quartana, Lat.] The fourth day ague.

It were an uncomfortable receipt for a quartan ague, to lay the fourth book of Homer's Iliads under one's head.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

Call her the metaphysics of her sex,
And say she tortures wits, as quartans vex Physicians.

Cleaveland.

Among these, quartans and tertians of a long continuance most menace this symptom.

Harvey on Consumptions.

A look so pale no quartan ever gave,
Thy dwindled legs seem crawling to the grave.

Dryden.

QUARTATION. n. s. [from quartus, Lat.] A chymical operation.

In quartation, which refiners employ to purify gold, although three parts of silver be so exquisitely mingled by fusioa with a fourth part of gold, whence the operation is denominated, that the resulting mass acquires several new qualities; yet, if you cast this mixture into aqua fortis, the silver will be dissolved in the menstruum, and the gold like a dark powder will fall to the bottom.

Boyle.

QUARTER. n. s. [quart, quartier, Fr.]

1. A fourth part.

It is an accustomed action with her, to seem thus washing her hands; I have known her continue in this a quarter of an hour.

QUEERNESS. n. s. [from querer.] Oddness; particularity.

QUEST.† n. s. [from questus, Lat. Skinner. Dr. Johnson. — Questus is complaint. Serenius says that in the Icel. Edda a bird, which he conjectures to be of the pigeon kind, is called guisa. In this country quice is a wood pigeon; as in Gloucestershire, according to Grose. In some places it is called quist; and in Cheshire, Mr. Wilbraham says, queeze.] A ringdove; a kind of wild pigeon.

QUENT.* pret. and part. of to quench: of frequent occurrence in our old poets.

In water made it not be dreinte,
Where as it cometh the fire is quent.

Gower, Conf. Am. B. 5.

That other fire was quainte, and all agon;
And as it quainte, it made a whistling.

Chaucer, Kn. Tale.

All breathless, weary, faint
Him spying, with fresh onset he assayed;
And kindling new his courage seeming quent,
Strooke him so hugely, that through great constraint,
He made him stoup perforce unto his knee.

Spenser, F. Q. ii. v. 11.

To QUELL.† v. a. [cpellan, Saxon.] To crush; to subdue; originally, to kill.

What avails

Valour or strength, though matchless, quell'd with pain,
Which all subdues, and makes remiss the hands

Compassion quell'd

His best of man, and gave him up to tears
A space; till firmer thoughts restrain'd excess.

Milton, P. L.

This quell'd her pride, but other doubts remain'd
That once disdain'd, she might be disdain'd.

Dryden.

He is the guardian of the publick quiet, appointed to restrain violence, to quell seditions and tumults, and to preserve that peace which preserves the world.

Atterbury.

What hope to quench, where each thing blows the fire. Sidney.

This is the way to kindle, not to quench. Shaks.

A little fire is quickly trodden out,

Which, being suffer'd, rivers cannot quench. Shakespeare.

The fire had power in the water, forgetting his own virtue; and the water forgot his own quenching nature. Wisd. xix. 20.

Milk quencheth wild-fire better than water, because it entereth better. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Subdu'd in fire the stubborn metal lies;

One draws and blows reciprocating air,

Others to quench the hissing mass prepare. Dryd.

You have already quench'd sedition's brand,

And zeal, which burnt it, only warms the land. Dryden.

When your work is forged, do not quench it in water to cool it, but throw it down upon the floor or hearth to cool of itself, for the quenching of it in water will harden it. Mozon, Mech. Es.

2. To still any passion or commotion; to repress any motion of the mind good or bad.

But if all aim but this be levell'd false,
The supposition of the lady's death

Will quench the wonder of her infamy. Shaks.

Beseech God, that he will inflame thy heart with this heavenly fire of devotion; and when thou hast obtained it, beware that thou neither quench it by any filthy sin, or let it go out again for want of stirring it up and employing it. Wh. Duty of Man.

3. To allay thirst.

Every draught to him, that has quenched his thirst, is but a further quenching of nature, a provision for rheum and diseases, a drowning of the spirits. South.

4. To destroy.

When death's form appears, she feareth not
An utter quenching or extinguishing;

She would be glad to meet with such a lot,

That so she might all future ill prevent. Davies.

Covered with skin and hair keeps it warm, being naturally very cold, and also to quench and dissipate the force of any stroke, and retund the edge of any weapon. Ray.

To QUENCH.† v. n. To cool; to grow cool.

QUÉRRY.† n. s. [for equerry; which see.] A groom belonging to a prince, or one conversant in the king's stables, and having the charge of his horses; also the stable of a prince. Bailey.

Francesco del Campo, one of the archduke's querries, told us, not without importunate devotion, that in that fatal field at Newport, his vow to their Virgin help him to swim over a large water, when the oars of his arms had never before tried any waves. Bp. Hall, Epist. D. i. Ep. 6.

QUÉRULOUS. adj. [querulus, Latin.] Mourning; whining; habitually complaining.

Although they were a people by nature hard-hearted, querulous, wrathful, and impatient of rest and quietness, yet was there nothing of force to work the subversion of their state, till the time before mentioned was expired. Hooker.

The pressures of war have cowed their spirits, as may be gathered from the very accent of their words, which they prolate in a whining kind of querulous tone, as if still complaining and crest-fallen. Howell, Voc. Eor.

Though you give no countenance to the complaints of the querulous, yet curb the insolence of the injurious. Locke.

QUERULOUSLY. adv. [from querulous.] In a complaining manner.

His wounded ears complaints eternal fill,
As unoil'd hinges, querulously shrill. Young.

QUERULOUSNESS. n. s. [from querulous.] Habit or quality of complaining mournfully.

QUERY. n. s. [from quare, Lat.] A question; an enquiry to be resolved.

I shall conclude, with proposing only some queries, in order to a farther search to be made by others. Newton.

This shews the folly of this query, that might always be demanded, that would impiously and absurdly attempt to tie the arm of Omnipotence from doing any thing at all, because it can never do its utmost. Bentley.

TO QU'ERY. † v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To ask questions.

Three Cambridge sophs,
Each prompt to query, answer, and debate. Pope.

Gayton on D. Quiz. p. 97.

2. To doubt of.

QUEST. n. s. [queste, Fr.]

1. Search; act of seeking.

None but such as this bold ape unblest,
Can ever thrive in that unlucky quest. Spenser.

If lusty love should go in quest of beauty,
Where should he find it fairer than in Blanch? Shakspeare

Fair silver-buskin'd nymphs,
I know this quest of yours and free intent
Was all in honour and devotion meant,
To the great mistress of your princely shrine. Milton, Arcades.

An aged man in rural weeds,
Following, as seem'd, the quest of some stray ewe. Milton, P. R.

To search with wandering quest a place foretold
Should be. Milton, P. L.

'Twould be not strange, should we find Paradise at this day where Adam left it; and I rather note this, because I see there are some so earnest in quest of it. Woodward.

There's not an African,
That traverses our vast Numidian deserts
In quest of prey, and lives upon his bow,
But better practises these boasted virtues. Addison, Cato.

We see them active and vigilant in quest of de-light. Spectator.

2. [For inquest.] An empannelled jury.

What's my offence?
Where is the evidence, that doth accuse me?
What lawful quest have given their verdict up Unto the frowning judge. Shaks. Rich. III.

3. Searchers. Collectively.

You have been hotly call'd for,
When, being not at your lodging to be found,
The senate sent above three several quests
To search you out. Shakspeare, Othello.

4. Enquiry; examination.

O place and greatness! millions of false eyes
Are stuck upon thee; volumes of report
Run with these false and most contrarious quests
Upon thy doings. Shakspeare, Meas. for Meas.

5. Request; desire; solicitation.

Gad not abroad at every quest and call
Of an untrained hope or passion. Herbert.

TO QUEST. † v. n. [quæter, Fr. from the noun.] To go in search.

This trick he used like a thief, that, going to steel and take partriches with a setting dogge, doth rate his dogge for questing, or going too neare, until he have laid his net over them, for fear the game should be sprung and the purpose defeated.

Proceed. against Garnet, &c. (1606.) S. ii. b.
Would he had quested first for me, and sprung them an hour ago! B. Jonson, Gips. Metamorph.

TO QUEST.* v. a. To search; to seek for.

He flies to Medenore, and thence to Odjes; but is quested after by Mahobet to Medenore.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 87.

QU'ESTANT. n. s. [from quester, French.] Seeker; endeavourer after.

See, that you come
Not to woo honour, but to wed it; when
The bravest questant shrinks, find what you seek,
That fame may cry you loud. Shakspeare.

QUEST'ION. n. s. [question, Fr. questio, Latin.]

1. Interrogatory; any thing enquired.

Because he that knoweth least is fittest to ask questions, it is more reason for the entertainment of the time, that ye ask me questions, than that I ask you. Bacon.

2. Enquiry; disquisition.

It is to be put to question, whether it be lawful for christian princes to make an invasive war simply for the propagation of the faith. Bacon, Holy War.

3. A dispute; a subject of debate.

There arose a question between some of John's disciples and the Jews about purifying. St. John, iii. 25.

4. Affair to be examined.

In points of honour to be try'd,
Suppose the question not your own. Swift.

How easy is it for a man to fill a book with quotations, as you have done, that can be content with any thing, however foreign to the question! Waterland.

5. Doubt; controversy; dispute.

This is not my writing,
Though I confess much like the character:
But out of question 'tis Maria's hand. Shakspeare.

'Tis time for him to shew himself, when his very being is called in question, and to come and judge the world, when men begin to doubt whether he made it. Tillotson.

The doubt of their being native impressions on the mind, is stronger against these moral principles than the other; not that it brings their truth at all in question. Locke.

Our own earth would be barren and desolate, without the benign influence of the solar rays, which without question is true of all the other planets. Bentley.

6. Judicial trial.

Whosoever be found guilty, the communion book hath deserved least to be called in question for this fault. Hooker.

7. Examination by torture.

Such a presumption is only sufficient to put the person to the rack or question, according to the civil law, and not bring him to condemnation. Ayliffe, Parergon.

8. State of being the subject of present enquiry.

If we being defendants do answer, that the ceremonies in question are godly, comely, decent, profitable for the church, their reply is childish and unorderly to say, that we demand the thing in question, and shew the poverty of our cause, the goodness whereof we are fain to beg that our adversaries may grant. Hooker.

If it would purchase six shillings and three-pence weighty money, he had proved the matter in question. Locke.

Nor are these assertions that dropped from their pens by chance, but delivered by them in places where they profess to state the points in question. Aterbury, Pref.

9. Endeavour; act of seeking. Not in use.

As it more concerns the Turk than Rhodes,
So may he with more facile question bear it;
For that it stands not in such warlike brace,
But altogether lacks the abilities
That Rhodes is dress'd in. Shakspeare.

TO QU'EST'ION. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To enquire.

Suddenly out of this delightful dream
The man awoke, and would have question'd more;
But he would not endure the woful theme. Spenser.

He that questioneth much shall learn much,
and content much; but especially if he apply his questions to the skill of the persons whom he asketh. Bacon, Ess.

Unreasonable subtlety will still seem to be reasoning; and at least will question, when it cannot answer. Holiday.

2. To debate by interrogatories.

I pray you think you question with a Jew;
You may as well use question with the wolf,
Why he hath made the ewe bleat for the lamb. Shakspeare.

TO QU'EST'ION. v. a. [questionner, Fr.]

1. To examine one by questions.

Question your royal thoughts, make the case yours;
Be now the father, and propose a son;
Hear your own dignity so much profan'd;
And then imagine me taking your part,
And in your power so silencing your son. Shaks.

But hark you, Kate,
I must not have you henceforth question me,
Whither I go. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

This construction is not so undubitably to be received, as not at all to be questioned. Brown, Vulg. Err.

2. To doubt; to be uncertain of.

O impotent estate of human life!
Where fleeting joy does lasting doubt inspire,
And most we question what we most desire. Prior.

3. To have no confidence in; to mention as not to be trusted.

Be a design never so artificially laid, if it chanceth to be defeated by some cross accident, the man is then run down, his counsels derided, his prudence questioned, and his person despised. South, Sermon.

QU'ESTIONABLE. adj. [from question.]

1. Doubtful; disputable.

Your accustomed clemency will take in good worth, the offer of these my simple labours, bestowed for the necessary justification of laws heretofore made questionable, because not perfectly understood. Hooker, Dedic.

That persons drowned float, the ninth day when their gall breaketh, is a questionable determination, both in the time and cause. Brown, Vulg. Err.

It is questionable, whether the use of steel springs was known to those ancient times. Wilkins, Math. Mag.

It is questionable, whether Galen ever saw the dissection of a human body. Baker, Reflections on Learning.

2. Suspicious; liable to suspicion; liable to question.

Be thy intents wicked, or charitable,
Thou com'st in such a questionable shape,
That I will speak to thee. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

QU'ESTIONARY. adj. [from question.] Enquiring; asking questions.

I grow laconic even beyond laconicism; for sometimes I return only yes or no to questionary epistles of half a yard long. Pope to Swift.

QU'ESTIONABLENESS. n. s. [from question.]

The quality of being questionable.

QUESTIONER.† n. s. [from question.] An enquirer.

The curious questioner, the foolish answerer.

Abp. Crammer, Answ. to Bp. Gardiner, p. 73.

He told me before that people joined us, that he was a questioner, who, according to his description, is one who asks questions not with a design to receive information, but an affectation to shew his uneasiness for want of it.

Taiter, No. 41.

QUESTIONIST.* n. s. [from question.] A questioner; an enquirer.

The impudence of this hollow questionist.

Bp. Hall, Contempr. B. 4.

At his being a schoolboy, he was an early questionist, quietly inquisitive, why this was, and that was not, to be remembered.

Walton, Life of Hooker.

QUESTIONLESS. adv. [from question.] Certainly; without doubt; doubtless.

Questionless, hence it comes that many were mistaken.

Ralegh.

Questionless, duty moves not so much upon command as promise; now that which proposes the greatest and most suitable rewards to obedience, and the greatest punishments to disobedience, doubtless is the most likely to enforce the one and prevent the other.

South.

QUESTMAN.† } n. s. [quest, man, and QUESTMONGER.† } monger.] Starter of lawsuits or prosecutions; one having power to make legal enquiry.

Their principal working was upon penal laws, wherein they spared none, great nor small, but raked over all new and old statutes, having ever a rabble of promoters, questmongers, and leading jurors, at their command.

Bacon.

The churchwardens or questmen, and their assistants, shall mark, as well as the minister, whether all and every of the parishioners come so often every year to the holy communion, as the laws and our constitutions do require.

Const. and Canons Eccl. 28.

QUESTOR.* n. s. [questor, Lat.] An officer, among the Romans, who had the management of the publick treasure.

Are gone with him tow'r'd Dover.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

QUESTUARY. adj. [from questus, Lat.] Studios of profit.

Although lapidaries and questuary enquirers affirm it, yet the writers of minerals conceive the stone of this name to be a mineral concretion, not to be found in animals.

Brown.

QUESTUARY.* n. s. One employed to collect profits.

Gerson and Dominicus à Soto are ashamed of these prodigious indulgences, and suppose that the pope's questuaries did procure them.

Bp. Taylor, Diss. from Popery, ch. 2. § 3.

QUEUE.* See CUE.

QUIB. n. s. A sarcasm; a bitter taunt. Ainsworth. The same perhaps with quip.

QUIBBLE.† n. s. [from quidlibet, Lat.] Dr. Johnson. — Rather from quip.] A slight cavil; a low conceit depending on the sound of words; a sort of pun.

This may be of great use to immortalize puns and quibbles, and to let posterity see their forefathers were blockheads.

Quirks or quibbles have no place in the search after truth.

Having once fully answered your quibble, you will not, I hope, expect that I should do it again and again.

Waterland.

TO QUIBBLE. v. n. [from the noun.] To pun; to play on the sound of words.

The first service was neat tongues sliced, which the philosophers took occasion to discourse and quibble upon in a grave formal way.

L'Estrange.

QUIBBLER.† n. s. [from quibble.] A punster; a low caviller.

They are either buffoons and quibblers, or an ambition of approving themselves the broachers and maintainers of strange paradoxes has crazed their intellects.

Annot. on Glanville, &c. (1682), p. 248.

QUICE.* See QUEST.

TO QUICH.* v. n. [epiccan, Sax. to quicken. See also the etymology of QUICK.] Dr. Johnson has given quack instead of this word, in a corrupted example from Bacon; which has not escaped the notice of Mr. Malone, who says that, in the edition of Bacon's

Essays printed in 1632, the word is quacking: but it is certainly quacking.]

To stir; to move. Our ancient lexicography has the word with this definition: as in the Pr. Parv.

Underneath her feet, there as she state,
An huge great lyon lay [that mote appeal
An hardy courage] like captived thrall
With a strong yron chain and collar bound,
That once he could not move, nor quich at all.

Spenser, F. Q. v. ix. 33.

The lads of Sparta, of ancient time, were wont to be scourged upon the altar of Diana, without so much as quacking. Bacon, Ess. (ed. 1632), p. 233.

Those things from me that you shall hear,
Conceiving much the quicker.

Drayton, Nymphid.

They gave those complex ideas, that the things they were continually to give and receive information about, might be the easier and quicker understood.

Locke.

This is done with little notice, if we consider how very quik the actions of the mind are performed, requiring not time, but many of them crowded into an instant.

Locke.

QUICK.† n. s.

1. A live animal. Not in use.

Peeping close into the thick,
Might see the moving of some quick,
Whose shape appeared not;

But were it fairy, fiend, or snake,
My courage earned it to wake,
And manful throat shot.

Spenser, Shep. Cal.

2. The living flesh; sensible parts.

If Stanley held, that a son of king Edward had still the better right, it was to teach all England to say as much; and therefore that speech touched the quik.

Bacon.

Seiz'd with sudden smart,
Stung to the quik, he felt it at his heart.

Dryden.

The thoughts of this disgraceful composition so touches me to the quik, that I cannot sleep.

Arbutnot, J. Bull.

Scarifying gangrenes, by several incisions down to the quik, is almost universal, and with reason, since it not only discharges a pernicious ichor, but makes way for topical applications.

Sharp, Surgery.

TO QUICKEN. v. a. [epiccan, Sax.]

1. To make alive.

All they that go down into the dust, shall kneel before him; and no man hath *quicken*ed his own soul.

Ps. xxii. 30.

This my mean task would be
As heavy to me, as 'tis odious; but
The mistress which I serve, *quicken*s what's dead,
And makes my labours pleasures.

Shaks. Tempest.

Fair soul, since to the fairest body join'd
You gave such lively life, such *quicken*ing power
And influence of such celestial kind,
As keeps it still in youth's immortal flower.

Davies.

He throws
His influence round, and kindles as he goes;

Hence flocks and herds, and men, and beasts and fowls

With breath are quicken'd, and attract their souls.
Dryden.

2. To hasten; to accelerate.

You may sooner by imagination quicken or slack a motion, than raise or cease it; as it is easier to make a dog go slower, than to make him stand still.
Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Others were appointed to consider of penal laws and proclamations in force, and to quicken the execution of the most principal.
Hayward.

Though any commodity should shift hands never so fast, yet, if they did not cease to be any longer traffick, this would not at all make or quicken their vent.
Locke.

3. To sharpen; to actuate; to excite.

Though my senses were astonished, my mind forced them to quicken themselves; because I had learnt of him, how little favour he is wont to shew in any matter of advantage.
Sidney.

It was like a fruitful garden without an hedge, that quickens the appetite to enjoy so tempting a prize.
South.

They endeavour by brandy to quicken their taste already extinguished.
Tatler.

An argument of great force to quicken them in the improvement of those advantages to which the mercy of God had called them by the gospel.

QUICKSIGHTEDNESS. n. s. [from quick-sighted.] Sharpness of sight.

The ignorance that is in us no more hinders the knowledge that is in others, than the blindness of a mole is an argument against the quicksightedness of an eagle. Locke.

QUICKSILVER.† n. s. [quick and silver; argentum vivum, Latin.] The metal called mercury; and in its native state quicksilver; of a white colour, similar to silver, shining, and found in small globules among ores, stones, and clay; fluid at all temperatures above 39°. At about 650° of Fahrenheit, it boils. The principal mines are said to be in Bohemia, Germany, and Spain; and it is found in India and Peru.

Cinnabar maketh a beautiful purple like unto a red rose; the best was wont to be made in Libia of brimstone and quicksilver burnt. Peachment on Drawing.

Pleasures are few, and fewer we enjoy;
Pleasure, like quicksilver, is bright and coy;
We strive to grasp it with our utmost skill,
Still it eludes us, and it glitters still:
If seiz'd, at last, compute your mighty gains,
What is it, but rank poison in your veins? Young.

QUICKSILVERED.† adj. [from quicksilver.]

1. Overlaid with quicksilver.

Metal is more difficult to be polished than glass, and is afterwards very apt to be spoiled by tarnishing, and reflects not so much light as glass quicksilvered over does: I would propound to use instead of the metal a glass ground concave on the foreside, and as much convex on the backside, and quicksilvered over on the convex side. Newton, Opt.

2. Partaking of the nature of quicksilver.

Those nimble and quicksilvered brains, which itch after change.

Bale on the Rev. (1550.) P. II. a. v. b.

QUIESCENCE. n. s. [from quiesco, Lat.] Rest; repose.

Whether the earth move or rest, I undertake not to determine: my work is to prove, that the common inducement to the belief of its quiescence, the testimony of sense, is weak and frivolous.

Glanville, Scepis.

QUIESCENT. adj. [quiescens, Latin.] Resting; not being in motion; not movent; lying at repose.

Though the earth move, its motion must needs be as insensible as if it were quiescent.

Glanville, Scepis.

The right side, from whence the motion of the body beginneth, is the active or moving side; but the sinister is the weaker or more quiescent side.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

Sight takes in at a greater distance and more variety at once, comprehending also quiescent objects, which hearing does not.

Holder, Elem. of Speech.

If it be in some part movent, and in some part quiescent, it must needs be a curve line, and so no radius.

Grew.

Pression or motion cannot be propagated in a fluid in right lines, beyond an obstacle which stops part of the motion, but will bend and spread every way into the quiescent medium, which lies beyond the obstacle.

Newton, Opt.

QUIET. adj. [quiet, Fr. quietus, Latin.]

1. Still; free from disturbance.

Breaking off the end for want of breath,
And sliding soft as down to sleep her laid,
She ended all her woe in quiet death.

Spenser.

This life is best,
If quiet life is best; sweeter to you,
That have a sharper known.

Shakspeare, Cymb.

That son, who on the quiet state of man
Such trouble brought.

Milton, P. L.

And what may quiet us in a death so noble.

Milton, S. A.

The lowest degree of faith, that can quiet the soul of man, is a firm conviction that God is placable.

Forbes.

2. To still.

Putting together the ideas of moving or quieting corporeal motion, joined to substance, we have the idea of an immaterial spirit.

Locke.

QUIETER.† n. s. [from quiet.] The person or thing that quiets.

Kersey.

QUIETISM.† n. s. [from quiet.] The sentiments of the religious sect, called quietists, which made a great noise towards the close of the seventeenth century; and of which Molinos, a Spanish priest, is reputed the founder.

What is called by the poets apathy or dispassion, by the sceptics indisturbance, by the Molinists quietism, by common men peace of conscience, seems all to mean but great tranquillity of mind.

Temple.

The pretences of quietism, and of a more sublime and abstracted devotion, have sometimes been employed to very gross and carnal purposes.

Coventry, Phil. to Hyd. Conv. I.

The enthusiasm of puritanical devotion partook of the mystic visions of monastic quietism.

Warton, Notes on Milton's Odes.

QUIETIST.* n. s. One of the mystical sect which has maintained that religion consists in the internal rest and recollection of the mind.

Nor is enthusiasm, or fanaticism, a stranger to popery; of which the quietists, and others of the mystick way, can give abundant testimony.

Trapp, Popery truly Stated, P. iii.

Ye quietists, in homage to the skies!
Serene, of soft address, who mildly make
An unobtrusive tender of your hearts,
Abhorring violence! —

Think you my song too turbulent?

Young, Night Th. 4.

QUIETLY. adv. [from quiet.]

Let no man for his own poverty become more oppressing in his bargain, but quietly, modestly, and patiently recommend his estate to God, and leave the success to him.

Bp. Taylor.

2. Peaceably; without offence.

Although the rebels have behaved themselves quietly and modestly by the way as they went; yet they doubted that would but make them more hungry to fall upon the spoil in the end.

Bacon, Hen. VII.

3. At rest; without agitation.

QUIETNESS. n. s. [from quiet.]

1. Coolness of temper.

This cruel quietness neither returning to mislike nor proceeding to favour; gracious, but gracious still after one manner.

Sidney.

That which we move for our better instruction sake, turneth into anger and choler in them; they grow altogether out of quietness with it; they answer fumingly.

Hooker.

2. Peace; tranquillity,

Stop effusion of our christian blood,
And 'stablish quietness on ev'ry side.

Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

What miseries have both nations avoided, and what quietness and security attained, by their peaceable union!

Hayward.

3. Stillness; calmness.

If we compare the quietness and chastity of the Bolognese pencil to the bustle and tumult that fills every part of a Venetian picture, without the least attempt to interest the passions, their boasted art will appear a mere struggle without effect.

Reynolds.

QUIETSOME. adj. [from quiet.] Calm; still; undisturbed. Not in use.

Let the night be calm and quietsome,
Without tempestuous storms or sad affray.

Spenser.

QUIETUDE.† n. s. [quietude, Fr. from quiet.] Rest; repose; tranquillity. Not in common use.

From the equal distribution of the phlegmatick humour, the proper alloy of fervent blood, will flow a future quietude and serenity in the affections.

Birds have three other hard substances proper to them; the bill, which is of a like matter with the teeth, the shell of the egg, and their quills.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

2. The instrument of writing.

I will only touch the duke's own deportment in that island, the proper subject of my quill.

Wotton, D. of Buckingham.

Those lives they fail'd to rescue by their skill,
Their muse would make immortal with her quill.

Garth.

From him whose quills stand quiver'd at his ear,
To him that notches sticks at Westminster.

Pope.

3. Prick or dart of a porcupine.

Near these was the black prince of Monomotapa, by whose side was seen the quill-darting porcupine.

Arbuthnot and Pope.

4. Reed on which weavers wind their threads.

The presumptuous damsel rashly dar'd
The goddess' self to challenge to the field,
And to compare with her in curious skill,
Of works with loom, with needle, and with quill.

Spenser.

5. The instrument with which musicians strike their strings.

His flying fingers and harmonious quill
Strike seven distinguish'd notes, and seven at once they fill.

Dryden, Æn.

TO QUILL.* v. a. To plait; to form in plaits, or folds, like quills.

What they called his cravat, was a little piece of white linen quilled with great exactness.

Addison, Tatler, No. 257.

His cravat seemed quilled into a ruff.

Goldsmith, Ess. 19.

QUILLET. n. s. [quidlibet, Lat. Dr. Johnson.] — Warburton was of opinion, that quillet is the peculiar word applied to law-chicane, and that the original of it was probably this. In the French pleadings, every several allegation in the plaintiff's charge, and every distinct plea in the defendant's answer, began with the words qu'il est; whence was formed the word quillet, to signify a false charge, or an evasive answer. But, as Mr. Douce has observed, there is no such term in the French language; nor is it exclusively applicable to law-chicane, though generally so used by Shakespeare. It strictly means a subtilty, and seems to have originated among the schoolmen of the middle ages, by whom it was called a quidlibet. See Illustr. of Shakespeare, i. 231.] Subtilty; nicety; fraudulent distinction; petty cant.

Why may not that be the skull of a lawyer? where be his quiddits now? his quilletts? his cases? Shakespeare.

Let her leave her bobs, I have had too many of them, and her quilletts. Beaumont, and Fl. Tam. Tamed.

There are many unnecessary quilletts and quirks in grammar. Hales, Rem. p. 127.

A great soul weighs in the scale of reason, what it is to judge of, rather than dwell with too scrupulous a diligence upon little quilletts and niceties. Digby.

Play her with love-letters and billets, And bait them well for quirks and quilletts. Hudibras.

QUILT. n. s. [couette, Fr. kulcht, Dutch; culcita, culcita, Lat.] A cover made by stitching one cloth over another with some soft substance between them.

Quilts of roses and spices are nothing so helpful, as to take a cake of new bread, and bedew it with a little sack. Bacon.

In both tables, the beds were covered with magnificent quilts amongst the richer sort. Arbutnot on Coins.

She on the quilt sinks with becoming woe, Wrapt in a gown, for sickness and for show. Pope.

To QUILT. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To stitch one cloth upon another with something soft between them.

The sharp steel arriving forcibly On his horse neck before the quilted fell, Then from the head the body sundred quite. Spenser.

A bag quilted with bran is very good, but it drieth too much. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Entellus for the strife prepares, Stripp'd of his quilted coat, his body bares, Compos'd of mighty bone. Dryden, Æn.

A chair was ready, So quilted, that he lay at ease reclin'd. Dryden. Mayn't I quilt my rope? it galls my neck. Arbutnot.

2. To swallow. [perhaps corrupted from gullet.] A Gloucestershire word, according to Grose; and a common colloquial expression in other places.

1. The tree.

The quince tree is of a low stature; the branches are diffused and crooked; the flower and fruit is like that of the pear tree; but, however cultivated, the fruit is sour and astringent, and is covered with a kind of down: of this the species are six. Miller.

2. The fruit.

They call for dates and quinces in the pastry. Shakespeare.

A quince in token of fruitfulness, by the laws of Solon, was given to the brides of Athens upon the day of their marriage. Peacham on Drawing.

To QUINCH. v. n. [this word is the same with quich.] To stir.

That which I purpose, is — to bestow all my soldiers in such sort as I have done, that no part of all that realm shall be able to dare to quinch. Spenser on Ireland.

QUINCUNCIAL. adj. [from quincunx.] Having the form of a quincunx.

Of a pentagonal or quincuncial disposition, sir Thomas Brown produces several examples in his discourse about the quincunx. Ray on the Creation.

QUINCUNX. n. s. [Latin.]

Quincunx order is a plantation of trees, disposed originally in a square, consisting of five trees, one at each corner, and a fifth in the middle, which disposition, repeated again and again, forms a regular grove, wood, or wilderness; and, when viewed by an angle of the square or parallelogram, presents equal or parallel alleys.

Brown produces several examples in his discourse about the quincunx. Ray on the Creation.

He whose lightning pierc'd the Iberian lines, Now forms my quincunx, and now ranks my vines. Pope.

QUINTESSENCE. n. s. [quinta essentia, Lat.]

1. A fifth being.

From their gross matter she abstracts the forms; And draws a kind of quintessence from things. Davies.

The ethereal quintessence of heaven Flew upward, spirited with various forms, That roll'd orbicular, and turn'd to stars. Milton, P. L.

They made fire, air, earth, and water, to be the four elements, of which all earthly things were compounded, and supposed the heavens to be a quintessence or fifth sort of body distinct from all these. Watts, Logic.

2. An extract from any thing, containing all its virtues in a small quantity.

To me what is this quintessence of dust? man's delights not me, nor woman neither. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

Who can in memory, or wit, or will, Or air, or fire, or earth, or water find?

What alchymist can draw, with all his skill, The quintessence of these out of the mind? Davies.

For I am a very dead thing, In whom love wrought new alchymy, For by his art he did express A quintessence even from nothingness, From dull privations and lean emptiness. Donne. Paracelsus, by the help of an intense cold, teaches to separate the quintessence of wine. Boyle.

Let there be light! said God; and forthwith light Ethereal, first of things, quintessence pure, Sprung from the deep. Milton, P. L.

When the supreme faculties move regularly, the inferior passions and affections following, there arises a serenity and complacency upon the whole soul, infinitely beyond the greatest bodily pleasures, the highest quintessence and elixir of worldly delights. South, Serm.

QUINTESENTIAL. adj. [from quintessence.] Consisting of quintessence.

Venturous assertions as would have puzzled the authors to have made them good, specially considering that there is nothing contrary to the quintessential matter and circular figure of the heavens; so neither is there to the light thereof. Hakewill.

QUINTIN. n. s. [I know not whence derived; Minshew deduces it from quintus, Lat. and calls it a game celebrated every fifth year; pulus quintanus, Lat. Ainsworth; quintaine, Fr. Dr. Johnson.] — The word, it seems, is originally Welsh. "The gwynthyn, (literally the vane,) corrupted in English into quintain; an upright post, on the top of which a spar turned freely. At one end of this spar hung a sand-bag; the other presented a flat side. The rider in passing struck the flat side, and if not dexterous in passing was overtaken, and perhaps dismounted by the sand-bag, and became a fair object of laughter.—Whether the gwynnyn, or quaintain, was in use among the Romans, I am not certain, though I rather think not. The name is, I think, decisively of Welsh origin." Cambrian Popular Antiquities, &c. by the Rev. Peter Roberts, 1815. It is one of the games at a Welsh wedding.] An upright post, on the top of which a cross post turned upon a pin, at one end of the cross post was a broad board, and at the other a heavy sand-bag; the play was to ride against the broad end with a lance, and pass by before the sand-bag coming round, should strike the tilter on the back.

At quintin be,
In honour of his bridaltee,
Hath challeng'd either wide countee;
Come cut and long tail, for there be Six batchelors as bold as he,
Adjuting to his company,
And each one hath his livery.

The highest contentments that the world can yield, become to us like the country quintines; while we run upon them with a hasty speed, if we post not faster off than we at first came on, the bag of sand strikes us in the neck, and leaves us nothing but the blueness of our wounds to boast on.

Feltham, Serm. on Ecc. ii. 11.

QUINTUPLE. adj. [quintuplus, Lat.] Five-fold.

In the country, the greatest proportion of mortality, one hundred and fifty-six, is above quintuple unto twenty-eight the least.

Grant, Bills of Mortality.

QUIP. n. s. [derived, by the etymologists, from whip.] A sharp jest; a taunt; a sarcasm.

Notwithstanding all our sudden quips,
The least whereof would quell a lover's hope,
Yet, spaniel like, the more she spurns my love,
The more it grows, and fawneth on her still.

Shakespeare, Two Gent. of Ver.

If I sent him word his beard was not well cut, he would send me word, he cut it to please himself: this is called the quip modest.

Shakespeare, As you like it.

Nymph, bring with thee
Jest and youthful jollity,
Quips, and cranks, and wanton wiles,
Nods, and becks, and wreathed smiles.

Milton, L'Al.

To QUIP. † v. a. To rally with bitter sarcasms; to taunt; to insult.

Ainsworth.

When she complains,
The more he laughs, and does her closely quip,
To see her sore lament and bite her tender lip.

Spenser, F. Q.

To QUIP.  v. n.* To scoff.

I have seen many so prone to quip and gird, that they will rather lose their friend than their scoff.

Sir H. Sidney, lett. to Sir P. Sidney.

QUIRE. † n. s. [choeur, Fr. chora, Italian; chorus, Latin.]

1. A body of singers; a chorus.

The trees did bud and early blossoms bore,
And all the quire of birds did sweetly sing,
And told that garden's pleasures in their caroling.

Spenser.

Myself have lim'd a bush for her,
And plac'd a quire of such enticing birds,
That she will light to listen to their lays.

Shaks.

At thy nativity a glorious quire
Of angels in the fields of Bethlehem sung
To shepherds watching at their folds by night,
And told them the Messiah now was born.

Milton, P. R.

I may worship thee
For aye, with temples vow'd and virgin quires.

Milton, Transl. from Geoff. of Monmouth.

Begin the song, and strike the livelying lyre,
Lo how the years to come a numerous and well fitted quire,
All hand in hand do decently advance,
And to my song with smooth and equal measures dance.

Cowley.

As in beauty she surpass'd the quire,
So nobler than the rest was her attire.

Dryden.

2. Any company or assembly.

By the twinkling of their sacred fire,
He mote perceive a little dawning sight
Of all which there was doing in that quire;
Mongst whom a woman spoil'd of all attire
He spyde lamenting.

Spenser, F. Q.

3. The part of the church where the service is sung.

I am all on fire,
Not all the buckets in a country quire
Shall quench my rage.
Some run for buckets to the hallow'd quire,
Some cut the pipes, and some the engines play.

Dryden.

The fox obscene to gaping tombs retires,
And wolves with howling fill the sacred quires.

Pope.

4. [Quaire, old Engl. quaayer, old Fr. cahier, modern.] A bundle of paper consisting of twenty-four sheets.

To QUIRE. v. n. [from the noun.] To sing in concert.

There's not the smallest orb which thou behold'st,
But in his motion like an angel sings,
Still quiring to the young-ey'd cherubims.

Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

My throat of war be turn'd
Which quird with my drum, into a pipe
Small as an enunch, or the virgin's voice
That babies lulls asleep.

Shakespeare, Coriol.

QUIRISTER. n. s. [from quire.] Chorister; one who sings in concert, generally in divine service.

The coy quiristers, that lodge within,
Are prodigal of harmony.

Thomson, Spring.

QUIRITATION.  n. s.* [quiritatio, Lat.] A cry for help: an unusual word.

How is it then with thee, O Saviour, that thou thus astonishest men and angels with so woful a quirition? Had thy God left thee?

Bp. Hall, Contempl. The Crucifixion.

QUIRK. † n. s. [of this word I can find no rational derivation. Dr. Johnson.—It may, without violence, be from jerk, or yerk; as quip is from whip. The word was written querk, as well as quirk. "Every scholastical querk." Bp. Hall, Occas. Med. § 59. ed. 1661. "Not without sophistical querks." A. Wood, Ann. Univ. Ox. in 1557.]

1. Quick stroke; sharp fit.

I've felt so many quirks of joy and grief,
That the first face of neither on the start,
Can woman me unto it.

Shakespeare.

2. Smart taunt.

Some kind of men quarrel purposely on others to taste their valour; belike, this is a man of that quirk.

Shakespeare.

I may chance to have some odd quirks and remnants of wit broken on me.

Shakespeare.

3. Slight conceit.

Conceits, puns, quirks or quibbles, jests and partees may agreeably entertain, but have no place in the search after truth.

Watson, the Mind.

4. Flight of fancy. Not in use.

Most fortunately he hath achiev'd a maid,
That paragon description and wild fame,
One that excels the quirks of blazoning pens.

Shakespeare.

5. Subtily; nicety; artful distinction.
Such quirks and quiddities.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 676.

There are many unnecessary quirks and quibbles in grammar.

Hales, Rem. p. 127.

Let a lawyer tell them he has spied some defect in an entail; how solicitous are they to repair that error, and leave nothing to the mercy of a law
quirk!

Decay of Chr. Piety.

There are a thousand quirks to avoid the stroke of the law.

L'Estrange, Fab.

6. Loose light tune.

Now the chapel's silver bell you hear,
That summons you to all the pride of pray'r;
Light quirks of musick, broken and uneven.

Pope.

7. [In building.] A piece of ground taken out of any regular ground-plot, to make a court or yard.

Chambers.

QUIRKISH.  adj.* [from quirk.] Consisting of a slight conceit, or an artful distinction.

Sometimes it [facetiousness] is lodged in a sly question, in a smart answer, in a quirkish reason.

Barrow, vol. i. S. 14.

To QUIT. † v. a. part. pass. quit; pret. I quit or quitted. [quiter, Fr. quitaire, Italian; quitar, Span. Dr. Johnson.—So the Goth. afquithan, to renounce. Quit is found, in our old writers, under the form of quite, in several senses; which we now follow in the word require. Chaucer also uses the adjective quite for free; and Spenser, "quite claim" for "quit claim," a law expression.]

1. To discharge an obligation; to make even.

We will be quit of thine oath, which thou hast made us to swear.

Jos. ii. 20.

By this act, old tyrant,
I shall be quit with thee; while I was virtuous,
I was a stranger to thy blood, but now
Sure thou wilt love me for this horrid crime.

Denham.

To John I ow'd great obligation;
But John, unhappily, thought fit
To publish it to all the nation;
Sure John and I are more than quit.

Prior.

2. To set free.

Thou art quit from a thousand calamities;
therefore let thy joy, which should be as great for thy freedom from them as is thy sadness when thou feelest any of them, do the same cure upon thy discontent.

Bp. Taylor.

Henceforth I fly not death, nor would prolong Life much; bent rather how I may be quit
Fairest, and easiest, of this cumbersome charge.

Milton, P. L.

To quit you of this fear, you have already looked death in the face; what have you found so terrible in it?

Wake.

3. To carry through; to discharge; to perform.

Never worthy prince a day did quit
With greater hazard, and with more renown.

Daniel.

4. To clear himself of an affair: with the reciprocal pronoun.

Samson hath quit himself

Like Samson, and heroically hath finish'd
A life heroic, on his enemies
Fully reveng'd hath left them years of mourning.

Milton, S. A.

Be strong, and quit yourselves like men.

1 Sam. i. 9.

Stand fast in the faith, quit you like men.

1 Cor. xvi. 13.

5. To repay; to requite.

He fair the knight saluted, louting low,
Who fair him quitted, as that courteous was.

Spenser.

Enkindle all the sparks of nature,

To quit this horrid act. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

6. To vacate obligations.

For our reward,

All our debts are paid; dangers of law,

Actions, decrees, judgements against us quitted.
B. Jonson.

One step higher

Would set me highest, and in a moment quit

The debt immense of endless gratitude.

Milton, P. L.

7. To pay any obligation; to clear a debt; to be tantamount.

They both did fail of their purpose, and got not so much as to quit their charges; because truth, which is the secret of the most high God, whose proper handy-work all things are, cannot be compassed with that wit and those senses which are our own.

Hooker.

Does not the air feed the flame? and does not the flame at the same time warm and enlighten the air? and does not the earth quit scores with all the elements in the noble fruits that issue from it?

South, Serm.

Still I shall hear, and never quit the score,
Stunn'd with hoarse Codrus's Theseid o'er and o'er?

Dryden.

Iron works ought to be confined to certain places, where there is no conveyance for timber to places of vent, so as to quit the cost of the carriage.

Temple, Miscell.

8. [Contracted from acquit.] To absolve; to acquit.

Nor further seek what their offences be,
Guiltless I quit, guilty I set them free.

Fairfax.

9. To pay.

Far other plaints, tears and laments
The time, the place, and our estates require;
Think on thy sins, which man's old foe presents
Before that Judge that quits each soul his hire.

Fairfax.

10. To abandon; to forsake.

Their father,

Then old and fond of issue, took such sorrow,
That he quit being.

Shakespeare, Cymb.

Honours are promis'd
To all will quit 'em; and rewards propos'd
Even to slaves that can detect their courses.

B. Jonson.

Such variety of arguments only distract the understanding, such a superficial way of examining is to quit truth for appearance, only to serve our vanity.

Locke.

11. To resign; to give up.

The prince, renew'd in bounty as in arms,
With pity saw the ill-conceal'd distress,
Quitted his title to Campaspe's charms,
And gave the fair one to the friend's embrace.

Prior.

To *QUITCLAIM v. a. [quit and claim.]
To renounce claim to.

Roger, son of Richard de Selton, quitclaimed all his right in three oxgangs of land here.

Burton's Monast. Ebor. (1758), p. 347.

QUITCHGRASS. n. s. [cpice, Sax. gramen caninum, Lat.] Dog-grass.

They are the best corn to grow on grounds subject to quitchgrass or other weeds.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

QUITE. adv. [this is derived, by the etymologists, from quitté, discharged, free, Fr. which however at first appearance unlikely is much favoured by the original use of the word, which was, in this combination, quite and clean; that is,

with a clean riddance: its present signification was gradually introduced.] Completely; perfectly; totally; thoroughly.

Those latter exclude not the former quite and clean as unnecessary.

Hooker.

He hath sold us, and quite devoured our money.

Gen. xxxi.

If some foreign ideas will offer themselves, reject them, and hinder them from running away with our thoughts quite from the subject in hand.

Locke.

The same actions may be aimed at different ends, and arise from quite contrary principles.

Addison, Spect.

QUITRENT. n. s. [quit and rent.] Small rent reserved.

Such a tax would be insensible, and pass but as a small quitrrent, which every one would be content to pay towards the guard of the seas.

Temple, Miscell.

My old master, a little before his death, wished him joy of the estate which was falling to him, desiring him only to pay the gifts of charity he had left as quitrrents upon the estate.

Addison, Spect.

QUITS. interj. [from quit.] An exclamation used when any thing is repayed and the parties become even.

*QUITTABLE adj. [from quit.] That may be vacated; that may be given up.

Securing a place which is not quittable on the change of administration.

Markland, Lett. of 1767, Nichols's Lit. An. iv. 346.

*QUITTAL n. s. [from quit.] Return; repayment.

As in revenge or quittal of such strife.

Shakespeare, Rape of Lucrece.

QUITTANCE. n. s. [quittance, Fr.]

1. Discharge from a debt or obligation; an acquittance.

Now I am rememb'ed, he scorn'd it me!

But that's all one; omittance is no quittance.

Shakespeare.

2. Recompence; return; repayment.

Mine eyes saw him in bloody state,
Render'd faint quittance, wearied and outbreath'd,
To Harry Monmouth.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

Plutus, the god of gold,

Is but his steward; no need but he repays

Sevenfold above itself; no gift to him

But breeds the giver a return exceeding

All use of quittance.

Shakespeare, Timon.

We shall forget the office of our hand,
Sooner than quittance of desert and merit.

Shakespeare.

To QUITTANCE. v. a. [from the noun.]

To repay; to recompense. A word not used.

Embrace me then this opportunity,
As fitting best to quittance their deceit.

Shaks.

QUITTER. n. s.

Ainsworth.

2. Scoria of tin.

Ainsworth.

QUITTERBONE. n. s.

Quitterbone is a hard round swelling upon the coronet, between the heel and the quarter, and grows most commonly on the inside of the foot. Farrier's Dict.

QUIVER. n. s. [this word seems to be corrupted from couvvr, Fr. or cover.]

A case or sheath for arrows.

As Diane hunted on a day,

She chaunc'd to come where Cupid lay,

His quiver by his head,

One of his shafts she stole away,

And one of hers did close convey

Into the other's stead;

With that Love wounded my love's heart,

But Diane beasts with Cupid's dart.

Spenser, Poems.

Those works, with ease as much he did,
As you would ope and shut your quiver-lid.

Chapman.

Diana's nymphs would be arrayed in white,
their arms and shoulders naked, bows in their hands, and quivers by their sides.

Peacham on Drawing.

Her sounding quiver on her shoulder ty'd,
One hand a dart, and one a bow supply'd.

Dryden.

*QUIVER adj. [probably from quiver, Goth. to be alive. "Quicke, or quiver, agilis." Barret, Alv. 1580.] Nimble; active. Not now in use.

There was a little quiver fellow, and he would manage you his piece thus; and he would about.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV. P. II.

To *QUIVER v. n. [from To quaver: which see.]

1. To quake; to play with a tremulous motion.

The birds chaunt melody on every bush,
The green leaves quiver with the cooling wind.

Shakespeare.

When I heard, my belly trembled; my lips quivered at the voice.

Hab. iii. 16.

O'er the pommel cast the knight,
Forward he flew, and pitching on his head,
He quiver'd with his feet, and lay for dead.

Dryden.

With what a spring his furious soul broke loose,
And left the limbs still quivering on the ground!

Addison.

Eurydice with quivering voice he mourn'd,
And Heber's banks Eurydice return'd.

Gay, Trivia.

Dancing sun-beams on the waters play'd,
And verdant alders form'd a quivering shade.

Pope.

The dying gales that pant upon the trees,
The lakes that quiver to the curling breeze.

Pope.

2. To shiver; to shudder.

Zelmae would have put to her helping hand, but she was taken with such a quivering, that she thought it more wisdom to lean herself to a tree and look on.

Sidney.

QUIVERED. adj. [from quiver.]

1. Furnished with a quiver.

'Tis chastity;

She that has that, is clad in complete steel;
And, like a quiver'd nymph with arrows keen,
May trace huge forests and unbarbour'd heaths,
Infamous hills, and perilous sandy wilds.

Milton, Comus.

2. Sheathed as in a quiver.

From him whose quills stand quivered at his ear,
To him who notches sticks at Westminster. Pope.

*QUIXOTISM n. s. [from Don Quixote, the celebrated hero of Cervantes; as rodomontade from Rodomonte, the hero of Ariosto.] Romantic and absurd notions or actions.

Of old Sheridan he [Johnson] remarked, that he neither wanted parts nor literature; but that his vanity and quixotism obscured his merits.

Dr. Maxwell, of Johnson, in Boswell's Life.

There is a degree of quixotism, which proceeds merely from the mimetic disposition of mankind, and is perhaps more common in the world than is generally imagined. What I mean is, a desire of imitating any great personage, whom we read of in history, in their dress, their manner of life, their most indifferent actions, or their most trifling particularities! Graves, Spirit. Quixote, B. 2. ch. 4.

To *QUOBB v. n. [a low word, Dr. Johnson says; without offering any etymon. Under the form of quap, or quop, it is a very old word; and in both shapes is used, according to Grose, for throb, in Gloucestershire and Berkshire. It is perhaps of the same origin as quave. See To QUAVE. Chaucer uses quap; Dryden, in a very low passage, quob. To move as the embryo does in the womb; to move as the heart does when throbbing.

His heart began to quappe,
Hearing her come. Chaucer, Tr. and Cress. iii. 57.

QUOD.* The same as quoth, he saith; Icel. quedia, to say. See QUOTH.

Sire knight, quod he, my maister and my lord.

Chaucer, C. T. Prol.

QUODLIBET. n. s. [Latin.] A nice point; a subtlety.

He who reading on the heart,
When all his quodlibets of art
Could not expound its pulse and heat,
Swore he had never felt it beat. Prior.

QUODLIBETARIAN. n. s. [quodlibet, Lat.] One who talks or disputes on any subject. Dict.

QUODLIBETICAL.† adj. [quodlibet, Latin.] Not restrained to a particular subject: in the schools, theses or problems, anciently proposed to be debated for curiosity or entertainment, were so called. Dict.

It is pity, that the president of the quodlibetical disputations of Lovane had no more discretion than to propound, instead of exercises of learning, a question pertaining to the state.

Fulke, Ans. to P. Præface, (1580,) p. i.

QUODLIBETICALLY.* adv. [from quodlibet.] So as to be debated.

Many positions seem quodlibetically constituted, and like a Delphian blade will cut on both sides.

Brown, Chr. Mor. ii. 3.

QUOIF. n. s. [coiffe, Fr.]

1. Any cap with which the head is covered. See COIF.

Hence, thou sickly quoif,
Thou art a guard too wanton for the head,
Which princes, flesh'd with conquest, aim to hit. Shakespeare.

2. The cap of a serjeant at law.

To QUOIF. v. a. [coiffer, Fr.] To cap; to dress with a head-dress.

She is always quodified with the head of an elephant, to show that this animal is the breed of that country.

Addison.

The lady in the next medal is very particular in her quoiffure.

Addison on Medals.

QUOIL. n. s. See COIL.

QUOIN. n. s. [coin, Fr.]

1. Corner.

A sudden tempest from the desert flew
With horrid wings, and thundered as it blew,
Then, whirling round, the quoins together strook.

Sandys.

Build brick houses with strong and firm quoins or columns at each end.

Mortimer, Husb.

2. An instrument for raising warlike engines.

Ainsworth.

QUOIT. n. s. [coete, Dutch.]

1. Something thrown to a great distance to a certain point.

He plays at quoits well. Shaks. Hen. IV.
When he played at quoits, he was allowed his breeches and stockings. Arbuthnot and Pope.

Arbuthnot and Pope.

2. The discus of the ancients is sometimes called in English quoit, but improperly;

the game of quoits is a game of skill; the discus was only a trial of strength, as among us to throw the hammer.

To QUOIT. v. n. [from the noun.] To throw quoits; to play at quoits. Dryden uses it to throw the discus. See the noun.

Noble youths for mastership should strive
To quoit, to run, and steeds and chariots drive. Dryden.

To QUOIT. v. a. To throw.

Quoit him down, Bardolph, like a shove-groat shilling. Shakespeare.

QUONDAM. [Latin.] Having been formerly. A ludicrous word.

This is the quondam king, let's seize upon him. Shakespeare.

What lands and lordships for their own know
My quondam barber, but his worship now. Dryden.

QUOOK. preterite of quake. Obsolete. Freely up those royal spoils he took,
Yet at the lion's skin he inly quook. Spenser.

To QUOP.* v. n. To move as the heart does when throbbing. See To QUOB.

How quops the spirit? In what garb or air?
Cleveland's Poems, (1659,) p. 144.

QUORUM. n. s. [Latin.] A bench of justices; such a number of any officers as is sufficient to do business.

They were a parcel of mummies, and being himself one of the quorum in his own county, he wondered that none of the Middlesex justices took care to lay some of them by the heels.

Addison, Freeholder.

QUOTA.† n. s. [quote, Fr. "la quote partie," the several portion or share falling to any one," Cotgrave; quotus, quota, Lat. See also QUOTATION.] A share; a proportion as assigned to each.

Scarce one in this list but engages to supply a quota of brisk young fellows, equip with hats and feathers. Addison.

QUOTATION.† n. s. [from quote.]

1. Share; proportion: the original word for quota, Mr. Malone says. In this he is confirmed by the French quote; "la quote des tailles, the sessing or assessing of taxes." Cotgrave.

That they should not be able to answer their quotations, (as they call them,) or payments to the general charge. J. Chamberlain, MS. Lett. to Sir D. Carleton, (May 13, 1613.)

2. The act of quoting; citation.

3. Passage adduced out of an author as evidence or illustration.

He, that has but ever so little examined the citations of writers, cannot doubt how little credit the quotations deserve, where the originals are wanting. Locke.

He rang'd his tropes, and preach'd up patience, Back'd his opinion with quotations. Prior.

QUOTATIONIST.* n. s. [from quotation.] One who cites the words of another by way of authority or illustration.

Let the statutes of God be turned over, be scanned anew, and considered not altogether by the narrow intellectuals of quotationists and common places.

Milton, Doct. and Discip. of Divorce, Pref.

To QUOTE.† v. a. [quote, Fr.]

1. To cite an author or passage of an author: to adduce by way of authority or illustration the words of another.

The second chapter to the Romans is here quoted only to paint the margent. Whitgift.

St. Paul quotes one of their poets for this saying. Stillingfleet.

He changed his mind, say the papers, and quote for it Melchior Adams and Hospinian. Atterbury. He quoted texts right upon our Saviour, though he expounded them wrong. Atterbury.

He will in the middle of a session quote passages out of Plato and Pindar. Swift, Miscel.

2. To note.

I am sorry that with better heed and judgement I had not quoted him. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

I have with exact view perus'd thee, Hector,
And quoted joint by joint. Shaks. Tr. and Cress. I do slip

No action of my life thus, but I quote it. B. Jonson, Fox.

QUOTE.* n. s. [quote, Fr.] A note upon an article. Not in use. Cotgrave.

QUOTER. n. s. [from quote.] Citer; one that quotes.

I proposed this passage entire, to take off the disguise which its quoter put upon it. Atterbury.

QUOTH.† verb imperfect. [This is only part of quēthan, Saxon, retained in English, and is now only used in ludicrous language. It is used by Sidney irregularly in the second person. Dr. Johnson.—Quoth is to be referred also to the Goth. quithan, Sax. quēthan, Icel. quedia, to say; "vox antiquissima." Serenius observes, "et in omnibus ling. Septentr. usitatissima." Quoth I, say I or said I; quoth he, says he or said he.

Enjoying, quoth you. Sidney.
How now, sir John, quoth I, what man? Shakespeare, Hen. V.

Shall we, quoth he, so basely brook
This paltry ass? Hudibras.

Quotidian things, and equidistant hence
Shut in for man in one circumference. Donne.

Nor was this a short fit of shaking, as an ague, but a quotidian fever, always increasing to higher inflammation. King Charles.

QUOTIDIAN.† n. s. [febris quotidiana, Latin.]

1. A quotidian fever; a fever which returns every day.

If I could meet that fancymonger, I would give him counsel; for he seems to have the quotidian of love. Shakespeare.

2. Anything which returns every day.

A disposition which to his finds will never cement, a quotidian of sorrow and discontent in his house. Milton, Doct. and Disc. of Div. ii. 16.

QUOTIENT. n. s. [quotient, Fr. quoties, Latin.]

In arithmetick, quotient is the number produced by the division of the two given numbers the one by the other.

Cocker.

To make all the steps belonging to the same pair of stairs of an equal height, they consider the height of the room in feet and inches, and multiply the feet by twelve, whose product, with the number of odd inches, gives the sum of the whole height in inches, which sum they divide by the number of steps they intend to have in that height, and the quotient shall be the number of inches and parts that each step shall be high.

Mozon, Mech. Exercises.

R.

R A B

R A C

R,† is called the canine letter, because it is uttered with some resemblance to the growl or snarl of a cur: it has one constant sound in English, such as it has in other languages; as red, rose, more, muriatick: in words derived from the Greek, it is followed by an h, rhapsody: r is never mute, unless the second r may be accounted mute, where two rr are used; as myrrh.

R is the dogs' letter, and hurreth in the sound: the tongue striking the inner palate, with a trembling about the teeth.

B. Jonson, Eng. Gram.

To RA'BATE. v. n. [rabattre, Fr.] In falconry, to recover a hawk to the fist again.

Ainsworth.

RABA'TO.† n. s. [from the Fr. rabattre, to put back, according to Menage; because it was at first nothing but the collar of the shirt or shift turned back towards the shoulders. T. Hawkins.] A neck-band; a kind of ruff.

I think your other rabato were better.

Shakespeare, Much Ado.

Broke broad jests upon her narrow heel,
Pok'd her rabatos, and survey'd her steel.

Old Com. of Law Tricks.

To RA'BKET. v. a. [rabatre, raboter, Fr.] To pare down pieces of wood so as to fit one another.

The rabbit plane is to cut part of the upper edge of a board straight or square down, that the edge of another board, cut down in the same manner, may join into the square of the first; and this lapping over of two boards is called rabbeting.

Moxon, Mech. Ex.

The window frame hath every one of its lights rabbeted on its outside about half an inch into the frame, and all these rabbets are grooved square.

Moxon.

RA'BKET. n. s. [from the verb.] A joint made by paring two pieces so that they wrap over one another.

Having drove in the hooks, they set the rabbets of the door within the rabbets of the door-post.

Moxon.

RA'BBIN. } Jews.

The Hebrew rabbins say, that nature hath given man, for the pronouncing of all letters, the lips, the teeth, the tongue, the palate, and throat.

Camden, Rem.

Be not ye called rabbis; for one is your master, even Christ, and all ye are brethren.

St. Matt. xxiii. 8.

RABBINICAL.* adj. [from rabbini.] Relating to the notions of the rabbins.

We will not buy your rabbinnical fumes; we have one that calls us to buy of him pure gold tried in the fire.

Milton, Anim. Rem. Def. § 2.

He is likewise to teach them—a great rabbinnical secret, revived of late years by the fraternity of Jesuits, namely, that contradictory interpretations of the same article may be both of them true and valid.

Addison, Spect. No. 305.

I confess I have sometimes thought that there was good sense, and good advice, in a certain rabbinnical saying, which might pass for one of Pythagoras, for it is to be understood in the allegorical way: "Throw a little salt upon your lamp; it will burn the brighter and the stronger."

Peters on Job, Pref. p. xl.

RA'BBINIST.* n. s. One of those among the Jews, who adhered to the Talmud and its traditions.

Those who stood up for the Talmud and its traditions were chiefly the rabbins, and their followers; from whence the party had the name of rabbinst. Stackhouse, Hist. of the Bib. vol. ii. B. 7. ch. 4.

RA'BBIT. n. s. [robbe, robbekin, Dutch.] A furry animal that lives on plants, and burrows in the ground.

I knew a wench married, as she went to the garden for parsley to stuff a rabbit.

Shakespeare, Tam. of the Shrew.

A company of scholars, going to catch conies, carried one with them which had not much wit, and gave in charge, that if he saw any, he should be silent for fear of scaring of them; but he no sooner espied a company of rabbits, but he cried aloud, ecce multi cuniculi; which he had no sooner said, but the conies ran to their burrows; and he being checked by them for it, answered, Who would have thought that the rabbits understood Latin?

Bacon, Apophthegms.

RA'BBLE.† n. s. [rabula, Lat. rabulare, low Lat.] Dr. Johnson.—Rabula is a wrangler, a brawler; and rabulare is to make the noise of such fellows.

Serenius therefore refers rabble to the Icel. rabba, to prate, rabb, confused discourse. And so Kilian, rabbelen, Teut. "confundere verba." Hence rabble-rote, in our Exmore dialect, "a repetition of a long round-about story," as Grose has observed; and hence rabblement was applied contemptuously to those who had prated a great deal upon a subject, a collection of brawlers as it were. See the citations from Crammer and Hall under RABBLEMENT.] A tumultuous crowd; an assembly of low people.

Countrymen, will ye relent, and yield to mercy, Or let a rabbie lead you to your deaths? Shaks.

Go bring the rabbie here to this place. Shaks.

Of these his several ravishments, betrayings, and stealing away of men's wives, came in all those ancient fables, and all that rabble of Grecian forgeries.

Ralegh.

The better sort abhors scurrility, And often censures what the rabbie like.

Roscommon.

That profane, atheistical, epicurean rabble, whom the whole nation so rings of, are not the wisest men in the world.

South.

To gratify the barbarous audience, I gave them a short rabble scene, because the mob are represented by Plutarch and Polybius with the same character of baseness and cowardice.

Dryden, Pref. to Cleomenes.

In change of government, The rabble rule their great oppressors' fate, Do sovereign justice and revenge the state. Dryd. His enemies have been only able to make ill impressions upon the low and ignorant rabble, and to put the dregs of the people in a ferment.

Addison, Freeholder.

To RA'BBLE.* v. n. [rabbelen, Teut. blate-rare.] To speak in a confused manner. Brockett's N. C. Words.

RA'BBLEMENT.† n. s. [from rabble.] Any crowd; tumultuous assembly of mean people. Not in use, Dr. Johnson says. Mr. Pegge, on the contrary, considers it as used of late, in various parts of England, for the mob.

Gabrieli, Duns, Durande, and the great rabblement of the scholae authors.

Abp. Crammer, Ansv. to Bp. Gardiner, p. 73.

A rude rabblement,

Whose like he never saw, he durst not bide, But got his ready steed, and fast away gan ride.

Spenser, F. Q.

Such wondrous rabblements of rhymesters new.

By. Hall, Sat. i. 2.

The rabblement houted, clapp'd their chopt hands, and uttered a deal of stinking breath.

Shakespeare, Jul. Cæs.

There will be always tyrants, murderers, thieves, traitors, and other of the same rabblement.

Camden, Rem.

RA'BID.† adj. [rabidus, Lat.] Fierce; furious; mad.

Some men are naturally troublesome, vicious, thievish, pugnacious, rabid.

Wollaston, § 8.

RA'BIDNESS.* n. s. [from rabid.] Fierceness; furiousness.

Protected against the malice, the envy, the fury, and the rabidness of self-ended man.

Feltham, Res. ii. 66.

RA'BINET. n. s. A kind of smaller ordnance.

Ainsworth.

RACE.† n. s. [race, Fr. from radice, Lat.]

1. A family ascending.

2. Family descending.

He in a moment will create

Another world; and, out of man, a race Of men innumerable, there to dwell.

Milton, P. L.

Male he created thee, but thy consort Female for race.

Milton, P. L.

High as the mother of the gods in place, And proud like her of an immortal race.

Dryden.

Hence the long race of Alban fathers came.

Dryden.

3. A generation; a collective family.

A race of youthful and unhandled colts, Fetching mad bounds.

Shaks. Merch. of Ven.

4. A particular breed.

The race of mules, fit for the plough is bred.

Chapman.

Instead

Of spirits malign, a better race to bring Into their vacant room.

Milton, P. L.

In the races of mankind and families of the world, there remains not to one above another the least pretence to have the right of inheritance.

Locke.

If they are all deaba'd and willing slaves,
The young but breathing to grow grey in bondage,
And the old sinking to ignoble graves,
Of such a race no matter who is king. Murphy.

5. RACE of ginger. [rayz de gengibre, Spanish.] A root or sprig of ginger. See RAZE.

The late Mr. Warner observed to me, that a single root or race of ginger, were it brought home entire, as it might formerly have been, and not in small pieces, as at present, would have been sufficient to load a pack-horse.

Steevens, Note on Shakespeare.

6. A particular strength or taste of wine; a kind of tartness.

There came, not six days since, from Hull a pipe Of rich canary. —
Is it of the right race?

Massinger, New Way to Pay Old Debts.

7. Applied, from the preceding sense, by Temple to any extraordinary natural force of intellect, according to Dr. Johnson: it may, perhaps, be thought, however, as having no other meaning than that of stretch.

Of gardens there may be forms wholly irregular, that may have more beauty than others; but they must owe it to some extraordinary dispositions of nature in the seat, or some great race of fancy or judgement in contrivance. Temple.

8. [Ras, Icelandic; haras, old French.] Contest in running.

To describe races and games
Or tilting furniture. Milton, P. L.
Stand forth, ye champions who the gauntlet wield,

Or you, the swiftest racers of the field;
Stand forth, ye wrestlers who these pastimes game,
I wield the gauntlet, and I run the race. Pope.

9. Course on the feet.

The flight of many birds is swifter than the race of any beasts. Bacon.

10. Progress; course.

It suddenly fell from an excess of favour, which many examples having taught them, never stooped his race till it came to a headlong overthrow.

Sidney.

My race of glory run, and race of shame.

Milton, S. A.

The great light of day yet wants to run
Much of his race though steep. Milton, P. L.
He safe return'd, the race of glory past,
New to his friends' embrace. Pope, Odyssey.

11. That part of a river or brook where the stream is the most rapid. "Race, cursus, a course or race; item impetus fluvii, the violent course of a river." Somner.

12. Train; process.

An offensive war is made, which is unjust in the aggressor; the prosecution and race of the war carrieth the defendant to invade the ancient patrimony of the first aggressor, who is now turned defendant; he shall be sit down, and not put himself in defence? Bacon.

The race of this war fell upon the loss of Urbin, which he re-obtained. Bacon.

To RACE v. n. [from the noun.] To run as in a race; to run swiftly.

The racing steed. Pope, Il. 23.

The snow-white lambs

Trip on the green, and race in little troops. Dyer.
RA'CEHORSE. n. s. [race and horse.] Horse bred to run for prizes.

The reason Hudibras gives, why those, who can talk on trifles, speak with the greatest fluency, is, that the tongue is like a racehorse, which runs the faster, the less weight it carries. Addison.

RACEM'ATION* n. s. [racematio, Lat.]

1. Cluster, like that of grapes.

A cock will in one day fertilitate the whole racemation or cluster of eggs, which are not excluded in many weeks after. Brown, Vulg. Err.

2. Perhaps the cultivation of the clusters of grapes.

He took much pleasure in a garden; and having brought over some curious instruments out of Italy for racemation, engraving, and inoculating, he was a great master in the use of them.

Burnet, Life of Bp. Bedell, p. 120.

RACEM'IFEROUS. adj. [racemus and fero, Lat.] Bearing clusters.

RA'CER. n. s. [from race.] Runner; one that contends in speed.

His stumbling founder'd jade can trot as high
As any other Pegasus can fly;
So the dull eel moves nimbler in the mud,
Than all the swift-finn'd racers of the flood.

Dorset.

A poet's form she plac'd before their eyes,
And bad the nimblest racer seize the prize. Pope.

RACH* n. s. [naecc, Sax. racce, Goth. From reichen, Germ. vestigia odorari. Wachter. And so he derives brach, the female hound, from bereichen.] A hunting dog.

There are in England and Scotland two kinds of hunting dogs; the first is called a racche; and this is a foot-scenting creature, both of wilde beasts, birds, and fishes also which lie hid among the rocks: the female hereof is called in England a brache. Gentlemen's Recreation, p. 28.

They hunt about as doth a racche.
Old Poem in Ashmole's Theat. Chens. (1652), p. 155.

RA'CINES* n. s. [from racyn.] The quality of being racyn.

Race, and raciness, in wine, signifies a kind of tartness. Blackstone, Note on Shakespeare.
Montaigne, speaking rather what he thought than what he read, has an energy of thought, and a raciness and force of expression, that we but rarely meet with in any of our essay-writers, except Jemmy Collier. Biographiana, p. 307.

RACK* n. s. [racke, Dutch, from racken, to stretch.]

1. An engine to torture.

Vex not his ghost; O let him pass! he hates him
That would upon the rack of this rough world, Stretch him out longer. Shakespeare, K. Lear.
Did ever any man upon the rack afflict himself, because he had received a cross answer from his mistress? Bp. Taylor.

Let them feel the whip, the sword, the fire,
And in the tortures of the rack expire. Addison.

2. Torture; extreme pain.

A fit of the stone puts a king to the rack, and makes him as miserable as it does the meanest subject. Temple.

A cool behaviour sets him on the rack, and is interpreted as an instance of aversion or indifference. Addison.

3. Exaction.

The great rents and racks would be unsupportable. Sir E. Smiths, State of Rel. (1605), O. 2. b.

4. Any instrument by which extension is performed.

These bows, being somewhat like the long bows in use amongst us, were bent only by a man's immediate strength, without the help of any bender or rack that are used to others.

Wilkins, Math. Magick.

5. A distaff; commonly a portable distaff, from which they spin by twirling a ball. It is commonly spoken and written rack.

The sisters turn the wheel,
Empty the woolly rack, and fill the reel. Dryden.

6. [Racke, Dutch, a track. Dr. Johnson. — "Rack means merely that which is recked; — the past tense, and therefore past participle, peac or pec, of the Sax. verb pecan, exhalare, to reck; a vapour, a steam, an exhalation." Mr. H. Tooke, Div. of Purl. ii. 397. Accordingly Mr. Tooke will not at all admit the definition of rack as given by Dr. Johnson, namely, "the clouds as they are driven by the wind." Dr. Johnson's definition is certainly not exact. Nevertheless, rack is well known in England in a similar meaning: "the rack rides," a Lincolnshire expression, used of the clouds moving swiftly: "the rack of the weather," the track in which the clouds move, used in the North according to Grose.] Thin vapours in the air.

The winds in the upper region, which move the clouds above, which we call the rack, and are not perceived below, pass without noise. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

That, which is now a horse, even with a thought The rack dislimms, and makes it indistinct As water is in water. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

We often see against some storm,
A silence in the heavens, the rack stand still,
The bold winds speechless, and the orb below
As hush as death. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

The upper part of the scene, which was all of clouds, and made artificially to swell and ride like the rack, began to open; and, the air clearing, in the top thereof was discovered Juno.

B. Jonson, Masques at Court.

Shall I stray

In the middle air, and stay
The sailing rack? Fletcher, Faithful Shepherdess.

As wintry winds contending in the sky,
With equal force of lungs their titles try;
They rage, they roar: the doubtful rack of heaven
Stands without motion, and the tide undriven. Dryden.

7. Track; trace. [racke, Dutch.] This is the meaning of the word in the following passage, whatever the commentators may be pleased to say to the contrary. Brockett.

The great globe itself,

Yea all, which it inherit, shall dissolve;
And, like this insubstantial pageant, faded,
Leave not a rack behind. Shakespeare, Tempest.

8. [hpacca, the occiput, Saxon; racca, Icelandic, hinges or joints.] A neck of mutton cut for the table. Dr. Johnson. — Simply the neck or crag of mutton, in Lancashire.

A chicken, a rabbit, rib of a rack of mutton, wing of a capon, &c. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 74.

9. A grate; the grate on which bacon is laid.

10. A wooden grate, in which hay is placed for cattle.

Their bulls they send to pastures far,
Or hills, or feed them at full racks within. May, Virgil.

The best way to feed cattle with it, is to put it in racks, because of the great quantity they tread down. Mortimer.

He bid the nimble hours
Bring forth the steeds; the nimble hours obey:
From their full racks the generous steeds retire. Addison.

11. Arrack; a spirituous liquor. See AR-RACK.

To RACK v. n. [from the noun.] To stream or fly, as clouds before the wind.

Three glorious suns, each one a perfect sun,
Not separated with the racking clouds,
But sever'd in a pale clear-shining sky. Shaks.

Slay, clouds, ye rack too fast.

Beaum. and Fl. Four Pl. in One.

TO RACK.† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To torment by the rack.

Unhappy most like tortur'd me,
Their joints new set to be new rack'd again.

Cowley.

Hold, O dreadful sir,
You will not rack an innocent old man.

Dryden and Lee.

2. To torment; to harass.

The apostate angel, though in pain,
Vaunting aloud, but rack'd with deep despair.

Milton, P. L.

3. To harass by exaction.

The landlords there shamefully rack their tenants, exacting of them, besides his covenants, what he pleaseth.

Spenser.

The commons hast thou rack'd; the clergy's bags
Are lank and lean with thy extortions.

Shaks.

He took possession of his just estate,
Not rack'd his tenants with increase of rent.

Dryden.

4. To screw; to force to performance.

They racking and stretching Scripture further than by God was meant, are drawn into sundry inconveniences.

Hooker.

The wisest among the heathens racked their wits, and cast about every way, managing every little argument to the utmost advantage.

Tillotson, Serm.

It was worth the while for the adversary to rack invention, and to call in all the succours of learning and critical skill to assail them, if possible, and to wrest them out of our hands.

Waterland.

5. To stretch; to extend.

Nor have I money nor commodity

To raise a present sum;

Try what my credit can in Venice do,

That shall be rack'd even to the uttermost.

Shaks.

6. To defecate; to draw off from the lees.

[I know not whence this word is derived in this sense; rein, German, is clear, pure, whence our word to rinse: this is perhaps of the same race. Dr. Johnson.

—It has had the same origin ascribed to it as the noun; "*rack*en, Dutch;

recken, Germ. extendo, torqueo, i. e. to retch or draw out in length, as the tor-mentor doth the limbs of a delinquent, with the instrument so called: hence,

to rack wines, i. e. to draw them out by long racking leaders, from the lees." Butler's Eng. Gramm. 1633. Ind. Mr.

Malone has made the same remark.]

It is common to draw wine or beer from the lees, which we call racking, whereby it will clarify much sooner.

Bacon.

Some roll their cask about the cellar to mix it with the lees, and, after a few days' resettlement, rack it off.

Mortimer.

RACK-RENT.† n. s. [rack and rent.] Rent raised to the uttermost. Dr. Johnson.

Rack-rent and rack-renter will be better explained by the following information from a friend. Rack-rent is simply opposed to the rent of a beneficial

lease: it is an annual rent, and supposed to be the full value or rent, but would be called a rack-rent, from the nature of the tenure, though it might not be worth more than half what it would be let for.

Have poor families been ruined by rack-rents, paid for the lands of the church? Swift, Miscell.

RACK-RENTER. n. s. [rack and renter.]

One who pays the uttermost rent.

Though this be a quarter of his yearly income, and the publick tax takes away one hundred; yet
this influences not the yearly rent of the land, which the rack-renter or under-tenant pays. Locke.

RA'CKER.* n. s. [from rack.]

1. One who torments.

Such rackers of orthography as to speak dour,
when he should say doubt.

Shakspeare, L. Lab. Lost.

2. A wrestler: as, "a racker of laws, i. e. he that with subtle interpretation wresteth laws." Barret.

I pass unto the second epithet, by which these rackers of scripture are by St. Peter styled unstable. Hales's Rem. (1673), p. 11.

RA'CKET. n. s. [of uncertain derivation;

M. Casaubon derives it, after his custom, from ραχια, the dash of fluctuation against the shore.]

1. An irregular clattering noise.

That the tennis-court keeper knows better than I, it is a low ebb of linen with thee, when thou keepest not racket there. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

2. A confused talk. In burlesque language.

Ambition hath removed her lodging, and lives the next door to faction, where they keep such a racket, that the whole parish is disturbed, and every night in an uproar. Swift.

3. [Raquette, Fr.] The instrument with which players at tennis strike the ball.
Whence perhaps all the other senses.

When we have matcht our rackets to these balls,
We will in France play a set,
Shall strike his father's crown into the hazard.

Shakspeare.

The body, into which impression is made, either can yield backward or it cannot; if it can yield backward, then the impression made is a motion;
as we see a stroke with a racket upon a ball, makes it fly from it. Digby on the Soul.

He talks much of the motives to do and forbear, how they determine a reasonable man, as if he were no more than a tennis-ball, to be tossed to and fro by the rackets of the second causes.

Bramhall against Hobbes.

TO RA'CKET.* v. a. [from the noun.] To strike as at the game of racket; to cuff;
to toss.

Thus, like a tennis-ball, is poor man racketed from one temptation to another, till at last he hazard eternal ruin.

Dr. Hewitt, Nine Serm. (1658, or 1659), p. 60.

TO RA'CKET.* v. n. [from the noun.]

To go about in a sort of noisy manner;
to frolick.

Company and cards at home, parties by land and water abroad, and what they call "doing something," that is, racketing about from morning to night, are occupations, I find, that wear out my spirits.

Gray, Lett. to Dr. Clarke, (1760.)

He got his illness, not by scampering, racket- ing, and riding post, as I had supposed, but by going with ladies to Vauxhall.

Gray, Lett. to Mason, (1761.)

RA'CKETY.* adj. [from racket.] Making a noise. A low word.

RA'CKING.* n. s. [from the noun.]

1. Torture on a rack.

The persecutions—were usually burnings, rackings, and wasting away their lives in miserable imprisonments. More on the Sev. Churches, p. 84.

2. Torture of mind: as, the rackings of conscience.

3. Process of stretching cloth on a rack to dry.

4. Act of drawing off liquors from the lees.

RA'CKING-Pace. n. s.

Racking-pace of a horse is the same as an amble, only that it is a swifter time, and a shorter tread; and though it does not rid so much ground, yet it is something easier. Farrier's Dict.

RA'CKLESS.* adj. Careless. Our northern word for reckless. See RECKLESS.

RACKOON. n. s.

The rackoon is a New England animal, like a badger, having a tail like a fox, being clothed with a thick and deep fur: it sleeps in the day-time in a hollow tree, and goes out a-nights, when the moon shines, to feed on the sea-side, where it is hunted by dogs.

Bailey.

RA'CY.† adj. [perhaps from *ray*s, Spanish, a root. Dr. Johnson.—Germ.
Suev. ras, ræss, quod acri est sapore.
Serenius.] Strong; flavorful; tasting of the soil.

Rich racy verses in which we
The soil, from which they come, taste, smell, and
see. Cowley.

From his brain that Helicon distil,
Whose racy liquor did his offspring fill. Denham.

The cyder at first is very luscious, but if ground more early, it is more racy. Mortimer.

The hospitable sage, in sign
Of social welcome, mix'd th' racy wine,
Late from the mellowing cask restor'd to light,
By ten long years refin'd, and rosy bright. Pope.

RAD.† The old pret. and part. of read.

In R. of Gloucester, and Chaucer, it is used for advised.

But never let th' ensample of the bad
Offend the good: for good, by paragon
Of evil, may more notably be rad.

Spenser, F. Q. iii. ix. 2.

Who, when as each of other had a sight,
They knew themselves, and both their persons rad.

Spenser, F. Q. vi. i. 4.

RAD.

Rad, red, and rod, differing only in dialect, signify counsel; as Conrad, powerful or skillful in counsel; Ethelred,
a noble counsellor; Rodbert, eminent for counsel: Eubulus and Thrasybulus have almost the same sense. Gibson.

TO RADDLE.* v. a. [ppæb, Sax. fascia,
a band; ppæbian, ppædian, to wreath,
to bind together.] To twist together. Mr.
Tooke and Mr. Malone both cite the following example.

With the help of these tools they were so very handy, that they came at last to build up their huts or houses very handsomely; raddling or working it up like basket-work all the way round.

Defoe, Robinson Crusoe.

RA'DDLE.* n. s. [from the verb.] A long stick used in hedging; a Kentish word, according to Pegge, for what in other places is called a raddling.

A raddile hedge is a hedge of pleached or twisted twigs or boughs. H. Tooke.

RA'DDOCK.† See RUDDOCK.

RA'DIANCE.† n. s. [radiare, Lat.] Spark-
RA'DIANCY.† ling lustre; glitter.

By the sacred radiance of the sun,

By all the operations of the orbs,
Here I disclaim all my paternal care.

Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Whether there be not too high an apprehension above its natural radiancy, is not without just doubt; however it be granted a very splendid gem, and whose sparkles may somewhat resemble the glances of fire. Brown, Vulg. Err.

The son
Girt with omnipotence, with radiance crown'd
Of majesty divine. Milton, P. L.
A glory surpassing the sun in its greatest radi-ancy. Burnet.

RADIANT. adj. [radians, Lat.] Shining; brightly sparkling; emitting rays.

There was a sun of gold radiant upon the top, and before, a small cherub of gold with wings displayed. Bacon.

Mark what radiant state she spreads,
In circle round her shining throne,
Shooting her beams like silver threads,
This, this is she alone. Milton, Arcades.
Virtue could see to do what virtue would
By her own radiant light, though sun and moon
Were in the flat sea sunk. Milton, Comus.

RADIANTLY. adv. [from radiant.] With glitter; with sparkling lustre.

TO RADIATE. v. n. [radio, Lat.] To emit rays; to shine; to sparkle.

Vices in kings are like those spots the moon
Bears in her body, which so plain appear
To all the world: so virtues shine more clear
In them, and radiate like the sun at noon.

Howell, Verses pref. to Ld. Herbert's Ven. VIII.
Though with wit and parts their possessors could never engage God to send forth his light and his truth; yet now that revelation hath disclosed them, and that he hath been pleased to make them radiate in his word, men may recollect those scatter'd divine beams, and kindling with them the topics proper to warm our affections, enflame holy zeal. Boyle.

Light radiates from luminous bodies directly to our eyes, and thus we see the sun or a flame; or it is reflected from other bodies, and thus we see a man or a picture. Locke.

TO RADIATE. v. a. To enlighten; to fill with brightness.

That glorious light which continually, with un-wearing beams, did radiate the souls of his faithful auditory.

Dr. Hewitt, Nine Serms. Pref. (1658, or 1659.)
Soon the splendid morn again
Shall radiate all the firmamental plain.

Woty, Ode to Evening.
RADIATED. adj. [radiatus, Lat.] Adorned with rays.

The radiated head of the phoenix gives us the meaning of a passage in Ausonius. Addison.

RADIATION. n. s. [radiatio, Lat. radiation,
Fr.]

1. Beamy lustre; emission of rays.

We have perspective houses, where we make demonstrations of all lights and radiations, and of all colours. Bacon.

Should I say I liv'd darker than were true,
Your radiation can all clouds subdue,
But one; 'tis best light to contemplate you.

Donne.
2. Emission from a centre every way.

Sound parallel to in many things with the light, and radiation of things visible. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

RADICAL. adj. [radical, Fr. from radix,
Lat.]

1. Primitive; original.

The differences, which are secondary and proceed from these radical differences, are, plants are all figurate and determinate, which inanimate bodies are not. Bacon.

Such a radical truth, that God is, springing up together with the essence of the soul, and previous to all other thoughts, is not pretended to by religion. Bentley.

2. Implanted by nature.

The emission of the loose and adventitious moisture doth betray the radical moisture, and carrieth it for company. Bacon.

If the radical moisture of gold were separated, it might be contrived to burn without being consumed. Wilkins.

The sunbeams render the humours hot, and dry up the radical moisture. Arbuthnot.

3. Serving to origination.

RADICALITY. n. s. [from radical.] Origination.

There may be equivocal seeds and hermaphroditical principles, that contain the radicality and power of different forms; thus, in the seeds of wheat, there lieth obscurely the seminality of darnel. Brown, Vulg. Err.

RADICALLY. adv. [from radical.] Originally; primitively.

It is no easy matter to determine the point of death in insects, who have not their vitalities radically confined unto one part.

Brown, Vulg. Err.
These great orbs thus radically bright,
Primitive founts, and origins of light,
Enliven worlds deny'd to human sight. Prior.

RADICALNESS. n. s. [from radical.] The state of being radical.

TO RADICATE. v. a. [radicatus, from radix, Lat.] To root; to plant deeply and firmly.

Meditation will radicate these seeds, fix the transient gleam of light and warmth, confirm resolutions of good, and give them a durable consistence in the soul. Hammond.

Nor have we let fall our pen upon discouragement of unbelief, from radicated beliefs, and points of high prescription. Brown, Vulg. Err.

If the object stays not on the sense, it makes no impression enough to be remembered; but if it be repeated there, it leaves plenty enough of these images behind it, to strengthen the knowledge of the object: in which radicated knowledge, if the memory consist, there would be no need of reserving those atoms in the brain.

Glanville, Defence.

RADICATE. adj. [from the verb.] Deeply infixed.

Every pious action leaves a certain tincture or disposition upon the soul, which, being seconded by actions of the same nature, whether by the superaddition of new degrees, or a more radicate fixation of the same, grows at length into a habit, or quality, of the force and energy of a second nature.

South.

RADICATION. n. s. [radication, Fr. from radicate.] The act of taking root and fixing deep.

They that were to plant a church, were to deal with men of various inclinations, and of different habits of sin, and degrees of radication of those habits; and to each of these some proper application was to be made to cure their souls.

Hammond on Fundamentals.

RADICLE. n. s. [radicule, Fr. from radix,
Lat.]

Radicle is that part of the seed of a plant, which, upon its vegetation, becomes its root. Quincy.

RADISH. n. s. [præbic, Sax. radis, raifort, Fr. raphanus, Lat.] A root, commonly eaten raw. Miller.

If I fought not with fifty of them, I am a bunch of radish. Shakspeare, Hen. IV. P. I.

Yet euphrasy may not be left unsung,
That gives dim eyes to wander leagues around;
And pungent radish, biting infiant's tongue,
And plantain ribb'd, that heats the reaper's wound.

Shenstone, Schoolmistress.

RADIUS. n. s. [Lat.]

1. The semi-diameter of a circle.

2. A bone of the fore-arm, which accompanies the ulna from the elbow to the wrist.

RADIX. n. s. [Lat.] The root.

As theirs [the Arabians'] is still a living language, it may be made very instrumental in illustrating the present Hebrew; since so many of the radixes, which are lost in the one, are still preserved in the other. Student, (1750,) vol. i. p. 42.

The true sense and meaning of words that are but once, or very rarely, used in a dead language, must be discovered, either from their derivation from some particular radix; or from the import of the passage, which leaves us no room to doubt of the sense of the word which is necessary to complete the context.

Filkington, Rem. on Script. (1759,) p. 80.

TO RAFF. v. a. [raffer, Fr. to catch, or snatch; also, to scrape. Cotgrave.] To sweep; to huddle; to take hastily without distinction.

Their causes and effects I thus raff up together.

Carew.

RAFF. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A confused heap; a jumble.

The synod of Trent was convened to settle a raff of errors and superstitions.

Barrow on the Unity of the Church.

2. A low fellow. Raff-raff, the mob. Norfolk. Grose. See RIFF-RAFF.

RAFF-MERCHANT. n. s. A timber-merchant; a raft-merchant. This corruption is common in Yorkshire, and other parts of the north.

RAFFLE. n. s. [Dr. Johnson barely notifies the Fr. word raffle, deriving it from raffler, to snatch. The verb, however, is from the substantive, an old word in that language for "a game at three dice, wherein he that throws all three alike, wins whatsoever is set," according to Cotgrave; with which intelligence Dr. Johnson was unacquainted.
The word is also very old in our language: "Now cometh hasardrie with his apertenautes, as tables and raffles, of which cometh deceit." Chaucer, Persones Tale.] A species of game or lottery, in which many stake a small part of the value of some single thing, in consideration of a chance to gain it.

The toy, brought to Rome in the third triumph of Pompey, being a pair of tables for gaming, made of two precious stones, three foot broad,
and four foot long, would have made a fine raffle.

Arbuthnot on Coins.

TO RAFFLE. v. n. [from the noun.] To cast dice for a prize, for which every one lays down a stake.

The stranger weeds, and blossoms, as before,
In all the fruitless fopperies of life;
Presents her weed, well-fancied, at the ball,
And raffles for the death's-head on the ring.

Young, Night Th. 5.

Letters from Hampstead give me an account, there is a late institution there, under the name of a raffling shop. Tatler, No. 59.

RAFT. n. s. [probably from ratiss, Lat.
Dr. Johnson.—Mr. H. Tooke considers raft as rafed, the past participle of the Sax. pepan, peapan, to rive, to leave, to tear away. Serenius refers it to the Icel. raþtr, roof, from repta, to roof.] A frame or float made by laying pieces of timber cross each other.

Where is that son
That floated with thee on the fatal raft? Shaks.
Fell the timber of yon lofty grove,
And form a raft, and build the rising ship. Pope.

RAFT.† pret. of reave, or raft.

1. Bereft.

Mischance —

That hath so raft us of our merit.

Spenser, Shep. Cal. Aug.

2. Rent; severed.

Half furious unto his foe he came, —

And stroke at her with more than manly force,

That from her body full of filthie sin,

He raft her hateful heade without remorse.

Spenser, F. Q. i. i. 24.

RAFTER.† n. s. [præcep, Sax. rafter, Dutch; corrupted, says Junius, from roof tree. Dr. Johnson. — See, however, what is said in the etymology of RAFT.] The secondary timbers of the house; the timbers which are let into the great beam.

The rafters of my body, bone,

Being still with you, the muscle, sinew and vein,

Which tile this house, will come again. Donne.

Shepherd,

I trust thy honest offer'd courtesy,

Which oft is sooner found in lowly sheds

With smoky rafters, than in tapestry halls.

Milton, Comus.

On them the Trojans cast

Stones, rafters, pillars, beams. Denham.

By Donaus, king of Egypt, when he fled from his brother Rameses, the use of shipping was first brought among the Grecians, who before that time knew no other way of crossing their narrow seas, but on beams or rafters tied to one another.

Heylin.

From the East, a Belgian wind

His hostile breath through the dry rafters sent;

The flames impell'd.

Dryden.

The roof began to mount aloft,

Aloft rose every beam and rafter,

The heavy wall climb'd slowly after. Swift, Miscell.

RAFTERED. adj. [from rafter.] Built with rafters.

No raftered roofs with dance and tabor sound,

No noon-tide bell invites the country round. Pope.

RAFTY.* adj. Damp; musty. Norfolk.

Grose.

In accidental coasts, the damps of the sea enter into the room of the departed sun: the oriental is famous for its dryness: the occidental mansions are, by their moisture, rafty.

Dr. Robinson, Endoxa, (1658), p. 146.

RAG.† n. s. [hpacob, torn, Saxon; παράς,

Gr. fissura.]

1. A piece of cloth torn from the rest; a tatter.

Cowls, hoods and habits, with their wearers tost,

And flutter'd into rags. Milton, P. L.

Rags are a great improvement of chalky lands.

Mortimer.

2. Any thing rent and tattered; worn out clothes: proverbially, mean dress.

Fathers that wear rags,

Do make their children blind;

But fathers that bear rags,

Shall see their children kind. Shaks. K. Lear.

They took from me

Both coat and cloake, and all things that might be

Gaine in my habit; and in place, put on

These tatter'd rags. Chapman.

Worn like a cloth,

Gnawn into rags by the devouring moth. Sandys.

Content with poverty, my soul I arm;

And virtue, though in rags, will keep me warm.

Dryden.

3. A fragment of dress.

He had first matter seen undrest;

He took her naked all alone,

Before one rag of form was on. Hudibras.

4. Mist; rack in the sky. [pec, Sax. See the sixth sense of LOWLY.] Craven

Dialect.

VOL. III.

5. A ragged bluish stone, of which whetstones are made. See RAGSTONE.

6. A vulgar person; one of very low rank: a contemptuous or ludicrous word. See TAG.

Upon the proclamation, they all came in, both tag and rag. Spenser on Ireland.

Out of my door, you witch, you rag,

You baggage! Shaks. M. W. of Windsor.

These overweening rags of France.

Shakspeare, Rich. III.

What are this pair? — the ragged rascals? —

Yes. — Meer rogues: —

One is his printer in disguise, and keeps

His press in a hollow tree; where, to conceal him,

He works by glow-worm light; the moon's too

open:

The other zealous rag is the compositor.

B. Jonson, Masques at Court.

To RAG. v. a. [raegia, Icel. to reproach, to accuse. See TO BULLIRAG. The Sax. prægian is the same.] To rate; to scold opprobriously: "I ragg'd him for it." North. Pegge.

RAGABASH.* n. s. See the etymon of RAGAMUFFIN.

RAGAMUFFIN.† n. s. [from rag and I know not what else. Dr. Johnson. — Adopted from the contemptuous usage of rag, as applied to persons; a meaning, which Dr. Johnson overpassed; or from ragged. Sir T. Herbert writes the word ragamuffian, Trav. p. 35. In the north of England, ragabash, or ragabtrash, (as Grose gives it,) is an idle ragged person. Formerly applied also to an ignorant one: "The most unalphabetical raggabashes that ever lived." Junius, Sin Stigm. 1639, p. 117.] A paltry mean fellow.

I have led my ragamuffins where they were pepper'd; there's not three of my hundred and fifty left alive; and they are for the town's end to beg during life. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

Shall we brook that paltry ass

And feeble scoundrel, Hudibras,

With that more paltry ragamuffin,

Ralpho, vapouring and huffing. Hudibras.

Attended with a crew of ragamuffins, she broke into his house, turned all things topsy-turvy, and then set it on fire. Swift.

RAGE. n. s. [rage, Fr.]

1. Violent anger; vehement fury.

This tiger-footed rage, when it shall find

The harm of uskann'd swiftness, will, too late,

Tie leaden pounds to's heels. Shaksp. Coriol.

Desire not

To allay my rages and revenges with

Your colder reasons. Shakspeare.

Argument more heroic than the rage

Of Turnus for Lavinia dispossess'd. Milton, P. L.

Torment, and loud lament, and furious rage.

Milton, P. L.

2. Vehemence or exacerbation of any thing painful.

The party hurt, who hath been in great rage of pain, till the weapon was re-anointed.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The rage of thirst and hunger now suppress.

Pope.

3. Enthusiasm; rapture.

Who brought green poetry to her perfect age,

And made that art which was a rage. Cowley.

4. Eagerness; vehemence of mind: as, a rage of money getting.

You purchase pain with all that joy can give,

And die of nothing but a rage to live. Pope.

Then may his soul its free-born rage enjoy,

Give deed to will, and ev'ry pow'r employ. Harte.

To RAGE.† v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To be in fury; to be heated with excessive anger.

Wine is a mocker, strong drink is raging; and whosoever is deceived thereby, is not wise.

Prov. xx. 1.

Why do the heathen rage?

Ps. ii. 1.

At this he inly rag'd, and as they talk'd,

Smote him into the midriff. Milton, P. L.

2. To ravage; to exercise fury.

Heart-rending news,

That death should license have to rage among

The fair, the wise, the virtuous. Waller.

3. To act with mischievous impetuosity.

justle one against another, seem like torches, and run like the lightnings. Nah. ii. 4.

The madding wheels of brazen chariots rag'd.

Milton, P. L.

After these waters had raged on the earth, they began to lessen and shrink, and the great fluctuations of this deep being quieted by degrees, the waters retired. Burnet.

4. To toy wantonly; to play. Obsolete.

And she began to play and rage,

As who saith, I am well enough.

Gower, Conf. Am. B. 1.

Rage he coulde, as it had bene a whelp.

Chaucer, C. T. Proh.

RA'GEFUL. adj. [rage and full.] Furious; violent.

This courtesy was worse than a bastinado to Zelmame; so that again with rageful eyes she had him defend himself; for no less than his life would answer it. Sidney.

A popular orator may represent virtues in so formidable appearances, and set out each virtue in so amiable a form, that the covetous person shall scatter most liberally his beloved idol, wealth, and the rageful person shall find a calm. Hammond.

RA'GERY.* n. s. [from the last sense of the verb.] Wantonness. Obsolete.

He was all colish, full of ragerie.

Chaucer, Merch. Tale.

RA'GGED.† adj. [from rag; hpacob, Saxon.]

1. Rent into tatters.

How like a prodigal,

The skarfed bark puts from her native bay,

Hugg'd and embraced by the trumpet wind;

How like the prodigal doth she return

With over-weather'd ribs and ragged sails,

Lean, rent, and beggar'd by the trumpet wind.

Shakspeare.

As I go in this ragged tattered coat, I am hunted away from the old woman's door by every barking cur. Arbutnot.

2. Uneven; consisting of parts almost discontinued.

The tops of the ragged rocks. Isaiah, ii. 21.

Unreverend raillings, or obscenity.

*Jordan's Poems, sign. * 3.*

These not succeeding, satire and railling was the next, and Martin Mar-prelate was the first presbyterian scribbler, who sanctified libels and scurrility to the use of the good old cause.

Dryden, Pref. to Religio Laici.

2. Rails which enclose a place: as, the iron railling.

RAI'LINGLY.* adv. [from railling.] Scoffingly; like a scoffer.

Huloet.

RAI'LLERY.† n. s. [raillerie, Fr. Probably Ben Jonson introduced this word into our language. Skinner calls it new, in his time: "vox super nostrâ etate civitate Anglicâ donata."] Slight satire; satirical merriment.

Let raillery be without malice or heat.

B. Jonson.

A quotation out of Hudibras shall make them treat with levity an obligation wherein their welfare is concerned as to this world and the next: raillery of this nature is enough to make the hearer tremble.

Addison, Freeholder.

Studies employed on low objects; the very naming of them is sufficient to turn them into raillery.

Addison.

To these we are solicited by the arguments of the subtle, and the railleries of the profane.

Rogers, Serm.

RAI'LLEUR.* n. s. [French.] A jester; a mocker; one who turns what is serious into ridicule. Not in use.

I hope what I have here said will prevail something with the wits and raillieurs of this age, to reconcile their opinions and discourses to these studies.

Spratt, Hist. R. Soc. p. 417.

The family of the raillieurs is derived from the same original with the philosophers. The founder of philosophy is confessed by all to be Socrates; and he was also the famous author of all irony.

Spratt, ut suprà.

RAI'MENT. n. s. [for arraiment, from array.] Vesture; vestment; dress; garment. A word now little used but in poetry.

His raiments, though mean, received handsomeness by the grace of the wearer. Sidney.

O Protheus, let this habit make thee blush!
Be thou asham'd, that I have took upon me
Such an immodest raiment.

Shakespeare.

Living, both food and raiment she supplies.

Dryden.

You are to consider them as the servants and instruments of action, and so give them food, and rest, and raiment, that they may be strong and healthful to do the duties of a charitable, useful, pious life. Law.

TO RAIN.† v. n. [penian, Saxon; regen, Dutch; riignan, Goth. to rain, rign, rain.]

1. To fall in drops from the clouds.

Like a low-hung cloud, it rains so fast,
That all at once it falls. Dryden, Kn. Tale.

The wind is south-west, and the weather louring, and like to rain. Locke.

2. To fall as rain.

The eye marvelleth at the whiteness thereof, and the heart is astonished at the raining of it.

Ecclesi. xliii. 18.

They sat them down to weep; nor only tears
Rain'd at their eyes, but high winds rose within.

Milton, P. L.

3. It RAINS. The water falls from the clouds.

That which serves for gain,
And follows rain for form,
Will pack when it begins to rain,
And leave thee in the storm. Shaks. K. Lear.

To RAIN † v. a.

1. To pour down as rain.
It rain'd down fortune, show'ring on your head. Shakspeare.

Rain sacrificial whisp'rings in his ear,
Make sacred even his stirrup. Shaks. Timon.
He opened the doors of heaven, and had rained down manna upon them to eat. Ps. lxxviii. 24.
I will rain upon him, and upon his hands, an overflowing rain. Ezek. xxxviii. 22.
Israel here had famish'd, had not God

RAIN † n. s. [pen, Saxon; riġn, Icel. and Goth.]

1. The moisture that falls from the clouds.
When shall we three meet again;
In thunder, lightning, or in rain? Shakspeare.
With strange rains, hails, and showers were they persecuted. Wisd. xvi. 16.

The lost clouds pour
Into the sea an useless shower,
And the vex sailors curse the rain,
For which poor farmers pray'd in vain. Waller.
Rain is water by the heat of the sun divided into very small parts ascending in the air, till encountering the cold, it be condensed into clouds, and descends in drops. Ray.

2. Any shower.
The fair from high the passing pomp behold;
A rain of flowers is from the windows roll'd.
Dryden, Pal. and Arcite.

3. A furrow, or the lower part of the ridge, in some parts of England.

They reaped the corn that grew in the raime to serve that turn, as the corn in the ridge was not readie. Wynne's Hist. of the Guedir Family, p. 87.

RAINBEAT * adj. [rain and beat.] Injured
by rain.

Figures half obliterate
In rain-beat marble, near to the church-gate,
Upon a cross-legg'd tomb. Bp. Hall, Sat. iv. 3.

RAINBOW. n. s. [rain and bow.] The iris;
the semicircle of various colours which appears in showery weather.

Casting of the water in a most cunning manner, makes a perfect rainbow, not more pleasant to the eye than to the mind, so sensibly to see the proof of the heavenly iris. Sidney.
To add another hue unto the rainbow. Shaks.
The rainbow is drawn like a nymph with large wings dispreid in the form of a semicircle, the feathers of sundry colours. Peacham.

They could not be ignorant of the promise of God never to drown the world, and the rainbow before their eyes to put them in mind of it.
Brown, Vulg. Err.

This rainbow never appears but where it rains in the sunshine, and may be made artificially by spouting up water, which may break aloft, and scatter into drops, and fall down like rain: for the sun, shining upon these drops, certainly causes the bow to appear to a spectator standing in a true position to the rain and sun: this bow is made by refraction of the sun's light in drops of falling rain.
Newton, Opt.

The dome's high arch reflects the mingled blaze,
And forms a rainbow of alternate rays. Pope.
Gay rainbow silks her mellow charms infold,
And nought of Lyce but herself is old. Young.

RAINDEER † n. s. [aphanar, Saxon; rangifer,
Latin.] A deer with large horns, which, in the northern regions, draws sledges through the snow.

It is a custom with the northern lovers to divert themselves with a song, whilst they journey through the fenny moors to pay a visit to their mistresses.

This is addressed by the lover to his raindeer, which is the creature that in that country supplies the want of horses. Spect. No. 406.

RAININESS. n. s. [from rainy.] The state of being showery.

RAIN-WATER. n. s. [rain and water.] Water not taken from springs, but falling from the clouds.

Court holy water in a dry house, is better than the rain-water out o' doors. Shakspeare, K. Lear.
We took distilled rain-water. Boyle.
Rain-water is to be preferred before spring-water.
Mortimer.

RAIN † n. s. [from rain; penig, Saxon.]
Showery; wet; moist.

Our guyness and our gilt are all besmirch'd,
With rainy marching in the painful field.
Shakspeare, Hen. V.

A continual dropping in a very rainy day, and a contentious woman, are alike. Prov. xxvii. 13.
To wail the day and weep the weary night,
With rainy eie and sighes cannot be told.
Mir. for Mag. p. 452.

Why drop thy rainie eyes,
And sullen clouds hang on thy heave brow?
P. Fletcher, Pisc. Ecl. iv. 1.

RAIP * n. s. [Sueth. refwa, formerly repwa, to measure the land, from rep, a rope, with which the measurement was anciently made. Serenius.] A rod to measure ground. Dict. Rust.

To RAISE † v. a. [resa, Swedish; reiser,
Danish; reisa, Icel. raisjan, Goth.]

1. To lift; to heave.
The elders went to raise him up from the earth.
2 Sam. xii.
Such a bulk as no twelve bards could raise,
Twelve star'ling bards of these degen'rate days.
Pope.

2. To set upright: as, he raised a mast.

3. To erect; to build up.
Take his carcass down from the tree, cast it at the entering of the gate, and raise thereon a heap of stones. Jos. viii.

4. To exalt to a state more great or illutrious.

Counsellors may manage affairs, which nevertheless are far from the ability to raise and amplify an estate. Bacon.

Thou so pleas'd,
Canst raise thy creature to what highth thou wilt
Of union. Milton, P. L.

5. To amplify; to enlarge.
That eyeless head of thine was first fram'd flesh,
To raise my fortunes. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

6. To increase in current value.
The plate-pieces of eight were raised three-pence in the piece. Temple, Miscell.

7. To elevate; to exalt.
The Persians gazing on the sun,
Admir'd how high 'twas plac'd, how bright it shone;
But as his pow'r was known, their thoughts were rais'd,
And soon they worshipp'd, what at first they prais'd.
Prior.

8. To advance; to promote; to prefer.
This gentleman came to be raised to great titles.
Clarendon.

9. To excite; to put in action.
He raiseth the stormy wind. Ps. cvii. 28.
He might taint

The animal spirits, that from pure blood arise, Thence raise distemper'd thoughts. Milton, P. L.
Gods encountering gods, Jove encouraging them with his thunders, and Neptune raising his tempests. Pope.

10. To excite to war or tumult; to stir up.
He first rais'd head against usurping Richard.
Shakspeare.

They neither found me in the temple disputing with any man, neither raising up the people.

Æneas then employs his pains
In parts remote to raise the Tuscan swains. Dryd.

11. To rouse; to stir up.
They shall not awake, nor be raised out of their sleep. Job.

12. To give beginning of importance to:
as, he raised the family.

13. To bring into being.
One hath ventur'd from the deep to raise
New troubles. Milton, P. L.
God vouchsafes to raise another world
From him. Milton.

14. To call into view from the state of separate spirits.
The spirits of the deceased, by certain spells and infernal sacrifices, were raised. Sandys, Journey.
These are spectres the understanding raises to itself, to flatter its own laziness. Locke.

15. To bring from death to life.
He was delivered for our offences, and raised again for our justification. Rom. iv. 25.
It is sown in dishonour, it is raised in glory;
it is sown in weakness, it is raised in power.
1 Cor. xv. 23.

16. To occasion; to begin.
Raise not a false report. Ez. xxiii. 1.
The common ferryman of Egypt, that wafted over the dead bodies from Memphis, was made by the Greeks to be the ferryman of hell, and solemn stories raised after him. Brown.

Wantonness and pride
Raise out of friendship hostile deeds in peace.
Milton.

17. To set up; to utter loudly.
All gaze, and all admire, and raise a shouting sound. Dryden.
Soon as the prince appears, they raise a cry.
Dryden.

18. To collect; to obtain a certain sum.
Britain, once despis'd, can raise
As ample sums, as Rome in Cæsar's days.
Arbutnot.

I should not thus be bound,
If I had means, and could but raise five pound.
Gay.

19. To collect; to assemble; to levy.
He out of smallest things could without end
Have rais'd incessant armies. Milton, P. L.

20. To give rise to.
Higher argument
Remains, sufficient of itself to raise
That name. Milton, P. L.

21. To procure to be bred or propagated:
as he raised sheep; he raised wheat where none grew before.

22. To raise is, in all its senses, to elevate from low to high, from mean to illustrious, from obscure to famous, or to do something that may be by an easy figure referred to local elevation.

23. To RAISE paste. To form paste into pies without a dish.
Miss Liddy can dance a jig, and raise paste.
Spectator.

24. To RAISE the siege. To relinquish the attack of a place, and the works thrown up against it. This sense is modern; and seems to contradict, as Mr. Malone also observes, the assertion of Dr. Johnson under the 22d meaning; this implying extinction, putting an end to;
unless the action, raising a siege, be interpreted the raising up and departing of those who had sat down before the place.

RAISER. n. s. [from raise.] One that raises.

And drinke the dark-deepe water of the spring,
Bright Arethusa, the most nourishing
Raiser of hearts. Chapman.

Then shall stand up in his estate a raiser of taxes. Dan. xi. 20.

They that are the first raisers of their houses,
are most indulgent towards their children. Bacon.

He that boasts of his ancestors, the founders and raisers of a family, doth confess that he hath less virtue. Ep. Taylor.

Raiser of human kind! by nature cast,
Naked and helpless. Thomson, Autumn.

RAISIN. n. s. [racemus, Lat. raisin, Fr.]

Raisins are the fruit of the vine suffered to remain on the tree till perfectly ripened, and then dried: grapes of every kind, preserved in this manner, are called raisins, but those dried in the sun are much sweeter and pleasanter than those dried in ovens; they are called jar raisins, from their being imported in earthen jars.

Hill, Mat. Medica.

Dried grapes or raisins, boiled in a convenient proportion of water, make a sweet liquor, which being sometimes distilled, afford an oil and spirit much like the raisins themselves. Boyle.

RAKE.† n. s. [paca, pace, Sax. raeche,
Dutch; the participle of the Goth. rikjan, to collect; to draw together, to rake together, Mr. H. Tooke.]

1. An instrument with teeth, by which the ground is divided, or light bodies are gathered up.

At Midsommer down with the brembles and brakes,
And after abroad with thy forks and thy rakes. Tusser.

O that thy bounteous Deity wou'd please
To guide my rake upon the chinking sound
Of some vast treasure hidden under ground. Dryden.

He examines his face in the stream, combs his rueful locks with a rake. Garth.

2. [Racaille, Fr. the low rabble; or rebel,
Dutch, a worthless cur-dog. See RAKE-HELL; of which this meaning seems to be the abbreviation.] A loose, disorderly, vicious, wild, gay, thoughtless fellow; a man addicted to pleasure.

The next came with her son, who was the greatest rake in the place, but so much the mother's darling, that she left her husband for the sake of this graceless youth. Addison.

Rakes hate sober grave gentlewomen. Arbutnot.
Men, some to business, some to pleasure take;
But every woman is at heart a rake. Pope.

The sire saw smiling his own virtues wake;
The mother begg'd the blessing of a rake. Pope.
To dance at publick places, that fops and rakes might admire the fineness of her shape, and the beauty of her motions. Lav.

3. As lean as a RAKE. Dr. Johnson considers rake as a cur-dog, and therefore this expression to mean, as lean as a dog too worthless to be fed. Mr.
Stevens believes the proverb to owe its origin simply to the thin taper form of the instrument made use of by hay-makers; citing Chaucer and Spenser as thus using the expression; yet admitting Stanhurst and Churchyard to favour
Dr. Johnson's supposition. Rake for a dog is old in our language: Sax. paec;
Icel. racke. See RACH.

As lene was his hors as is a rake.

His body lean and meagre as a rake. Chaucer, C. T. Pro.

A maigre leane rake. Spenser, F. Q.

As lene as I rake in every rib. Stanhurst, Tr. of Virgil, (1582.)

Churchyard, Disc. of Man's Life, (1593.)

TO RAKE.† v. a. [pacian, Sax.]

1. To gather with a rake.

Mow barlie, and rake it, and set it on cocks. Tusser.

Harrows' iron teeth shall every where Rake helmets up. May, Virgil's Georgicks.

If it be such a precious jewel as the world takes it for, yet they are forced to rake it out of dung-hills; and accordingly the apostle gives it a value suitable to its extract. South.

2. To clear with a rake.

As they rake the green-appearing ground,
The russet hay-cock rises. Thomson.

3. To draw together by violence.

An eager desire to rake together whatsoever might prejudice or any way hinder the credit of apocryphal books, hath caused the collector's pen so to run as it were on wheels, that the mind which should guide it had no leisure to think. Hooker.

What piles of wealth hath he accumulated!

How, 't the name of thrift, Shaks. Hen. VIII.

Does he rake this together? A sport more formidable

Had rak'd together village rabble. Hudibras.

Ill-gotten goods are squandered away with as little conscience as they were raked together. L'Estrange.

4. To scour; to search with eager and vehement diligence.

The statesman rakes the town to find a plot. Swift.

5. To heap together and cover. To rake the fire is still used: that is, to cover live embers, by raking ashes over them; or to heap small coals on the fire, that it may burn all night.

Here, in the sands,
Thou I'll rake up, the post unsatisfied
Of murderous lechers. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

The blazing wood may to the eye seem great,
But 'tis the fire rak'd up that has the heat,
And keeps it long. Suckling.

6. To pass swiftly and violently over; to scour.

Thy thunder's roarings rake the skies;
Thy fatal lightning swiftly flies. Sandys, Ps. lxxvii.

7. To cannonade a ship on the stern or head, so that the balls shall scour the whole length of the decks: as, the ship was raked fore and aft.

TO RAKE.† v. n.

1. To search; to grope. It has always an idea of coarseness or noisomeness.

If you hide the crown
Ev'n in your hearts, there will he rake for it. Shakspeare.

It is as offensive, as to rake into a dunghill. South.

Another finds the way to dye in grain;
Or for the golden ore in rivers rakes, Dryden, Pers.

One is for raking in Chaucer for antiquated words, which are never to be revived, but when sound or significancy is wanting. Dryden.

After having made essays into it, as they do for coal in England, they rake into the most promising parts. Addison.

2. To pass with violence.

When Pas hand reached him to take,
The fox on knees and elbows tumbled down:
Pas could not stay, but over him did rake,
And crown'd the earth with his first touching crown. Sidney.

The Belgians tack upon our rear,
And raking chase-guns through our sterns they send. Dryden.

3. To play the part of a rake.
Women hid their necks, and veil'd their faces,
Nor rompd, nor rak'd, nor star'd at publick places. Shenstone, Epit. to Cleome.

RAKEHELL.† n. s. [Of this word the etymology is doubtful: as it is now written, it is apparently derived from rake and hell, and may aptly represent a wretch whose life is passed in places of lewdness and wickedness: Skinner derives it from racaille, French, the rabble;
Junius, from rekel, Dutch, a mongrel dog. Dr. Johnson.—I should rather suppose it to be adopted from the old adjective rakel, hasty, rash, which Chaucer uses, as also rakelness for rashness;
of which the origin, however, is not known; especially as the oldest use of rakehell seems to be in the form of an adjective; though Dr. Johnson has given it in the example from Spenser's View of Ireland as a substantive. Sere-nius refers this word to the Icel. rakalli, satanas, calumniator; Suet. rakel, furcifer.] A wild, worthless, dissolute, debauched, sorry fellow.

The king, when he heard of Perkins's siege of Exeter, said in sport, that the king of rakehells was landed in the west, and that he hoped now to see him. Bacon.

A rakehell of the town, whose character is set off with excessive prodigality, profaneness, intemperance, and lust, is rewarded with a lady of great fortune to repair his own, which his vices had almost ruined. Swift.

RAKEHELL.* adj. Base; wild; outcast;
worthless.

Out of the fry of these rakehell horse-boys, growing up in knavery and villainy, are their kern continually supplied. Spenser on Ireland.

Amid their rakehell bands,
They spy'd a lady left all succourless,
Crying, and holding up her wretched hands
To him for aid, who long in vain their rage withstands. Spenser, F. Q.

RAKEHELLY. adj. [from rakehell.] Wild;
dissolute.

I scorn the rakehellly rout of our ragged rymers, which without learning boast, without judgement jangle, without reason rage and foam. Epist. Pref. to Spenser's Shep. Cal.

No breaking of windows or glasses for spite,
And spoiling the goods for a rakehellly prank. B. Jonson.

RAKER. n. s. [from rake.] One that rakes.

RAKESHAME.* n. s. [rake and shame.]
A base, rascally fellow. Kersey.

Tormentors, rooks, and rakeshames, sold to lucre. Milton, Of Ref. in Eng. B. 2.

RAKISH.† adj. [from rake.] Loose;
lewd; dissolute.

There seldom cap be peculiarity in the love of a rakish heart. Richardson, Clarissa.

The affectation of a rakish slovenly appearance in dress, implies a contempt of decency.

Burton, Gen. of Ld. Clarend. Hist. (1744), p. 40.

TO RALLY.† v. a. [rallier, Fr.]

1. To put disordered or dispersed forces into order.

With rallied arms to try what may be yet
Regain'd in heaven. Milton.

Publick arguing serves to whet the wits of hereticks, and by shewing weak parts of their doctrines, prompts them to rally all their sophistry to fortify them with fallacy. Decay of Chr. Piety.

Luther deters men from solitariness; but he does not mean from a sober solitude, that rallies our scattered strengths, and prepares us against any new encounters from without. Atterbury.

2. [Railer, Fr. ralla, Su. Goth.] To treat with slight contempt; to treat with satirical merriment.

Honeycomb has not lived a month, for these forty years, out of the smoke of London, and rallies me upon a country life. Addison, Spect.

If after the reading of this letter, you find yourself in a humour rather to rally and ridicule, than to comfort me, I desire you would throw it into the fire. Addison.

Stephon had long confess'd his am'rous pain, Which gay Corinna rally'd with disdain. Gay.

To RALLY.† v. n.

1. To come together in a hurry.

If God should shew this perverse man a new heaven and a new earth, springing out of nothing, he might say, that innumerable parts of matter chanced just then to rally together, and to form themselves into this new world. Tillotson.

2. To come again into order.

The Grecians rally, and their pow'r's unite; With fury charge us. Dryden, Æn.

3. To exercise satirical merriment.

They writ, and rallied, and rhymed, and sung, and said, and said nothing. Swift, Tale of a Tub, § 2.

RALLY.* n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Act of putting disordered or dispersed forces into order.

2. Exercise of satirical merriment.

RAM.† n. s. [pam, Saxon; ram, German; perhaps from the adjective ram, Germ. ramr, Goth. robustus, strong. Wachter, and Serenius.]

1. A male sheep; in some provinces, a tup.

The ewes, being rank, turned to the rams. Shakspeare.

An old sheep-whistling rogue, a ram tender. Shakspeare.

Much like a well grown bel-weather, or felted ram he shews. Chapman.

You may draw the bones of a ram's head hung with strings of beads and ribands. Peachment on Drawings.

A ram their offering, and a ram their meat. Dryden.

2. Aries, the vernal sign.

The ram having pass'd the sea, serenely shines, And leads the year. Creech, Manilius.

3. An instrument with an iron head to batter walls.

Let not the piece of virtue, which is set betwixt us, as the cement of our love, To keep it builded, be the ram to batter The fortress of it. Shaks. Ant. and Cleop.

Judas calling upon the Lord, who without any rams or engines of war did cast down Jericho, gave a fierce assault against the walls. 2 Mac. xii. 15.

To RAM. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To drive with violence, as with a battering ram.

Ram thou thy faithful tidings in mine ears, That long time have been barren. Shakspeare.

Having no artillery nor engines, and finding that he could do no good by ramming with logs of timber, he set one of the gates on fire. Bacon, Hen. VII.

The charge with bullet, or paper wet and hard stopped, or with powder alone rammed in hard, maketh no great difference in the loudness of the report. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Here many poor people roll in vast balls of snow, which they ram together, and cover from the sun shine. Addison.

2. To fill with any thing driven hard together.

As when that devilish iron engine wrought In deepest hell, and fram'd by furies skill, With windy nitre and quick sulphur freight, And ram'm'd with bullet round, ordain'd to kill. Spenser.

He that proves the king, To him will we prove loyal; till that time, Have we ram'm'd up our gates against the world. Shakspeare.

They mined the walls, laid the powder, and rammed the mouth, but the citizens made a countermine. Hayward.

This into hollow engines, long and round, Thick ram'm'd, at th' other bore with touch of fire Dilated and infuriate, shall send forth dash Such implements of mischief, as shall dash To pieces. Milton, P. L.

A ditch drawn between two parallel furrows, was filled with some sound materials, and rammed to make the foundation solid. Arbutnot on Coins.

RAM.* adj. [ramer, Su. Goth. fœtidus.] Stinking. As ram as a fox. A northern word; and indeed a common low expression in other parts.

RAMAGE.† n. s. Branches of trees; from ramus, Lat. a branch. Dr. Johnson.— This old word, of which Dr. Johnson has produced no example, had a more extensive meaning; and is French. "Ramage, boughs, branches, or any thing that belongs thereto; hence the warbling of birds recorded, or learnt, as they sit on boughs: also kindred, or lineage, or a branch of a pedigree." Cotgrave. In the sense of the word, as applicable to birds, an old poet has elegantly employed it.

My lute, be as thou wast, when thou didst grow With thy green mother in some shady grove; When immelodious winds but made thee move, And birds on thee their ramage did bestow. Drammond, Sonn. to his Lute.

RAMAGE.* adj. [old Fr. ramage, savage; and Cotgrave, Ramage, "of or belonging to branches; also ramage, hagar, wild, homely, rude."] Wild; shy.

He is not wise, ne sage, No more than is a gote ramage. Chaucer, Rom. R. 5384.

Nor must you expect from high antiquity the distinctions of eyess and ramage hawks. Sir T. Brown, Miscell. p. 118.

To RAMAGE. v. a. See To RUMMAGE.

To RAMBLE.† v. n. [rammelen, Dutch, to rove loosely in lust; ramb, Swedish, to rove. Dr. Johnson.— The word is most probably an abbreviation of the Lat. perambulo, to wander, to travel about.] To rove loosely and irregularly; to wander.

He that is at liberty to ramble in perfect darkness, what is his liberty better than if driven up and down as a bubble by the wind? Locke.

Chapman has taken advantage of an immeasurable length of verse, notwithstanding which, there is scarce any paraphrase so loose and rambling as his. Pope.

Never ask leave to go abroad, for you will be thought an idle rambling fellow. Swift, Direct. to Footmen.

O'er his ample sides the rambling sprays Luxuriant shoot. Thomson, Spring.

RAMBLE. n. s. [from the verb.] Wandering; irregular excursion.

This conceit puts us upon the ramble up and down for relief, till very weariness brings us at last to ourselves. L' Etrange.

Coming home after a short Christmas ramble, I found a letter upon my table. Swift.

She quits the narrow path of sense For a dear ramble through impertinence. Swift, Miscell.

RAMBLER. n. s. [from ramble.] Rover; wanderer.

Says the Rambler, we must e'en beat it out. L' Etrange.

RAMBLING.* n. s. [from ramble.] Wandering; irregular excursion.

Shame naturally contracts and unites, and thereby fortifies, the spirits; fixes the ramblings of fancy, and so reduces and gathers the man into himself. South, Serm.

His [Dryden's] digressions, and ramblings, which he himself says he learned of honest Montaigne, are interesting and amusing. Dr. Warton, Ess. on Pope.

RAMBOOZE. } n. s. A drink made of wine, RAMBUSE. } ale, eggs, and sugar in the winter time; or of wine, milk, sugar, and rosewater in the summer time. Bailey.

RAMMEKIN. } n. s. [ramequins, Fr.] In RAMMEQUINS. } cookery, small slices of bread covered with a farce of cheese and eggs. Bailey.

RAMENTAS. n. s. pl. [ramenta, Latin.] Scrapings; shavings. Dict.

RAMIFICATION. n. s. [ramification, Fr. from ramus, Lat.]

1. Division or separation into branches; the act of branching out.

By continuation of profane histories or other monuments kept together, the genealogies and ramifications of some single families to a vast extension may be preserved. Hale.

2. Small branches.

As the blood and chyle pass together through the ramifications of the pulmonary artery, they will be still more perfectly mixed; but if a pipe is divided into branches, and these again subdivided, the red and white liquors, as they pass through the ramifications, will be more intimately mixed; the more ramifications, the mixture will be the more perfect. Arbutnot.

To RAMIFY. v. a. [ramifier, Fr. ramus, and facio, Latin.] To separate into branches.

The mint, grown to have a pretty thick stalk, with the various and ramified roots, which it shot into the water, presented a spectacle not unpleasant to behold. Boyle.

To RAMIFY. v. n. To be parted into branches.

Asparagus affects the urine with a fetid smell, especially if cut when they are white; when they are older, and begin to ramify, they lose this quality. Arbutnot on Aliments.

RAMMER. n. s. [from ram.]

1. An instrument with which any thing is driven hard.

The master bricklayer must try the foundations with an iron crow and rammer, to see whether the foundations are sound. Mozon, Mech. En.

2. The stick with which the charge is forced into the gun.

A mariner loading a gun suddenly, while he was ramming in a cartridge, the powder took fire, and shot the rammer out of his hand. Wiseman, Surgery.

RAMMISH.† adj. [from ram.] Strong-scented. An old word, and well authorized; although Dr. Johnson could find no example of it.

For all the world they stinken as a gote;
Their savor is so rammish, and so hote,
That though a man a mile from them be,
The savour will enfect him, trusteth me!

Chaucer, Chon. Yeom. Tale.
Rammish stench, blood, poison.

Mir. for Mag. p. 109.
Savanarola discommends goat's flesh; and so doth Bruerinus, calling it a filthy beast, and rammish; and therefore supposeth it will breed rank and filthy substance.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 65.
RAMMY.* adj. [from ram.] Like a ram; strong-scented.

Galen takes exception at mutton, but without question he means the rammy mutton which is in Turkey and Asia Minor.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. II. sect. 2.
RAMOUS. adj. [from ramus, Latin.] Branchy; consisting of branches.

Which vast contraction and expansion seems unintelligible, by feigning the particles of air to be springy and ramous, or rolled up like hoops, or by any other means than a repulsive power.

Newton, Opt.
A ramous efflorescence, of a fine white spar, found hanging from a crust of like spar, at the top of an old wrought cavern. Woodward on Foss.

To RAMP.† v. n. [rampen, French; to paw like a lion; ramper, Sax.]

1. To leap with violence; to rage.

When she cometh home, she rampeth in my face,
And cryeth, False coward! Chaucer, Monk's Prol.
Foaming tar, their bridles they would champ,
And trampling the fine element would fiercely rampe. Spenser.

Out of the thickest wood
A ramping lion rushed suddenly,
Hunting full greedily after savage blood. Spenser.
They gape upon me with their mouths; as a ramping and roaring lion. Ps. xxii. 13.
Upon a bull that deadly bellowed,
Two horrid lions ramp't, and seiz'd 'd tugg'd.

All which require a style not ramping, but passionately sedate and moving.

Philips, Theat. Poet. Pref.
2. To sport; to play; to romp.

Sporting the lion ramp'd; and in his paw
They dance in a round, cutting capers and ramping.
Swift, Descr. of an Irish Feast.

3. To climb as a plant.
The prelates would have St. Paul's words rampe one over another, as they use to climb into their livings and bishopricks.

Milton, Anim. Rem. Def. § 12.
Furnished with claspers and tendrils, they catch hold of them, and so ramping upon trees, they mount up to a great height. Ray on the Creation.

RAMP.† n. s. [from the verb.]

And nothing springs from what he sows. Waller.

The striker must be dense, and in its best velocity the angle which the missile is to mount by, if we will have it go to its furthest randon, must be the half of a right one; and the figure of the missile must be such, as may give scope to the air to bear it. Disby.

In the days of old the birds lived at randon, in a lawless state of anarchy; but in time they moved for the setting up of a king. L'Estrange, Fab.

Who could govern the dependance of one event upon another, if that event happened at randon, and was not cast into a certain relation to some foregoing purpose to direct? South, Serm.

'Tis one thing when a person of true merit is drawn as like as we can; and another, when we make a fine thing at randon, and persuade the next vain creature that 'tis his own likeness. Pope.

RANDOM. adj. Done by chance; roving without direction.

Virtue borrow'd but the arms of chance,
And struck a randon blow! 'twas fortune's work,
And fortune take the praise. Dryden.

And with rich spoil of ransacked chastity. Spenser.

RANSOM. † n. s. [rançon, Fr. Dr. Johnson. — Sueth. ant. ransun, lytrum, [price of redemption;] from ran, rapina, and M. Goth. saun, pretium redemptionis. Serenius. An e has been needlessly added to this word, that is, without the sanction of etymology or custom, by Dr. Johnson.] Price paid for redemption from captivity or punishment.

By his captivity in Austria, and the heavy ransom that he paid for his liberty, Richard was hindered to pursue the conquest of Ireland.

Davies on Ireland.
Ere the third dawning light
Return, the stars of morn shall see him rise,
The ransom paid, which man from death redeems,
His death for man. Milton, P. L.
Has the prince lost his army or his liberty?
Tell me what province they demand for ransom.

Denham.
This as a ransom Albemarle did pay,
For all the glories of so great a life. Dryden.
To adore that great mystery of divine love,
God's sending his only Son into this world to save sinners, and to give his life a ransom for them, would be noble exercise for the pens of the greatest wits. Tillotson.

The avenging power
Thus will persist, relentless in his ire,
Till the fair slave be render'd to her sire,
And ransom free restor'd to his abode. Dryden.
To RANSOM. v. a. [ranconner, Fr.] To redeem from captivity or punishment.

How is't with Titus Lartius?
— Condemning some to death and some to exile,
Ransoming him, or pitying, threatening the other.

Shakspeare.
I will ransom them from the grave, and redeem them from death. Hos. xiii. 14.

He'll dying rise, and rising with him raise
His brethren, ransom'd with his own dear life.

Milton, P. L.
RANSOMER. † n. s. [from ransom.] One that redeems.

O, ransomers and redeemer
Of all the world! Old Morality of Every Man.

RANSOMLESS. † adj. [from ransom.] Free from ransom.

Ransomless here we set our prisoners free,
Shakspeare.

Deliver him
Up to his pleasure ransomless and free. Shaks.
The rest, be free;
And, ransomless, return!

Beaum. and Fl. Prophets.
Such a scene of cloud and tempest as turns all to shipwreck without haven, or shore, but to a ransomless captivity. Milton, Tetrachordon.

To RANT. v. n. [randen, Dutch, to rave.]
To rave in violent or high-sounding language without proportionable dignity of thought.
VOL. III.

Look where my ranting host of the Garter comes; there is either liquor in his pate, or money in his purse, when he looks so merrily.

Shakspeare, M. W. Windsor.
Nay, an thou'lt mouth, I'll rant as well as thou.

Shakspeare.
They have attacked me; some with piteous moans, others grinning and only shewing their teeth, others ranting and hectoring, others scolding and reviling. Stillingfleet.

RANT. n. s. [from the verb.] High sounding language unsupported by dignity of thought.

Dryden himself, to please a frantick age,
Was forc'd to let his judgment stoop to rage,
To a wild audience he conform'd his voice,
Comply'd to custom, but not err'd through choice;
Deem then the people's, not the writer's sin,
Almansor's rage, and *rant*s of Maximin.

Granville.
This is a stoical rant, without any foundation in the nature of man or reason of things.

Atterbury, Pref.
RANTER. † n. s. [from rant.] A ranting fellow; one of a wretched sect called ranters.

Many there are which be ranters in chief,
Who do wear powder'd hair, though they want powder'd beef. Jordan's Poems, sign. † 2. b.
Hellish heresies, and atheous paradoxes: — one allows plurality or community of wives; another allows a man to divorce that wife he hath upon slight occasions, and to take another; one is a ranter, another is a seeker, a third is a shaker.

By. Hall, Rem. p. 161.
RA'NTIPOLE. adj. [This word is wantonly formed from rant.] Wild; roving;
rakish. A low word.

What at years of discretion, and comport yourself at this rantipole rate!

Congreve, Way of the World.
To RA'NTIPOLE. v. n. To run about wildly.
A low word.

The eldest was a termagant imperious wench;
she used to rantipole about the house, pinch the children, kick the servants, and torture the cats and dogs. Arbutnot.

RA'NTISM.* n. s. Tenets of the wretches called ranters.

Denying the eternal and immutable respects of things, frustrates all the noble essays of the mind or understanding of man. In the said denial are laid the foundations of rantism, debauchery, and all dissoluteness of life.

By. Rust, Disc. of Truth, § 11.
RA'NTY.* adj. [from rant.] Wild; mad.
Cumberland dialect.

RA'NULA. n. s. [Latin.]

Ranula is a soft swelling, possessing the salivals under the tongue: it is made by congestion, and its progress fillet up the space between the jaws, and maketh a tumour externally under the chin. Wiseman, Surgery.

RANUNCULUS. n. s. Crowfoot.

Ranunculuses excel all flowers in the richness of their colours: of them there is a great variety.
Mortimer.

RAP. † n. s. [rapp, Su. Goth. ictus.]

1. A quick smart blow; a knock. Huloet.
How comest thou to go with thy arm tied up?
Has old Lewis given thee a rap over thy fingers' ends? Arbutnot.

2. Counterfeit coin: a sort of cant term, perhaps from rapparee; which see.

It having been many years since copper half-pence or farthings were last coined in this kingdom, they have been for some time very scarce, and many counterfeits passed about under the name of raps. Swift, Drapier's Lett.

To RAP. † v. n. [hæppan, Sax. tangere; rapp, Su. Goth. ictus.] To strike with a quick smart blow; to knock.

Knock me at this gate,
And rap me well, or I'll knock your knave's pate.

Shakspeare.
Comes a dun in the morning, and raps at my door. Shenstone, Poet and Dun.

To RAP. † v. a.

1. To strike with a quick smart blow.
She rapp'd 'em o' the coxcombs with a stick.

Shakspeare, K. Lear.
Sometimes when a pert poe, upon some incidental advantage of differences risen amongst them, would be more busy than they deemed convenient in tampering with their affairs, they did rap his fingers. Barrow on the Pope's Supremacy.
With one great peal they rap the door,
Like footmen on a visiting day. Prior.

2. To RAP out. [rap, Dutch, quick; rape, old Engl. haste. Prompt. Parv.] To utter with hasty violence.

So saying, he rapped out a round oath or two.
Shelton, Tr. of D. Quixote, iv. 18.

He was provoked in the spirit of magistracy, upon discovering a judge, who rapped out a great oath at his footman. Addison.

To RAP. † v. a. [from rapio extra se, Lat.]
This word was, formerly, most frequently written rape.]

1. To affect with rapture; to strike with ecstasy; to hurry out of himself.

These are speeches of men, not comforted with the hope of that they desire, but rapped with admiration at the view of enjoyed bliss. Hooker.
Beholding the face of God, in admiration of so great excellency, they all adore him; and being rap't with the love of his beauty, they cleave inseparably for ever unto him. Hooker.

What thus raps you? are you well? Shaks.

The government I cast upon my brother,
And to my state grew stranger, being transported
And rap't in secret studies. Shakspeare.

You're rap't in some work, some dedication.

Shakspeare.

Circled me
With all their welcomes, and as cheerfully
Dispos'd their rap't minds, as if there they saw Their natural countrie. Chapman.

The rocks that did more high their foreheads raise

To his rap't eye. Chapman.

To rape the field with touches of his string.

Drayton, Ecl. 5.

Thy musick-strains to hear
More raps my soul, than when the swelling winds
On craggy rocks their whistling voices tear.

P. Fletcher, Poesies.

I'm rap't with joy to see my Marcia's tears.

Addison, Cato.

It is impossible duly to consider these things, without being rap't into admiration of the infinite wisdom of the divine Architect.

Chayne, Phil. Principles.

Rapt into future times, the bard began:

A Virgin shall conceive, a Virgin bear a Son! Pope.

Let heaven seize it, all at once 'tis fir'd,

Not touch'd, but rap't, not waken'd, but inspir'd.

Pope.

All things speak a God; but, in the small,
Men trace out him; in great, He seizes man;
Seizes, and elevates, and raps, and fills
With new inquiries. Young, Night Th. 9.

2. To snatch away.

He leaves the welkin way most beaten plain,
And rap't with whirling wheels, inflames the skyeen,
With fire not made to burn, but fairly for to shine.

Spenser.

From Oxford I was rapt by my nephew, Sir Edmund Bacon, to Redgrave.

Wotton, Rem. p. 322.

Underneath a bright sea flow'd
Of Jasper, or of liquid-pearl, whereon
Who after came from earth, sailing arriv'd
Wafted by angels, or flew o'er the lake
Rapt in a chariot drawn by fiery steeds.

Milton, P. L.

Standing on earth, not rapt above the pole.

Milton, P. L.

He could not expect to be rapt from thence into heaven.

Decay of Chr. Piety, p. 52.

3. To seize by violence.

What their fathers gave her, —
The sonnes rapt'd from her with a violent hand.

Mir. for Mag. p. 541.

Adult'rous Jour, the king of Mambant, rapt'd
Fair Josian his dear love.

Drayton.

4. To exchange; to truck. A low word. To RAP and rend. [more properly rap and ran; præpan, Saxon, to bind, and rana, Icelandic, to plunder.] To seize by violence.

Their husbands robb'd, and make hard shifts
To administer unto their gifts
All they could rap and rend and pilfer,
To scraps and ends of gold and silver.

Hudibras.

RAPACIOUS.† adj. [rapace, Fr. rapax, Lat.] Given to plunder; seizing by violence; ravenous.

Not rapacious of estates.

Bp. Taylor, Serm. (1651.) p. 287.

Well may thy Lord, appear'd,

Redeem thee quite from death's rapacious claim.

Milton, P. L.

Shall this prize,
Soon heighten'd by the diamond's circling rays,
On that rapacious hand for ever base?

Pope.

RAPACIOUSLY. adv. [from rapacious.] By rapine; by violent robbery.

RAPACIOUSNESS.† n. s. [from rapacious.] The quality of being rapacious.

At this time, then, many clergymen possessed six or more benefices, and their rapaciousness gave occasion to the canon.

Deen Slanh, and H. Wart. Def. of Plur. (1692.) p. 124.

One day they plundered, and the next they founded monasteries, as their rapaciousness or their scruples chanced to predominate.

Burke, Abridg. of Eng. Hist. iii. 6.

RAPACITY. n. s. [rapacitè, Fr. rapacitas, Lat. from rapax.] Addictedness to plunder; exercise of plunder; ravenousness.

Any of these, without regarding the pains of churchmen, grudge them those small remains of ancient piety, which the rapacity of some ages has scarce left to the church.

Sprat.

RAPE.† n. s. [rapt, Fr. raptus, Latin.] 1. Violent defloration of chastity.

You are both decypher'd

For villains mark'd with rape. Titus Andronicus.

Rape call you it, to seize my wife,

My true betrothed love? Titus Andronicus.

The parliament conceived, that the obtaining of women by force into possession, howsoever afterwards assent might follow by allurements, was but a rape drawn forth in length, because the first force drew on all the rest.

Bacon, Hen. VII.

Witness that night

In Gibeah, when the hospitable door

Expos'd a matron, to avoid worse rape.

Milton, P. L.

The haughty fair,

Who not the rape ev'n of a god could bear.

Drayton.

Tell the Thracian tyrant's alter'd shape,

And dire revenge of Philomela's rape.

Roscommon.

2. Privation; act of taking away.

Pear grew after pear,
Fig after fig came; time made never rape
Of any dainty there.

Chapman, Odys.

3. Something snatched away.

Sad widows, by thee rifled, weep in vain,
And ruin'd orphans of thy rapes complain.

Sandys.

Where now are all my hopes? oh never more
Shall they revive! nor death her rapes restore!

Sandys.

4. Fruit plucked from the cluster.

The juice of grapes is drawn as well from the rape, or whole grapes pluck'd from the cluster, and wine poured upon them in a vessel, as from a vat, where they are bruised.

Ray.

5. [Areppr, Icel. districtus territorii viginti ad minimum villicis constans. Serenius.] A division in the county of Sussex.

The whole county, with respect to its civil partition, is divided into six parts, which are called rapes: these are subdivided into hundreds.

Nat. Hist. of Sussex.

In some counties there is an intermediate division between the shire and the hundred, as lathes in Kent, and rapes in Sussex, each of them containing three or four hundred a piece.

Blackstone.

6. A plant, from the seed of which oil is expressed.

To RAPE.† v. a. See To RAF. Rape is the old spelling.

To RAPE.* v. n. To commit a rape.

There's nothing new, Menippus; as before,
They rape, extort, forswear.

Heywood's Hier. of Angels, (1635.) p. 349.

RAPID. adj. [rapide, Fr. rapidus, Latin.] Quick; swift.

Part shun the goal with rapid wheels.

Milton, P. L.

While you so smoothly turn and rowl our sphere,

That rapid motion does but rest appear.

Dryden.

RAPIDITY. n. s. [rapidité, Fr. rapiditas, from rapidus, Lat.] Celerity; velocity; swiftness.

Where the words are not monosyllables, we make them so by our rapidity of pronunciation.

Addison, Spect.

RAPIDLY.† adv. [from rapid.] Swiftly; with quick motion.

They were sold so rapidly that the printers could not supply the public with copies.

Warton, Hist. E. p. iii. 163.

RAPIDNESS. n. s. [from rapid.] Celerity; swiftness.

RAPIER.† n. s. [rapiere, French, so called from the quickness of its motion. Dr. Johnson. — Menage tells us simply, that rapiere is an ancient kind of sword, Germ. rapier, without any allusion to this pretended quickness alleged by Dr. Johnson. Lacombe calls the rapiere a long sword, "épée de longueur." Serenius mentions the Icel. rappir, pugio, a dagger.] A sort of sword used only in thrusting.

The ruffins tucke and long foining rapier, weapons more malicious than manly.

Bulleine, Dialogue, &c. (1579.) p. 20.

I will turn thy falsehood to thy heart,
Where it was forged, with my rapier's point.

Shakspeare.

A soldier of far inferior strength may manage a rapier or fire-arms so expertly, as to be an overmatch for his adversary. Pope on Homer's Battles.

RAPIER-FISH. n. s. The sword-fish.

The rapier-fish, called xiphias, grows sometimes to the length of five yards:

the sword, which grows level from the snout of the fish, is here about a yard long, at the basis four inches over, two-edged, and pointed exactly like a rapier: he preys on fishes, having first stabbed them with this sword.

Grew, Mus.

RAPINE. n. s. [rapina, Lat. rapine, Fr.]

1. The act of plundering.

If the poverty of Scotland might, yet the plenty of England cannot, excuse the envy and rapine of the church's rights.

K. Charles.

The logic of a conquering sword may silence, but convince it cannot; its efficacy rather breeds aversion and abhorrence of that religion, whose first address is in blood and rapine.

Decay of Chr. Piety.

2. Violence; force.

Her least action overaw'd

His malice, and with rapine sweet bereav'd

His fierceness of its fierce intent.

Milton, P. L.

To RAPINE.* v. a. [from the noun.] To plunder. Not in use.

To worry, to rapine, and devour harmless sheep,

Tr. of Boccacini, (1626,) p. 89.

A tyrant doth not only rapine his subjects, but spoils and robs churches.

Sir J. Burch, Hist. of Rich. III. p. 134.

RAPPAREE.* n. s. A wild Irish plunderer, so called, Mr. Malone says, from his being armed with a half pike, termed by the Irish a rapery. In an account of General Blakeney which I have read, I find, however, that "from a weapon shaped like a rake, called a rapp, which [such persons] carried instead of a spear, they were called rapparees."

Great complaints were brought over from Ireland, where the king's army was almost as heavy on the country, as the rapparees were.

Burnet, Hist. of his Own Time, (an. 1690.)

RAPPER.† n. s. [from rap.]

1. One who strikes.

2. The knocker of a door.

3. An oath, or a lie. See To RAF out.

A low word.

Bravely sworn! — though this is no flower of the sun, yet I am sure it is something that justly deserves to be called a rapper.

Bp. Parker, Rep. of Rhears. Transp. p. 300.

RA'PPORT.† n. s. [rappat, Fr.] Relation; reference; proportion. A word introduced by the innovator, Temple, but not copied by others. Dr. Johnson. — Mr. Bagshaw says, that it had been before used in a sermon preached by Sancroft (afterwards archbishop of Canterbury) in 1660.

'Tis obvious what rapport there is between the conceptions and languages in every country, and how great a difference this must make in the excellence of books.

Temple.

To RAPT.† v. a. [this word is used by Chapman for rap improperly, as appears from the participle, which from rap would be not rapt, but rapted. Dr. Johnson. — Undoubtedly; and such was the usage of elder days, Drayton employing this word rapted.] To ravish; to put in ecstasy.

You may safe approve,

How strong in instigation to their love

Their raping tunes are.

Chapman, Odys.

They in my defence are reasoning of my soil,

As rapt with my wealth and beauties.

Drayton, Polyolb. S. 13.

RAPT.† n. s. [from rap.]

1. A trance; an ecstasy.

He understood only an extraordinary rapt and act of prophesying.

Ep. Morion, Discharge, &c. (1633.) p. 174.

2. Rapidity.

In this encyclopædia and round of knowledge, like the great wheels of heaven, we must observe two circles, that while we are daily carried about, and whirled on by the swing and rapt of the one, we may maintain a natural and proper course in the sober wheel of the other. Brown, Vulg. Err.

RAPTOR, or RA'PTER.* n. s. [raptor, Lat.] A ravisher; a plunderer.

Winifrid, who chose

To have her life by the lead raptor spilt.

Drayton, Polyolb. S. 10.

Constantine condemns all sort of raptors to the flames, as well those that ravished virgins against their wills, as those that stole them with their own consent against the will of their parents.

Christian Antiq. ii. 875.

RAPTURE, n. s.

1. Violent seizure.

And thicke into our ship, he threw his flash :
That 'gainst a rocke, or flat, her keele did dash
With headlong rapture. Chapman.

2. Ecstasy; transport; violence of any pleasing passion; enthusiasm; uncommon heat of imagination.

Could virtue be seen, it would beget love, and advance it not only into admiration, but rapture.

Holyday.

Musick, when thus applied, raises in the mind of the hearer great conceptions; it strengthens devotion, and advances praise into rapture.

Addison, Spect.

You grow correct, that once with rapture view.

Pope.

3. Rapidity; haste.

The watery throng,

Wave rolling after wave, where way they found,
If steep, with torrent rapture; if through plain
Soft-ebbing; nor withstood them rock or bill.

Milton, P. L.

RAPTURED, adj. [from rapture.] Ravished; transported. A bad word.

He drew

Such maddening draughts of beauty to the soul,
As for a while o'erwhelm'd his raptur'd thought
With luxury too daring. Thomson, Summer.

RAPTURIST.* n. s. [from rapture.] An enthusiast. Not in use.

Such swarms of prophets and rapturists have flown out of those hives in some ages.

Spencer on Vulg. Prophecies, (1665.) p. 43.

RAPTUROUS, adj. [from rapture.] Ecstatic; transporting.

Nor will he be able to forbear a rapturous acknowledgment of the infinite wisdom and contrivance of the divine Artificer. Blackmore.

Are the pleasures of it so inviting and rapturous is a man bound to look out sharp to plague himself? Collier.

RARE, adj. [rarus, Lat. rare, Fr. in all the senses but the last.]

1. Scarce; uncommon; not frequent.

Live to be the shew and gaze o' the time;
We'll have you, as our rarer monsters are,
Painted upon a pole. Shakspeare.

2. Excellent; incomparable; valuable to a degree seldom found.

This jealousy

Is for a precious creature; as she's rare,
Must it be great; and as his person's mighty,
Must it be violent. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

On which was wrought the gods and giants' fight,
Rare work, all fill'd with terror and delight.

Cowley.

Above the rest I judge one beauty rare.

Dryden.

3. Thinly scattered.

The cattle in the fields and meadows green,

Those rare and solitary, these in flocks

Pasturing at once, and in broad herds upspring.

Milton, P. L.

4. Thin; subtle; not dense.

They are of so tender and weak a nature, as they affect only such a rare and attenuate substance, as the spirit of living creatures.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

So eagerly the fiend

O'er bog or steep, through strait, rough, dense, or rare,

With head, hands, wings, or feet, pursues his way.

Milton, P. L.

The dense and bright light of the circle will obscure the rare and weak light of these dark colours round about it, and render them almost insensible.

Newton, Opt.

Bodies are much more rare and porous than is commonly believed: water is nineteen times lighter, and by consequence nineteen times rarer than gold, and gold is so rare, as very readily, and without the least opposition, to transmit the magnetic effluvia, and easily to admit quicksilver into its pores, and to let water pass through it.

Newton, Opt.

5. Raw; not fully subdued by the fire. This is often pronounced rear.

New-laid eggs, with Baucis' busy care,
Turn'd by a gentle fire, and roasted rare. Dryden.

RA'REESHOW, n. s. [this word is formed in imitation of the foreign way of pronouncing rare show.] A show carried in a box.

The fashions of the town affect us just like a rareeshow, we have the curiosity to peep at them, and nothing more. Pope.

Of rareeshows he sung, and Punch's feasts. Gay.

RAREFACTION, n. s. [rarefaction, Fr. from rarefy.] Extension of the parts of a body, that makes it take up more room than it did before; contrary to condensation.

The water within being rarefied, and by rarefaction resolved into wind, will force up the smোক.

Wotton on Architecture.

When exhalations, shut up in the caverns of the earth by rarefaction or compression, come to be straitened, they strive every way to set themselves at liberty. Burnet.

RAREFIABLE, adj. [from rarefy.] Admitting rarefaction.

To RAREFY,† v. a. [rarefier, Fr. rarus

and facio, Lat. rarify were more proper.

Dr. Johnson.—This is a mistake; the original is rarefio, from rare, not rarus, and fo. Lucretius has used it more than once. The Fr. word also is rarefier. Nares, Elem. of Orthoëpy, p. 309.] To make thin: contrary to condense.

To the hot equator crowding fast,
Where highly rarefied the yielding air
Admits their steam. Thomson.

To RAREFY, v. n. To become thin.

Earth rarefies to dew; expanded more,

The subtil dew in air begins to soar.

Dryden, Fab.

RARELY, adv. [from rare.]

1. Seldom; not often; not frequently.

His temperance in sleep resembled that of his meats; midnight being the usual time of his going to rest, and four or five, and very rarely six, the hour of his rising. Fell, Life of Hammond.

Rarely they rise by virtue's aid, who lie

Plung'd in the depth of helpless poverty.

Dryden, Juv.

Vanessa in her bloom,

Advanc'd like Atalanta's star,

But rarely seen, and seen from far. Swift, Miscell.

2. Finely; nicely; accurately. This is now seldom used but ironically.

How rarely does it meet with this time's guise,
When man was will'd to love his enemies. Shaks.

RA'RENESS, n. s. [from rare.]

1. Uncommonness; state of happening seldom; infrequency.

Tickling is most in the soles, arm-holes, and sides: the cause is the thinness of the skin, joined with the rareness of being touched there; for tickling is a light motion of the spirits, which the thinness of the skin, the suddenness and rareness of touch doth further.

Bacon.

For the rareness and rare effect of that petition, I'll insert it as presented. Clarendon.

Of my heart I now a present make;
Accept it as when early fruit we send,
And let the rareness the small gift commend.

Dryden.

2. Value arising from scarcity.

Roses set in a pool, supported with some stay, is matter of rareness and pleasure, though of small use. Bacon.

To worthiest things,

Virtue, art, beauty, fortune, now I see
Rareness or use, not nature, value brings. Donne.

3. Thinness; tenuity.

4. Distance from each other; thinness.

RA'RITY, n. s. [rarité, Fr. raritas, Lat.]

1. Uncommonness; infrequency.

Far from being fond of any flower for its rarity, if I meet with any in a field which pleases me, I give it a place in my garden. Spectator.

2. A thing valued for its scarcity.

Sorrow would be a rarity most below'd
If all could so become it. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

It would be a rarity worth the seeing, could any one shew us such a thing as a perfectly reconciled enemy. South.

I saw three rarities of different kinds, which pleased me more than any other shows of the place.

Addison.

3. Thinness; subtilty: the contrary to density.

Bodies, under the same outward bulk, have a greater thinness and expansion, or thickness and solidity, which terms, in English, do not signify fully those differences of quantity; therefore I will do it under the names of rarity and density.

Digby.

This I do, not to draw any argument against diffuſion from the universal rest or accurately equal diffuſion of matter, but only that I may better demonstrate the great rarity and tenuity of their imaginary chaos. Bentley, Serm.

RASCAL,† n. s. [parcal, Saxon, a lean beast; particularly, a lean deer. Some refer it to the Fr. racaille, the scum of the people. Hence Chaucer uses ras-kaile for a mob. One of our old theological writers gives the following etymology: "Rascal or rashcal, of Heb. rashash, and rash, i. e. poore, beggarly, slavish, haveless; and col or cal, i. e. all or whole." Granger's Divine Logike, 1620, p. 170.]

1. A mean fellow; a scoundrel; a sorry wretch.

But for our gentlemen,
The mouse ne'er shunn'd the cat, as they did budge

From rascals worse than they. Shakspeare.

I am accus'd to rob in that thief's company;

the rascal bath remov'd my horse. Shakspeare.

Scoundrels are insolent to their superiors; but it does not become a man of honour to contest with mean rascals. L'Estrange.

Did I not see you, rascal, did I not!
When you lay snug to snap young Damon's goat?
Dryden.

I have sense, to serve my turn, in store,
And he's a rascal who pretends to more. Dryden.
The poor girl provoked told him he lied like a rascal. Swift.

The custom is, in some countries, to get a miserable rascal on Ash Wednesday to turn himself out of the church; and to walk all that day and night barefooted about the streets.

Brevint, Saul, &c. at Endor, ch. 11.

2. A lean deer: still in use.

The bucks and lusty stags amongst the rascols
strew'd. Drayton, Polyolb. S. 13.

Rascols, that delight

In base and barren plots, and at good earth repine.

Drayton, Polyolb. S. 14.

RASCAL.* adj. Mean; low; "rascal, or silly poor people." Huloet.

And after all the raskall many ran,
Heaped together in rude rablement.

Their cruel captain

Sought with his raskall routs t' enclose their round.

Spenser, F. Q.

The rascal and vile sort of men; the sink of the city. Barret, Tr. of Cic. Alt. (1580.)

A raskall banke, [littus ignobilis.]

Golding, Tr. of Pompey, Mela, (1590.) p. 54.

When Marcus Brutus grows so covetous

To lock such rascal counters from his friends,

Be ready, gods, with all your thunderbolts;

Dash him to pieces. Shakspeare, Jul. Cas.

The rascal people, thirsting after prey,

Join with the traitor. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

This right rascal wretchedness.

B. Jonson, Poetaster.

RASCAL'LION. n. s. [from rascal.] One of the lowest people.

That proud dame

Us'd him so like a base *rascal*lion,

That old pig — what d'ye call him — malion,

That cut his mistress out of stone,

Had not so hard a hearted one. Hudibras.

RASCAL'ITY.† n. s. [from rascal.] The low mean people.

The nest of hornets, the hotch-potch of *rascal*ity.

Beaumont, and Fl. Fair Maid of the Inn.

Pretended philosophers judge as ignorantly in their way as the *rascal*ity in theirs. South.

Glanville, Scepis.

Jeroboam having procured his people gods, the next thing was to provide priests; hereupon, to the calves he adds a commission for the approving, trying, and admitting the *rascal*ity and lowest of the people to minister in that service. South.

RASCALLY.† adj. [from rascal.] Mean;
sorry; base; worthless.

Would'st thou not be glad to have the niggardly
rascally sheep-biter come by some notable shame? Shakspeare.

He will sit you a whole afternoon sometimes reading o' these same abominable, vile, rascally verses. B. Jonson, Every Man in his Humour.

Whosoever will read over the breviat of his [archbishop Laud's] life and actions, penned by himself for private use, but purposely published by his inveterate enemy W. Prynne, with his rascally notes and diabolical reflections thereon, purposely to render him more odious to the common people, will find him a man of such eminent virtues, such an exemplary piety towards God, &c.

Wood, Ath. Ox. ii. 30.

Our rascally porter is fallen fast asleep with the black cloth and sconces, or we might have been tacking up by this time. Swift.

To RASE.† v. a. [this word is written rase or raze: I would write rase, when it signifies to strike slightly, perstrin-gere; and raze, when it signifies to ruin, delere; rasar, Fr. rasus, Lat.]

1. To skim; to strike on the surface.

He sends you word, he dreamt

To-night the boar had rased off his helm.

Shakspeare, Rich. II.

Was he not in the nearest neighbourhood to death? and might not the bullet, that rased his cheek, have gone into his head? South, Sermon.

2. To overthrow; to destroy; to root up.

Her battering engines bent to rase some city.

Milton, P. L.

3. To blot out by rasure; to erase.

When we be aboute to rase and do away any maner wrytyng, we fyrst scrape the paper, and by that rasure or scarpynge somewhat is taken awaye of the letters. Bp. Fisher, Ps. 24.

Though of their names in heavenly records now
Be no memorial, blotted out and rased.

Milton, P. L.

RASE.† n. s. [from To rase.]

1. A cancel.

2. A slight wound.

Their whose tenderness shrinketh at the least rase of a needle point. Hooker.

RASH.† adj. [rasch, Dutch. Dr. John- son. — Sueth. rash, promptus, strenuus;
Icel. ras, inconsulta actio; Sa. Goth.
rasa, furere, precipitantur festinare.
Serenius.]

1. Hasty; violent; precipitate; acting without caution or reflection.

This is to be bold without shame, rash without skill, full of words without wit.

Ascham, Schoolmaster.

Blast her pride! — O the blest goals!
So will you wish on me, when the rash mood's on.

Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Be not rash with thy mouth, and let not thine heart be hasty to utter any thing before God; for God is in heaven, and thou upon earth; therefore let thy words be few. Ecclus.

Her rash hand in evil hour,

Forth reaching to the fruit, she pluck'd, she eat.

Milton, P. L.

2. Hasty; requiring haste. Not in use.

I have scarce leisure to salute you,

My matter is so rash. Shakspeare, Tr. and Cress.

3. Quick; sudden: as, rash gunpowder. Out of use.

As strong as aconitum, or rash gunpowder.

Shakspeare, Hen. IV. P. II.

4. Applied, in the north of England, to corn; meaning corn so dry in the straw that it falls out with handling. Grose.

RASIT.† n. s. [rascia, Italian. Florio renders this word into English, "a kind of stuff called silk-rash." Afterwards, under raso, he renders that word, the stuff called satin.

1. A kind of silk or satin stuff.

2. Corrupted probably from rash. Dr. Johnson. — Rasche is cited by Cotgrave as a Languedoc word for a scald, or running scurf, or sore, &c. Perhaps the word, as we use it, may be a corruption of rouge, red.] An efflorescence on the body; a breaking out.

To RASH. v. a. [raschiare, Ital. to saw.] To cut into pieces; to divide; to split asunder.

[They] drawing both their swords with rage extreme,

Like two mad mastiffs each on other flew,

And shields did share, and nails did rash, and helms did hew. Spenser, F. Q.

Rashing off helms, and riving plates asunder.

Spenser, F. Q.

Sir, I miss'd my purpose in his arm, rash'd his doublet-sleeve, ran him close by the left cheek, and through his hair.

B. Jonson, Every Man out of his Humour.

RA'SHER. n. s. [rasura lardi, Lat.] A thin slice of bacon.

If we grow all to be pork eaters, we shall not shortly have a rasher on the coals for money.

Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

White and black was all her homely cheer,
And rasers of sing'd bacon on the coals. Dryden.
Quenches his thirst with ale in nut-brown bowls,
And takes the hasty rasher from the coals. King.

RA'SHLING.* n. s. [from rash.] One who acts without caution or reflection.

What rashlings doth delight, that sober men
despise;

What fools take pleasure in, doth both offend the wise. Sylvestre, Du Bart. (1621.) p. 647.

RA'SHLY. adv. [from rash.] Hastily; violently; without due consideration.

This expedition was by York and Talbot

Too rashly plotted. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

Men are not rashly to take that for done, which is not done. Bacon.

He that doth any thing rashly, must do it willingly; for he was free to deliberate or not.

L'Estrange.

Declare the secret villain,

The wretch so meanly base to injure Phædra,

So rashly brave to dare the sword of Theseus.

Smith.

RA'SHNESS. n. s. [from rash.] Foolish contempt of danger; inconsiderate heat of temper; precipitation; temerity.

Who seeth not what sentence it will enforce us to give against all churches in the world; inasmuch as there is not one, but hath had many things established in it, which, though the Scripture did never command, yet for us to condemn were rash- ness. Hooker.

Nature to youth hot rashness doth dispense,
But with cold prudence age doth recompense.

Denham.

In so speaking, we offend indeed against truth;
yet we offend not properly by falsehood, which is a speaking against our thoughts; but by rashness, which is an affirming or denying, before we have sufficiently informed ourselves. South.

The vain Morat, by his own rashness wrought,
Too soon discover'd his ambitious thought,

Believ'd me his, because I spoke him fair. Dryd.

RASP. n. s. [raspo, Italian.] A delicious berry that grows on a species of the bramble; a raspberry.

Set sorrel amongst rasps, and the rasps will be the smaller. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Now will the corinths, now the rasps supply
Delicious draughts, when prest to wines. Philips.

To RASP.† v. a. [raspen, German; rasper,
Fr. raspare, Italian; traced by Wachter to the Germ. reiben, to rub.] To rub to powder with a very rough file.

Some authors have advised the rasping of these bones; but in this case it is needless.

Wiseman, Surgery.

Having prepared hard woods and ivory for the lathe with rasping, they pitch it between the pikes.

Moxon, Mech. Es.

RASP. n. s. [from the verb.] A large rough file, commonly used to wear away wood.

Case-hardening is used by file cutters, when they make coarse files, and generally most rasps have formerly been made of iron and case-hardened. Moxon, Mech. Es.

RA'SPATORY. n. s. [raspatoir, Fr. from rasp.]
A chirurgion's rasp.

I put into his mouth a raspatory, and pulled away the corrupt flesh, and with cauteries burnt it to a crust. Wiseman, Surgery.

RA'SPBERRY, or Raspberry. n. s. A kind of berry.

Raspberries are of three sorts; the common wild one, the large red garden raspberry, which is one of the pleasantest of fruits, and the white, which is little inferior to the red.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

RA'SPBERRY-BUSH. n. s. A species of bramble.

RA'SPER. * n. s. [from rasp.] A scraper.

Sherwood.

RA'SURE. † n. s. [rasura, Lat.]

1. The act of scraping or shaving.

2. A mark in a writing where something has been rubbed out.

Such a writing ought to be free from any vituperation of rasure. Ayliffe, Parergon.

RAT. † n. s. [ratte, Dutch; rat, Fr. ratta, Spanish; ratto, Italian. Ferrari derives the Italian word from the Latin mus, muris, a mouse, by the following process: murus, muratus, ratus, rato, ratto; which Menage does not condemn; though he prefers the Germ. ratz, or ratte, a rat, as the most natural etymon. The Sax. word is pætr. The low Latin ratus for a rat is cited by Menage. See Menage in V. RAT. We have ratten, or ratton, in the north of England, for this animal.] An animal of the mouse kind that infests houses and ships.

Our natures do pursue,

Like rats that ravin down their proper bane.

Shakspeare.

Make you ready your stiff bats and clubs,
Rome and her rats are at the point of battle.

Shakspeare.

I have seen the time, with my long sword I would have made you four tall fellows skip like rats.

Shakspeare.

Thus horses will knable at walls, and rats will gnaw iron.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

If in despair he goes out of the way like a rat with a dose of arsenick, why he dies nobly.

Dennis.

To smell a RAT. To be put on the watch by suspicion as the cat by the scent of a rat; to suspect danger.

Quoth Hudibras, I smell a rat;

Ralpho, thou dost prevaricate.

Hudibras.

RATABLE. adj. [from rate.] Set at a certain value.

The Danes brought in a reckoning of money by ores, per oras; I collect out of the abby book of Burton, that twenty oræ were ratable to two marks of silver.

Camden, Rem.

RATABLY. adv. Proportionably.

Many times there is no proportion of shot and powder allowed ratably by that quantity of the great ordnance.

Ralegh.

Congreve.

RATAN. † n. s. An Indian cane. Dict. The word is somewhere used by Sir T. Herbert, in his Travels.

RATCH. n. s. In clockwork, a sort of wheel which serves to lift up the detents every hour, and thereby make the clock strike.

Bailey.

RATE. n. s. [ratus, Lat. rate, old Fr.]

1. Price fixed on any thing.

How many things do we value, because they come at dear rates from Japan and China, which, if they were our own manufacture, common to be had, and for a little money, would be neglected!

Locke.

I'll not betray the glory of my name,

'Tis not for me, who have preserv'd a state,

To buy an empire at so base a rate.

Dryden.

The price of land has never changed, in the several changes have been made in the rate of interest by law; nor now that the rate of interest is by law the same, is the price of land every where the same.

Locke.

2. Allowance settled.

His allowance was a continual allowance, a daily rate for every day.

2 Kings, xxv. 30.

They obliged themselves to remit, after the rate of twelve hundred thousand pounds sterling per annum, divided into so many monthly payments.

Addison.

3. Degree; comparative height or value.

I am a spirit of no common rate;

The summer still doth tend upon my state.

Shaks.

In this did his holiness and godliness appear above the rate and pitch of other men's, in that he was so infinitely merciful.

Calamy, Serm.

To which relation whatsoever is done agreeably, is morally and essentially good; and whatsoever is done otherwise, is at the same rate morally evil.

South.

4. Quantity assignable.

In goodly form comes on the enemy;

And by the ground they hide I judge their number

Upon or near the rate of thirty thousand.

Shaks.

5. Principle on which value is set.

Heretofore the rate and standard of wit was very different from what it is now-a-days: no man was then accounted a wit for speaking such things as deserved to have the tongue cut out.

South, Serm.

A virtuous heathen is, at this rate, as happy as a virtuous christian.

Atterbury.

6. Manner of doing any thing; degree to which any thing is done.

I have disabled mine estate,

By shewing something a more swelling port,

Than my faint means would grant continuance;

Nor do I now make moan to be abridged

From such a noble rate.

Shaks. Merch. of Ven.

Many of the horse could not march at that rate, nor come up soon enough.

Clarendon.

Tom hinting his dislike of some trifle his mistress had said, she asked him how he would talk to her after marriage, if he talked at this rate before.

Addison.

7. Tax imposed by the parish.

They paid the church and parish rate,

And took, but read not the receipt.

Prior.

To RATE. † v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To value at a certain price.

I freely told you all the wealth I had

Ran in my veins; I was a gentleman;

And yet, dear lady,

Rating myself as nothing, you shall see

How much I was a braggart.

Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

We may there be instructed, how to name and rate all goods, by those that will concentre into felicity.

Boyle.

You seem not high enough your joys to rate,

You stand indebted a vast sum to fate,

And should large thanks for the great blessing pay.

Dryden.

2. [Reita, Icelandic; reta, Goth. rata, Sueth. This sense of the word is very old in our language. "He shall be rated for his studying." Chaucer.] To chide hastily and vehemently.

Go rate thy minions, proud insulting boy:
Becomes it thee to be thus bold in terms

Before thy sovereign? Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

An old lord of the council rated me the other day in the street about you, sir.

Shaks. Hen. IV.

What is all that a man enjoys, from a year's converse, comparable to what he feels for one hour, when his conscience shall take him aside and rate him by himself?

South.

To RATE. v. n. To make an estimate.

In rating, when things are thus little and frivolous, we must not judge by our own pride and passions, which count nothing little, but aggrandise every affront or injury that is done to ourselves.

Kettlewell.

RATER. * n. s. [from To rate.] One who makes an estimate.

The wise rater of things, as they weigh in the sanctuary's balance, and reason's, will obey the powers over him.

Whitlock, Mann. of the Eng. (1654), p. 11.

RATH. n. s. A hill. I know not whence derived.

There is a great use among the Irish, to make great assemblies upon a rath or hill, there to parly about matters and wrongs between townships or private persons.

Spenser on Ireland.

RATH. † adj. [pað, hpað, Saxon, quick.

The comparative rather, and superlative rathest are found in our old language; rathizo, facilius, Goth.] Early; soon; coming before the usual time.

This is he that I seyde of, Aftr me is comun a man which was made before me, for he was rather than I.

Wicliffe, St. John, 1.

And commonliche in every neede

The werste speche is rathest herde,

And leved till it be answerde.

Gower, Conf. Am. B. 3.

The rather lambs bene starved with cold.

Spenser, Shep. Cal. Feb.

Rather lambs [are those] that be ewed early in the beginning of the year.

E. K. on Spenser's Shep. Cal.

Bring the rathe primrose that forsaken dies,

The tufted crow-toe, and pale jessamine,

Milton, Lycidas.

RATH. * adv. [pað, Sax.] Soon; betimes; early.

What aileth you so rathe for to arise?

Chaucer, Shipm. Tale.

Thus is my summer worn away and wasted,

Thus is my harvest hasten'd all-to rathe.

Spenser, Shep. Cal. Dec.

Rath ripe are some, and some of later kind,

Of fledge some, and some of purple rind.

May, Virgil.

Those rath ripe wits prevent their own perfection; and, after a vain wonder of their own fate, end either in shame or obscurity. Bp. Hall, Quo Vadis?

RA'THER. † adv. [this is a comparative from rath; paðon, Saxon; now out of use. See the adjective. One may still say, by the same form of speaking, I will sooner do this than that; that is, I like better to do this.]

1. More willingly; with better liking.

Almighty God desireth not the death of a sinner, but rather that he should turn from his wickedness and live.

Common Prayer.

2. Preferably to the other; with better reason.

'Tis rather to be thought, that an heir had no such right by divine institution, than that God should give such a right, but yet leave it undeterminate who such heir is.

Locke.

3. In a greater degree than otherwise.

He sought through the world, but sought in vain,

And nowhere finding, rather fear'd her slain.

Dryden.

4. More properly.

This is an art,
Which does mend nature, change it rather, but
The art itself is nature. Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.
5. Especially.

You are come to me in a happy time,
The rather for I have some sport in hand. Shaks.

6. To have RATHER. [this is, I think, a barbarous expression, of late intrusion into our language, for which it is better to say will rather.] To desire in preference.

'Tis with reluctance he is provoked by our impetuosity to apply the discipline of severity; he hath rather mankind should adore him as their patron and benefactor. Rogers.

RATIFICATION. n. s. [ratification, Fr. from ratify.] The act of ratifying; confirmation.

RATIFIER. n. s. [from ratify.] The person or thing that ratifies.

They cry, "Choose we Laertes for our king:"
The ratifiers and props of every word,
Caps, hands, and tongues applaud it to the clouds. Shakespeare.

To RATIFY.† v. a. [ratifier, Fr. Cotgrave; ratum facio, Lat.] To confirm; to settle; to establish.

The church being a body which dieth not, hath always power, as occasion requireth, no less to ordain that which never was, than to ratify what hath been before. Hooker.

By the help of these, with Him above
To ratify the work, we may again
Give to our tables meat, sleep to our nights. Shaks.

We have ratified unto them the borders of Judea. 1 Macc.

God ratified their prayers by the judgement brought down upon the head of him whom they prayed against. South.

Tell me, my friend, from whence had'st thou the skill,

So nicely to distinguish good from ill?
And what thou art to follow, what to fly,
This to condemn, and that to ratify? Dryden.

RATING.* n. s. [from To rate.] Chiding; scolding.

If words are sometimes to be used, they ought to be grave, kind, and sober, representing the ill or unbecomingness of the faults, rather than a hasty rating of the child for it. Locke.

RATIO.† n. s. [Latin.] The relation which one thing is to another of the same kind, in respect to magnitude or quantity; rule of proportion.

Whatever inclinations the rays have to the plane of incidence, the sine of the angle of incidence of every ray, considered apart, shall have to the sine of the angle of refraction a constant ratio.

Cheyne, Phil. Principles.

To RATIOCINATE.† v. n. [ratiocinor, Lat.] To reason; to argue.

Scholars, and such as love to ratiocinare, will have more and better matter to exercise their wits upon. Sir W. Petty, Adv. to Hartlib, (1648.) p. 22.

RATIOCINATION.† n. s. [ratiocinatio, Fr. Cotgrave; ratiocinatio, Lat.] The act of reasoning; the act of deducing consequences from premises.

In simple terms, expressing the open notions of things, which the second act of reason compoundeth into propositions, and the last into syllogisms and forms of ratiocinatio. Brown.

Neither is this any private collection, or particular ratiocinatio, but the publick and universal reason of the world. Pearson on the Creed, Art. 1.

The discerning of that connexion or dependence which there is betwixt several propositions, whereby we are enabled to infer one proposition from another, which is called ratiocinatio or discourse. Wilkins.

Can any kind of ratiocinatio allow Christ all the marks of the Messiah, and yet deny him to be the Messiah? South.

Such an inscription would be self-evident without any ratiocinatio or study, and could not fail constantly to exert its energy in their minds. Bentley.

RATIOCINATIVE. adj. [from ratiocinare.] Argumentative; advancing by process of discourse.

Some consecutions are so intimately and evidently connexed to, or found in the premises, that the conclusion is attained quasi per saltum, and without any thing of ratiocinative process, even as the eye sees his object immediately, and without any previous discourse. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

RATION.* n. s. [French.] A certain allowance, or share, of provisions.

They would not wantonly call on those phantoms to tell, by what English acts of parliament forced upon two reluctant kings, the lands of their country were put up to a mean and scandalous auction in every goldsmith's shop in London; or chopped to pieces, and cut into rations, to pay the mercenary soldier of a regicide usurper. Burke, Lett. to R. Burke, Esq.

RATIONAL.† adj. [rational, Fr. Cotgrave; rationalis, Lat.]

1. Having the power of reasoning.

God decreed to create man after his own image, a free and rational agent. Hammond.

As that which hath a fitness to promote the welfare of man, considered as a sensitive being, is stilled natural good; so that which hath a fitness to promote the welfare of man, as a rational, voluntary, and free agent, is stilled moral good; and the contrary to it moral evil. Wiltins.

If it is our glory and happiness to have a rational nature, that is endued with wisdom and reason, that is capable of imitating the divine nature; then it must be our glory and happiness to improve our reason and wisdom, to act up to the excellency of our rational nature, and to imitate God in all our actions, to the utmost of our power. Laws.

2. Agreeable to reason.

What higher in her society thou findest
Attractive, humane, rational, love still. Milton, P. L.

When the conclusion is deduced from the unerring dictates of our faculties, we say the inference is rational. Glaviville, Scepis.

If your arguments be rational, offer them in as moving a manner as the nature of the subject will admit; but beware of letting the pathetic part swallow up the rational. Swift.

3. Wise; judicious; as, a rational man.

RATIONAL.* n. s. A rational being.

He, the great Father, kindled at one flame
The world of *rational*s. Young, Night Th. 4.

RATIONAL.† n. s. [from ratio, Lat.] A detail with reasons.

Is it any breach of the rational of grammar?
Blackwall, Sac. Class. i. 15.

Holding out, as it were, to view a rational of the universe. Coventry, Phil. to Hyd. Conv. 1.

RATIONALIST. n. s. [from rational.] One who proceeds in his disquisitions and practice wholly upon reason.

He often used this comparison; the empirical philosophers are like to pismires; they only lay up and use their store: the rationalists are like to spiders; they spin all out of their own bowels: but give me a philosopher, who, like the bee, hath a middle faculty, gathering from abroad, and digesting that which is gathered by his own virtue. Bacon.

RATIONALITY. n. s. [from rational.]

1. The power of reasoning.

When God has made rationality the common portion of mankind, how came it to be thy inclosure? Gov. of the Tongue.

2. Reasonableness.

In human occurrences, there have been many well directed intentions, whose rationalities will never bear a rigid examination. Brown, Vulg. Err.

RATIONALLY. adv. [from rational.] Reasonably; with reason.

Upon the proposal of an agreeable object, it may rationally be conjectured, that a man's choice will rather incline him to accept than to refuse it. South.

RATIONALNESS. n. s. [from rational.] The state of being rational.

RATSBANE. n. s. [rat and bane.] Poison for rats; arsenic.

He would throw ratsbane up and down a house, where children might come at it. L'Estrange.

When murder's out, what vice can we advance?
Unless the new-found poisoning trick of France;
And when their art of ratsbane we have got,
By way of thanks, we'll send 'em o'er our plot. Dryden.

I can hardly believe the relation of his being poisoned; but sack might do it, though ratsbane would not. Swift to Pope.

RATSBANE.* adj. Poisoned by ratsbane. Like ratsbane'd rats.

Junius, Sin Stigm. (1639.) p. 269.

Hakewill on Providence.

8. An instrument, which agitated makes a clattering noise.

The rattles of Isis and the cymbals of Brasilea nearly enough resemble each other.

Raleigh, Hist. of the World.

Opinions are the rattles of immature intellects, but the advanced reasons have outgrown them.

Glanville, Scepis.

They want no rattles for their forward mood, Nor nurse to reconcile them to their food, Dryden. Farewell then verse, and love, and ev'ry toy, The rhymes and rattles of the man or boy; What right, what true, what fit we justly call, Let this be all my care; for this is all. Pope.

4. A plant. [crista galli, Lat.] An herb resembling a cock's comb; louse-wort.

RA'TTLEHEADED. adj. [rattle and head.] Giddy; not steady.

RA'TTLESNAKE. n. s. A kind of serpent. The rattlesnake is so called, from the rattle at the end of his tail. Grew, Mus.

She loses her being at the very sight of him, and drops plump into his arms, like a charmed bird into the mouth of a rattlesnake.

Moore's Foundling.

RA'TTLESNAKE Root. n. s.

Rattlesnake root, called also seneka, belongs to a plant, a native of Virginia; the Indians use it as a certain remedy against the bite of a rattlesnake. Hill.

RATTLING.* n. s. [from rattle.] Noise produced by the wheels of a carriage in swift motion; any repeated noise.

The noise of a whip, and the noise of the rattling of the wheels, and of the prancing horses.

Nah. iii. 2.

They had, to affright the enemy's horses, big rattles covered with parchment and small stones within; but the rattling of shot might have done better service. Hayward.

To RA'VAGE. v. a. [ravager, Fr.] To lay waste; to sack; to ransack; to spoil; to pillage; to plunder.

Already Caesar

Has ravaged more than half the globe, and sees Mankind grown thin by his destructive sword.

Addison.

His blasts obey, and quit the howling bill, The shatter'd forest, and the ravag'd vale.

Thomson.

RA'VAGE. n. s. [ravage, Fr. from the verb.] Spoil; ruin; waste.

Some cruel pleasure will from thence arise, To view the mighty ravage of your eyes. Dryden. Would one think 'twere possible for love To make such ravage in a noble soul? Addison.

Those savages were not then, what civilized mankind is now; but without mutual society, without arms of offence, without houses or fortifications, an obvious and exposed prey to the ravage of devouring beasts. Bentley.

RA'VAGER. n. s. [from ravage.] Plunderer; spoiler.

When that mighty empire was overthrown by the northern people, vast sums of money were buried to escape the plundering of the conquerors; and what remained was carried off by those ravagers.

Swift, Miscell.

RAUCITY. n. s. [raucus, Lat.] Hoarseness; loud rough noise.

Inequality not stayed upon, but passing, is rather an increase of sweetness; as in the purring of a wreathed string, and the raucity of a trumpet.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

RAUCOUS.* adj. [raucus, Lat.] Hoarse; harsh.

Of all the parrots the arras are the largest; their voice is harsh; they seem to articulate only the sound arra, and with a raucous thick tone which is grating to the ear. Tr. of Buffon's Hist. of Birds.

To RAVE. v. n. [reven, Dutch; réver, French.]

1. To be delirious; to talk irrationally.

Men who thus rave, we may conclude their brains are turned, and one may as well read lectures at Bedlam as treat with such.

Gov. of the Tongue.

It soon infecteth the whole member, and is accompanied with watching and raising.

Wiseman, Surgery.

Her grief has wrought her into frenzy, The images her troubled fancy forms Are incoherent, wild; her words disjointed: Sometimes she rares for musick, light and air; Nor air, nor light, nor musick calm her pains.

Smith.

2. To burst out into furious exclamations as if mad.

Shall these wild distempers of thy mind, This tempest of thy tongue, thus rave, and find No opposition? Sandys, Paraphr. on Job.

3. To be unreasonably fond: with upon before the object of fondness. A colloquial and improper sense.

Another partiality is a fantastical and wild attributing all knowledge to the ancients or the moderns: thus raising upon antiquity, in matter of poetry, Horace has wittily exposed in one of his satires.

Locke.

To RA'VEL.† v. a. [ravelen, Dutch, to entangle.]

1. To entangle; to entwist one with another; to make intricate; to involve; to perplex.

If then such praise the Macedonian got, For having rudely cut the Gordian knot; What glory's due to him that could divide Such ravel'd interests, has the knot untied, And without stroke so smooth a passage made, Where craft and malice such obstructions laid?

Wallar.

Dust, ravel'd in the air, will fly

Up high;

Mingled with water, 'twill retire

Into the mire.

J. Hall, Poems, (1646,) p. 100.

2. To unweave; to unknot; as, to ravel out a twist or piece of knit work.

Let him for a pair of reechy kisses, Or paddling in your neck with his damn'd fingers, Make you to ravel all this matter out.

Shakespeare, Hamlet.

Sleep that knits up the ravel'd sleeve of care.

Shakespeare.

3. To hurry over in confusion. This seems to be the meaning in Digby.

They but ravel it over loosely, and pitch upon disputing against particular conclusions, that, at the first encounter of their single, seem harsh to them.

Digby.

To RA'VEL.† v. n.

1. To fall into perplexity or confusion.

As you unwind her love from him, Lest it should ravel, and be good to none, You must provide to bottom it on me. Shakespeare.

By their own perplexities involv'd, They ravel more, still less resolv'd, But never find self-satisfying solution.

Milton, S. A.

2. To work in perplexity; to busy himself with intricacies.

It will be needless to ravel far into the records of elder times; every man's memory will suggest many pertinent instances. Dec. of Chr. Picty.

The humour of ravelling into all these mystical or intangled matters, mingling with the interest and passions of princes and of parties, and thereby heightened and inflamed, produced infinite disputes.

Temple.

3. To be unwoven.

The contexture of this discourse will perhaps be the less subject to ravel out, if I hem it with the speech of our learned and pious annotator.

Spencer on Prod. (1665,) p. 202.

RA'VELIN. n. s. [French.] In fortification, a work that consists of two faces, that make a salient angle, commonly called half moon by the soldiers: it is raised before the courlines or counter-scarps.

Prov. v. 19.

RA'VISHER. n. s. [ravisser, Fr. from ra-vish.]

1. He that embraces a woman by violence.

They are cruel and bloody, common ravishers of women, and murderers of children.

Spenser on Ireland.

A ravisher must repair the temporal detriment to the maid, and give her a dowry, or marry her if she desire it.

Bp. Taylor.

Turn hence those pointed glories of your eyes!

For if more charms beneath those circles rise,

So weak my virtue, yet so strong appear,

I shall turn ravisher to keep you here. Dryden.

2. One who takes any thing by violence.

Shall the ravisher display your hair,

While the fops envy, and the ladies stare? Pope.

RA'VISHING.* n. s. [from ravish.] Rap-ture; transport.

A man that hath not experienced the contentments of innocent piety, the sweetness that bedew the soul by the influences of the Spirit, and the ravishings that sometimes from above do shoot abroad in the inner man, will hardly believe there are such oblations that can be hid in godliness.

Feltham, Res. ii. 66.

RA'VISHINGLY. adv. [from ravishing.] To extremity of pleasure.

As all the housewiferies of deities are

To hear a voice, so ravishingly fair. Chapman.

RA'VISHMENT. n. s. [ravisement, Fr. from ravish.]

1. Violation; forcible constupration.

Of his several ravishments, betrayings, and stealing away of men's wives, came in all those ancient fables of his transformations, and all that rabble of Grecian forgeries.

Raleigh.

Tell them ancient stories of the ravishment of chaste maidens.

Bp. Taylor, Rule of Living Holy.

I told them I was one of their knight-errants that delivered them from ravishment.

Dryden.

2. Transport; rapture; ecstasy; pleasing violence on the mind.

All things joy, with ravishment

Attracted by thy beauty, still to gaze.

Milton, P. L.

Can any mortal mixture of earth's mould

Breathe such divine enchanting ravishment?

Milton, Comus.

What a ravishment was that, when having found out the way to measure Hiero's crown, he leaped out of the bath, and, as if he were suddenly possessed, ran naked up and down! Wilkins, Dædalus.

1. Not subdued by the fire.

Full of great lumps of flesh, and gobbets raw.

Spenser.

2. Not covered with the skin.

All aloud the wind doth blow,

And coughing drowns the parson's saw;

And birds sit brooding in the snow,

And Marion's nose looks red and raw, Shakspeare.

If there be quick raw flesh in the risings, it is an old leprosy.

Lev. xiii. 10.

3. Sore.

This her knight was feeble and too faint,

And all his sinews waxen weak and raw

Through long imprisonment. Spenser.

4. Immature; unripe, not concocted.

5. Unseasoned; unripe in skill.

Some people, very raw and ignorant, are very unworthily and unfully nominated to places, when men of desert are held back and unpreferred.

Raleigh, Ess.

People, while young and raw, and soft natured, are apt to think it an easy thing to gain love, and reckon their own friendship a sure price of another man's; but when experience shall have once opened their eyes, they will find that a friend is the gift of God.

South.

Sails were spread to every wind that blew,

Raw were the sailors, and the depths were new.

Dryden.

Well I knew,

What perils youthful ardour would pursue,

Young as thou wert to dangers, raw to war.

Dryden.

6. New. This seems to be the meaning.

I have in my mind

A thousand raw tricks of these bragging jacks.

Shakspeare.

7. Bleak; chill; cold with damp.

They carried always with them that weed, as their house, their bed, and their garment; and coming lastly into Ireland, they found there more special use thereof, by reason of the raw cold climate. Spenser on Ireland.

Came dauncing forth, and joyous carols song.

Spenser, F. Q. v. xi. 24.

Yet he, the worthiest captain e'er was,
Brought all in ray, and fought again anew.

Mir. for Mag. p. 120.

6. For array, or dress.

This is true courtship, and becomes his ray.

B. Jonson, Sad Shepherd.

To RAY.† v. a. [rayer, Fr. from the noun.]

1. To streak; to mark in long lines: an old word, Dr. Johnson observes; but two, out of the three examples which he cites, belong to the third meaning, of which he has taken no notice. Nor has he given any other meaning of the verb ray than the present: but other senses it has. In the present it is old.

A fether bed

Rayid with gold. Chaucer's Dream, ver. 252.

His horse is raied with the yellows.

Shakspeare, Tam. of the Shrew.

2. To shoot forth.

One, chief, in gracious dignity enthron'd,
Shines o'er the rest, the pastoral queen, and rays
Her smiles, sweet-beaming, on her shepherd king.

Thomson, Summer.

3. To foul; to beray. [reia, Su.-Goth.] See To BERAY.

Beside a bubbling fountain she did lay,
Which she increased with her bleeding heart,
And the cleane waves with purple gore did ray.

Spenser, F. Q.

Ruffled and foully ray'd with filthy soil.

Spenser, F. Q.

Fye on all tired jades, on all mad masters, and all foul ways! Was ever man so beaten? was ever man so rayed? was ever man so weary?

Shakspeare, Tam. of the Shrew.

4. To array.

Prompt. Parv.

RA'YLESS.* adj. [ray and less.] Dark without a ray.

Night, sable goddess, from her ebon throne,
In rayless majesty, now stretches forth
Her leaden sceptre o'er a slumbering world.

Young, Night Th. 1.

RAZE. n. s. [rayz, a root, Spanish.] A root of ginger. This is commonly written raze, but less properly.

I have a gammon of bacon and two razes of ginger to be delivered. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

To RAZE. v. a. [raser, Fr. rasus, Lat.
See To RASE.]

1. To overthrow; to ruin; to subvert.

Will you suffer a temple, how poorly built soever, but yet a temple of your deity, to be razed?

Sidney.

He yoketh your rebellious necks,
Razeth your cities, and subverts your towns.

Shakspeare.

It grieved the tyrant, that so base a town should so long hold out, so that he would threaten to raze
it.

Knolles.

Shed Christian blood, and populous cities raze;

Because they're taught to use some different phrase.

Waller.

We touch'd with joy

The royal hand that razed unhappy Troy. Dryden.

The place would be razed to the ground, and its foundations sown with salt. Addison, Spect.

2. To efface.

Fatal this marriage; cancelling your fame,
Razing the characters of your renown. Shaks.

Pluck from the memory a rooted sorrow,
Raze out the written troubles of the brain. Shaks.

He in denigates sets

Upon their tongues a various spirit, to raze
Quite out their native language: and instead,
To sow a jangling noise of words. Milton, P. L.

3. To extirpate.

I'll find a day to massacre them all,
And raze their faction and their family. Shaks.

RA'ZOR. n. s. [rasor, Lat.] A knife with a thick blade and fine edge, used in shaving.

Zeal, except ordered aright, useth the razor with such eagerness, that the life of religion is thereby hazarded. Hooker.

These words are razors to my wounded heart.

Shakspeare.

Those thy boisterous locks, not by the sword
Of noble warriour, so to stain his honour,
But by the barber's razor best subdu'd.

Milton, S. A.

Razor makers generally clasp a small bar of Venice steel between two small bars of Flemish steel, and weld them together, to strengthen the back of the razor. Mozon.

As in smooth oil the razor best is whet,
So wit is by politeness sharpest set,
Their want of edge from their offence is seen;
Both pain us least when exquisitely keen. Young.

RAZORS of a boar. A boar's tusks.

RA'ZORABLE. adj. [from razor.] Fit to be shaved. Not in use.

New-born chins be rough and razorable. Shaks.

RA'ZORBILL.* n. s. A web-footed bird, common on our sea shores, the alka.

RA'ZORFISH. n. s.

The sheath or razorfish resembleth in length and bigness a man's finger.

Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

RA'ZURE. n. s. [rasure, Fr. rasura, Lat.]
Act of erasing.

Oh! your desert speaks loud;
It well deserves with characters of brass

A fortified residence, 'gainst the tooth of time
And rasure of oblivion. Shaks. Meas. for Meas.

RE is an inseparable particle used by the Latins, and from them borrowed by us,
to denote iteration or backward action;
as, return, to come back; to revive, to live again; repercussion, the act of driving back: reciprocation, as to recriminate.
It is put almost arbitrarily before verbs and verbal nouns, so that many words so compounded will perhaps be found, which it was not necessary to insert. It sometimes adds little to the simple meaning of the word, as in rejoice.

To REABSORB. v. a. [re and absorb.]
To swallow up again; to suck up again.

Lime is a substance whose external characters and mode of production are well known. It differs from chalk and powdered limestone chiefly by the absence of fixed air, which is expelled from these during their calcination. This air it greedily reabsorbs from the atmosphere.

Kirwan on Manures, p. 12.

REACCE'SS. n. s. [re and access.] Visit renewed.

Let pass the quailing and withering of all things
by the recess,—and their reviving—by the re-access of the sun. Hakevill on Prov. p. 71.

To REACH.† v. a. ancient preterite

raught. [Goth. raġan; Germ. reichen; Sax. ŕæcan.]

1. To touch with the hand extended.

Round the tree

They longing stood, but could not reach.

Milton, P. L.

What are riches, empire, pow'r;

But larger means to gratify the will;

The steps by which we climb to rise and reach

Our wish, and that obtained, down with a scarf-folding

Of scepters, crowns, and thrones: they've serv'd their end,

And there like lumber to be left and scorn'd?

Congreve.

2. To arrive at; to attain any thing distant; to strike from a distance.

The coast so long desir'd

Thy troops shall reach, but having reach'd, repent.

Dryden.

What remains beyond this, we have no more a positive notion of, than a mariner has of the depth of the sea; where, having let down his sounding line, he reaches no bottom.

Locke.

It must fall perhaps before this letter reaches your hands.

Pope.

3. To strike from a distant place.

O patron power, thy present aid afford,

That I may reach the beast!

Dryden.

4. To fetch from some place distant, and give.

He reached me a full cup. 2 Esdr. xiv. 39.

5. To bring forward from a distant place.

Reach hither thy finger, and behold my hands;

and reach hither thy hand, and thrust it into my side.

St. John, xx. 27.

6. To hold out; to stretch forth.

These kinds of goodness are so nearly united to the things which desire them, that we scarcely perceive the appetite to stir in reaching forth her hand towards them.

Hooker.

7. To attain; to gain; to obtain.

The best account of the appearances of nature, which human penetration can reach, comes short of its reality.

Cheyne.

8. To transfer.

Through such hands

The knowledge of the gods is reach'd to man.

Rousse.

9. To penetrate to.

Whatever alterations are made in the body, if they reach not the mind, there is no perception.

Locke.

10. To be adequate to.

The law reacheth the intention of the promoters,
and this act fixed the natural price of money.

Locke.

If these examples of grown men reach not the case of children, let them examine.

Locke on Education.

11. To extend to.

Thy desire lead

To no excess that reaches blame. Milton, P. L.

Her imprecations reach not to the tomb,

They shut not out society in death. Addison, Cato.

12. To extend; to spread abroad.

Trees reach'd too far their pamp'd boughs.

Milton, P. L.

13. To take in the hand.

Let her reach of the tree of life, and eat.

Milton, P. L.

14. To deceive; to over-reach.

The loss might be repaired again; or, if not,
could not however destroy us, by reaching us in our greatest and highest concern.

South, Serm. ii. 19.

TO REACH. v. n.

1. To be extended.

We hold that the power which the church hath lawfully to make laws doth extend into sundry things of ecclesiastical jurisdiction, and such other matters whereto their opinion is, that the church's authority and power doth not reach. Hooker.

The new world reaches quite cross the torrid zone in one tropick to the other. Boyle.

When men pursue their thoughts of space, they are apt to stop at the confines of body, as if space were there at an end too, and reached no farther.

Locke.

If I do not ask any thing improper, let me be buried by Theodosius; my vow reaches no farther than the grave. Addison.

The influence of the stars reaches to many events, which are not in the power of reason. Swift.

2. To be extended far.

Great men have reaching hands.

Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

3. To penetrate.

He hath delivered them into your hand, and ye have slain them in a rage that reacheth up into heaven. 2 Chr. xxviii.

We reach forward into futurity, and bring up to our thoughts objects hid in the remotest depths of time. Addison.

4. To make efforts to attain.

Could a sailor always supply new line, and find the plummet sink without stopping, he would be in the posture of the mind, reaching after a positive idea of infinity. Locke.

REACH.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Act of touching or seizing by extension of the hand.

2. Power of reaching or taking in the hand.

There may be in a man's reach a book containing pictures and discourses, capable to delight and instruct him, which yet he may never have the will to open. Locke.

3. Power of attainment or management.

In actions, within the reach of power in him, a man seems as free as it is possible for freedom to make him. Locke.

4. Power; limit of faculties.

Our sight may be considered as a more diffusive kind of touch, that brings into our reach some of the most remote parts of the universe. Addison.

Be sure yourself and your own reach to know,
How far your genius, taste, and learning go.

Pope.

5. Contrivance; artful scheme; deep thought.

Drawn by others, who had deeper reaches than themselves to matters which they least intended.

Hayward.

Some, under types, have affected obscurity to amuse and make themselves admired for profound reaches. Howell.

6. A fetch; an artifice to attain some distant advantage.

The duke of Parma had particular reaches and ends of his own underhand, to cross the design.

Bacon.

7. Tendency to distant consequences.

Stain not my speech

To grosser issues, nor to larger reach,

Than to suspicion. Shakspeare, Othello.

8. Extent.

The confines met of empyrean heaven,
And of this world: and, on the left hand, hell
With long reach interpos'd. Milton, P. L.

9. The straight course of a river between any two bendings, or bights, as they are called. Chelsea reach is an expression well known to those who frequent the river Thames.

REACHER.* n. s. [from reach.] One who fetches from some distant place, and gives.

He [Prynne] there showed A. W. a place where he should sit and write;—and spoke to Jennings, the reacher of the records, that he should let him have any record.

Life of A. Wood, p. 205.

TO REACT. v. a. [re and act.] To return the impulse or impression.

The lungs being the chief instrument of sanguification, and acting strongly upon the chyle to bring it to an animal fluid, must be re-acted upon as strongly. Arbuthnot.

Cut off your hand, and you may do

With t' other hand the work of two;

Because the soul her power contracts,

And on the brother limb reacts. Swift, Miscell.

REACTION. n. s. [reaction, Fr. from react.]

The reciprocation of any impulse or force impressed, made by the body on which such impression is made: action
and reaction are equal.

Do not great bodies conserve their heat the longest, their parts heating one another; and may not great dense and fixed bodies, when heated beyond a certain degree, emit light so copiously, as, by the emission and reaction of its light, and the reflections and refractions of its rays within its pores, to grow still hotter till it comes to a certain period of heat, such as is that of the sun?

Newton, Opt.

Alimentary substances, of a mild nature, act with small force upon the solids, and as the action and reaction are equal, the smallest degree of force in the solids digests them. Arbuthnot.

READ.† n. s. [ræð, Saxon; ræd, Dutch.]

This word is not wholly obsolete; it being retained in the north of England, according to Grose, in the sense of advice. See also TO READ.]

1. Counsel.

Thie'man is blest that hath not lent
To wicked read his ear. Sternhold.

2. Saying; sentence; saw.

This readle is life that oftentime
Great climbers fall unsoft,
In humble dales is footing fast,
The trode is not so tickle. Spenser, Shep. Cal. July.

Then, preaching to the pillow, I repeated
The read thereof, for guerdon of my paine,
And taking downe the shield, with me did it retaine. Spenser, F. Q. iv. x. 11.

TO READ.† v. a. pret. read; part. pass. read. [ræðan, Saxon.]

3. To know by reading.

I have read of an eastern king, who put a judge to death for an iniquitous sentence. Swift.

4. To tell; to declare. [Icel. raeda, loqui.]

Faire sir, doe comfort to you take,
And freely read, what wicked felon so
Hath outrag'd you, and thrall'd your gentle make.
Spenser, F. Q. iii. xi. 15.

READ. part. adj. [from read; the verb read, is pronounced red; the preterite and participle red.] Skilful by reading.

Virgil's shepherds are too well read in the philosophy of Epicurus. Dryden.

We have a poet among us, of a genius as exalted as his stature, and who is very well read in Longinus his treatise concerning the sublime.

Addison, Guardian.

READABLE.* adj. [from read.] That may be read; fit to be read.

It is to be lamented, that Mr. Hume's too zealous concern for the honour of the house of Stuart, operating uniformly through all the volumes of his history, has brought disgrace on a work, which in the main is agreeably written, and is indeed the most readable general account of the English affairs, that has yet been given to the publick.

Hurd, Dial. VI.

READER.† n. s. [neabepe, Saxon.]

1. One that peruses any thing written.

As we must take the care that our words and sense be clear, so if the obscurity happen through the hearers or readers want of understanding, I am not to answer for them. B. Jonson.

REAL. adj. [real, Fr. realis, Lat.]

1. Relating to things, not persons; not personal.

Many are perfect in men's humours, that are not greatly capable of the real part of business; which is the constitution of one that hath studied men more than books.
Bacon.

2. Not fictitious; not imaginary; true; genuine.

We do but describe an imaginary world, that is but little akin to the real one.
Glanville, Scopsis.

When I place an imaginary name at the head of a character, I examine every letter of it, that it may not bear any resemblance to one that is real.
Addison.

Imaginary distempers are attended with real and unfeigned sufferings, that enfeeble the body, and dissipate the spirits.
Blackmore.

The whole strength of the Arian cause, real or artificial; all that can be of any force either to convince, or deceive a reader.
Waterland.

Harris.

Put realgar hot into the midst of the quicksilver, whereby it may be condensed as well from within as without.
Bacon.

REALITY. n.s. [réalité, Fr. from real.]

1. Truth; verity; what is, not what merely seems.

I would have them well versed in the Greek and Latin poets, without which a man fancies that he understands a critic, when in reality he does not comprehend his meaning.
Addison.

The best accounts of the appearances of nature in any single instance human penetration can reach, comes infinitely short of its reality and internal constitution; for who can search out the Almighty's works to perfection?
Cheyne.

My neck may be an idea to you, but it is a reality to me.
Beattie.

2. Something intrinsically important; not merely matter of show.

Of that skill the more thou know'st,
The more she will acknowledge thee her head,
And to realities yield all her shows,
Made so adorn for thy delight the more.
Milton, P. L.

To RE'ALIZE. v. a. [realiser, Fr. from real.]

1. To bring into being or act.

Thus we realise what Archimedes had only in hypothesis, weighing a single grain against the globe of earth.

REAL'LY. adv. [from real.]

1. With actual existence.

We shall at last discover in what persons this holiness is inherent really, in what condition it is inherent perfectly, and consequently in what other sense it may be truly and properly affirmed that the church is holy.
Pearson.

There cannot be a more important case of conscience for men to be resolved in, than to know certainly how far God accepts the will for the deed, and how far he does not; and to be informed truly when men do really will a thing, and when they have really no power to do, what they have willed.
South.

2. In truth; truly; not seemingly only.

Nothing properly is his duty but what is really his interest.
Wilkins.

The understanding represents to the will things really evil, under the notion of good.

REALM.* n.s. [realme, old French.]

1. A kingdom; a king's dominion.

Is there any part of that realm, or any nation therein, which have not yet been subdued to the crown of England?
Spenser.

They had gather'd a wise council to them
Of every realm, that did debate this business.
Shakspeare.

A son whose worthy deeds

Raise him to be the second in that realm.
Milton.

2. Kingly government. This sense is not frequent.

Learn each small people's genius, policies,
The ant's republic, and the realm of bees.
Pope.

REALTY.* n.s. [a word peculiar, I believe, to Milton. Dr. Johnson.—It was introduced by Milton in the sense of royalty; but Henry More had, before Milton, used it in the sense of reality.]

1. Reality means not in this place reality in opposition to show, but loyalty; for the Italian Dictionary explains the adjective reale by loyal.

Pearce on Milton.

O heaven, that such resemblance of the Highest Should yet remain, where faith and reality Remain not!
Milton, P. L.

2. Reality.

We clearly see

The nearly couching of each reality.
More, Life of the Soul, C. ii. st. 12.

REAM.* n.s. [peam, Sax. a bundle; riem, Teut.] A bundle of paper containing twenty quires.

All vain petitions mounting to the sky,
With reams abundant this abode supply.
Pope.

To REAM.* v. n. [hpeman, Sax.] To cry aloud; to scream; to bewail one's self.

A northern word. See GROSE in V.

REEM; and see also TO SCREAM.

To REANIMATE. v. a. [re and animo, Lat.]

To revive; to restore to life.

We are our reanimated ancestors, and antedate their resurrection.
Glanville, Scopsis.

The young man left his own body breathless on the ground, while that of the doe was reanimated.
Spectator.

To REANNE'X. v. a. [re and annex.] To annex again.

King Charles was not a little inflamed with an ambition to repurchase and reannex that dutchy.
Bacon, Hen. VII.

To REAP.* v. a. [Goth. raupjan; Sax. ripan; Su. repa; Belg. reupen. V. Junii Gloss. in Evang. Goth.]

1. To cut corn at harvest.

From Ireland come I with my strength,
And reap the harvest which that rascal sow'd.
Shakspeare.

When we reap the harvest, thou shalt not wholly reap the corners of thy field.
Lev. xix. 9.

The hire of the labourers, which have reaped down your fields, is kept back by fraud.
Ja. v. 5.

2. To gather; to obtain. It is once used by Shakspeare in an ill sense.

They that love the religion which they profess, may have failed in choice, but yet they are sure to reap what benefit the same is able to afford.
Hooker.

What sudden anger's this? how have I reap'd it?
Shakspeare.

This is a thing,

Which you might from relation likewise reap,
Being much spoke of.
Shakspeare, Cymb.

Our sins being ripe, there was no preventing of God's justice from reaping that glory in our calamities, which we robbed him of in our prosperity.
King Charles.

To REAP. v. n. To harvest.

They that sow in tears, shall reap in joy.

Ps. cxxvi. 5.

REA'PER.† n. s. [from reap; Sax. pypepe.]
One that cuts corn at harvest.

From hungry reapers they their sheaves withhold.
Sandys.

Here Ceres' gifts in waving prospect stand,
And nodding tempt the joyful reaper's hand.
Pope.

A thousand forms he wears,
And first a reaper from the field appears;
Sweating he walks, while loads of golden grain
O'ercharge the shoulders of the seeming swain.
Pope.

REA'PINGHOOK. n. s. [reaping and hook.]
A hook used to cut corn in harvest.

Some are brib'd to vow it looks
Most plainly done by thieves with reapinghooks.
Dryden.

To REAPPE'REL.* v. a. [re and apparel.]
To clothe again.

How long a day soever thou make that day in the grave, yet there is no day between that and the resurrection: Then we shall all be invested, reapparell'd, in our own bodies.
Donne, Dev. p. 358.

REAPPEA'RANCE.* n. s. [re and appearance.]
Act of appearing again.

REAPPLICA'TION.* n. s. [re and application.]
Act of applying anew.

A readvency or reaplication of mind to ideas that are actually there.

Norris, Reflec. on Locke, p. 9.

REAR. n. s. [arriere, French.]
1. The hinder troop of an army, or the hinder line of a fleet.

The rear admiral, an arch pirate, was afterwards slain with a great shot. Knolles, Hist. of the Turks.

Argive chiefs
Fled from his well-known face, with wonted fear,
As when his thund'ring sword and pointed spear
Drove headlong to their ships, and gleam'd the rear.
Dryden.

2. The last class; the last in order.

Coins I place in the rear, because made up of both the other. Peaciam.

Snowy-headed Winter leads,
Yellow Autumn brings the rear. Waller.

To REAR.* v. a. [from the noun.] To place so as to protect the rear. Not in use.

We cannot flank and rear our discourses with military allusions.

Scott, Serm. before the Artillery Comp. (1680.)

REAR.† adj. [hpepe, Sax. hraer, Icel. crudus.]
Raw; half roasted; half soden.

Eggs meane between rears and hard.

Sir T. Elyot, Cast. of Health.

REAR.† adv. Early: a provincial word
[corrupted, perhaps, from rath. See
RATH.]

O'er yonder hill does scant the dawn appear,
Then why does Cuddy leave his cot so rear? Gay.

To REAR.† v. a. [næpan, Sax. levare, eregere.]

1. To raise up.

All the people shouted with a loud voice, for the rearing up of the house of the Lord.

1 Esdr. v. 62.
Who now shall rear you to the sun, or rank
Your tribes? Milton, P. L.

2. To lift up from a fall.

Down again she fell unto the ground,
But heer quickly rear'd up again. Spenser.

In adoration at his feet I fell Submit: he rear'd me. Milton, P. L.

3. To move upwards.

Up to a hill anon his steps he rear'd,
From whose high top to ken the prospect round.
Milton, P. R.

4. To bring up to maturity.
No creature goeth to generate, whilst the female is busy in sitting or rearing her young.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.
They were a very hardy breed, and reared their young ones without any care. Mortimer, Husb.
They flourish'd long in tender bliss, and rear'd
A numerous offspring, lovely like themselves.
Thomson.

5. To educate; to instruct.
He wants a father to protect his youth,
And rear him up to virtue. Southern.
They have in every town publick nurseries,
where all parents, except cottagers and labourers, are obliged to send their infants to be reared and educated. Swift.

6. To exalt; to elevate.
Charity decent, modest, easy, kind,
Softens the high, and rears the abject mind. Prior.

7. To rouse; to stir up.
Into the naked woods he goes,
And seeks the tusk'd boar to rear,
With well-mouth'd hounds and pointed spear.
Dryden.

8. To raise; to breed.
No flesh from market-towns our peasant sought;
He rear'd his frugal meat, but never bought.
Harte.

9. [næpan, Sax. exequi, moliri.] To achieve; to obtain. Obsolete.

He in an open treaty lately held
Fro me the honour of that game did rear.

Spenser, F. Q. iv. iv. 6.

REA'WARD.† n. s. [from rear. "Sometimes written reverward, as we find it in our old English Bibles, particularly in Isaiah, lviii. 8. Thy righteousness shall go before thee; the glory of the Lord shall be thy reverward. This some readers mistake for reward; though it is evidently opposed to go before thee, and compound of rear and ward." Rev.
Mr. Lemon, Dict. Add.]

1. The last troop.

He from the beginning began to be in the reverward, and before they left fighting, was too far off. Sidney.

The standard of Dan was the reverward of the camp. Num. x. 25.

2. The end; the tail; a train behind.

Why follow'd not, when she said Tybalt's dead,
Thy father or thy mother?

But with a reverward following Tybalt's death,
Romeo is banished. Shakspeare, Rom. and Jul.

3. The latter part. In contempt.

He was ever in the reverward of the fashion.
Shakspeare.

REA'RMUSE. n. s. [more properly revere-mouse; hpepemur, Sax.] The leather-winged bat.

Some war with rearmice for their leathern wings
To make my small elves coats. Shakspeare.

Of flying fishes, the wings are not feathers, but a thin kind of skin, like the wings of a bat or rearmouse.

Abbott.

To REASCEND. v. n. [re and ascend.] To climb again.

When as the day the heaven doth adorn,
I wish that night the noyous day would end,
And when as night hath us of light forlorn,
I wish that day would shortly reascend. Spenser.

Taught by the heavenly muse to venture down
The dark descent, and up to reascend. Milton, P. L.

These puissant legions, whose exile
Hath empty'd heaven, shall fall to reascend,
Self-rai'd, and repossess their native seat.
Milton, P. L.

To REASCEND. v. a. To mount again.

When the god his fury had allay'd,
He mounts aloft, and reascends the skies.
Addison.

REA'SON. n. s. [raison, Fr. ratio, Lat.]

1. The power by which man deduces one proposition from another, or proceeds from premises to consequences; the rational faculty; discursive power.

Reason is the director of man's will, discovering in action what is good; for the laws of well-doing are the dictates of right reason. Hooker.

Though brutish that contest and foul,
When reason hath to deal with force; yet so
Most reason is that reason overcome. Milton, P. L.

I appeal to the common judgement of mankind, whether the humane nature be not so framed, as to acquiesce in such a moral certainty, as the nature of things is capable of; and if it were otherwise, whether that reason which belongs to us, would not prove a burden and a torment to us,
rather than a privilege, by keeping us in a continual suspense, and thereby rendering our conditions perpetually restless and uneasy. Wilkins.

Dim, as the borrow'd beams of moon and stars
To lonely, weary, wand'ring travellers,
Is reason to the soul: and as on high,
Those rolling fires discover but the sky,
Not light us here; so reason's glimmering ray
Was lent, not to assure our doubtful way,
But guide us upward to a better day. Dryden.

It would be well, if people would not lay so much weight on their own reason in matters of religion, as to think every thing impossible and absurd, which they cannot conceive: how often do we contradict the right rules of reason in the whole course of our lives! reason itself is true and just, but the reason of every particular man is weak and wavering, perpetually swayed and turned by his interests, his passions, and his vices. Swift, Miscell.

2. Cause; ground or principle.

What the apostles deemed rational and probable means to that end, there is no reason, or probability, to think should ever in any produce this effect. Hammend.

Virtue and vice are not arbitrary things, but there is a natural and eternal reason for that goodness and virtue, and against vice and wickedness.
Tillotson.

3. Efficient cause.

Spain is thin sown of people, partly by reason of the sterility of the soil, and partly their natives are exhausted by so many employments in such vast territories as they possess. Bacon.

Such a benefit, as by the antecedent will of Christ is intended to all men living, though all men, by reason of their own demerits, do not actually receive the fruit of it. White.

The reason of the motion of the balance in a wheel watch, is by the motion of the next wheel.
Hale.

By reason of the sickness of a reverend prelate,
I have been over-ruled to approach this place.
Sprat.

I have not observed equality of numbers in my verse; partly by reason of my haste, but more especially because I would not have my sense a slave to syllables. Dryden.

4. Final cause.

Reason, in the English language, is sometimes taken for true and clear principles; sometimes for clear and fair deductions; sometimes for the cause, particularly the final cause. Locke.

5. Argument; ground of persuasion; motive.

I mask the business from the common eye
For sundry weighty reasons. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

If it be natural, ought we not rather to conclude, that there is some ground and reason for these fears, and that nature hath not planted them in us to no purpose? Tillotson.

If we commemorate any mystery of our redemption, or article of our faith, we ought to confirm our belief of it, by considering all those reasons upon which it is built; that we may be able to give a good account of the hope that is in us.

Nelson.

6. Ratiocination; discursive act.

When she rates things, and moves from ground to ground,

The name of reason she obtains by this;

But when by reason she the truth hath found, And standeth fixt, she understanding is. Davies.

7. Clearness of faculties.

Lovers and madmen have their seething brains, Such shaping fantasies that apprehend More than cool reason ever comprehends. Shaks.

When valour preys on reason,

It eats the sword it fights with.

Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

8. Right; justice.

I was promis'd on a time,

To have reason for my rhyme:

From that time unto this season,

I receiv'd nor rhyme nor reason. Spenser.

Are you in earnest?

Ay, and resolv'd withal

To do myself this reason and this right. Shaks.

The papists ought in reason to allow them all the excuses they make use of for themselves; such as an invincible ignorance, oral tradition, and authority. Stillinger fleet.

Let it drink deep in thy most vital part;

Strike home, and do me reason in thy heart,

Dryden.

9. Reasonable claim; just practice.

God brings good out of evil; and therefore it were but reason we should trust God to govern his own world, and wait till the change cometh, or the reason be discovered. Ep. Taylor.

Conscience, not acting by law, is a boundless presumptuous thing; and for any one, by virtue thereof, to challenge himself a privilege of doing what he will, and of being unaccountable, is in all reason too much, either for man or angel. South.

A severe reflection Montaigne has made on princes, that we ought not in reason to have any expectations of favour from them.

Dryden, Ded. to Aureng.

We have as great assurance that there is a God, as the nature of the thing to be proved is capable of, and as we could in reason expect to have.

Tillotson, Pref.

When any thing is proved by as good arguments as a thing of that kind is capable of, we ought not in reason to doubt of its existence. Tillotson.

10. Rationale; just account.

This reason did the ancient fathers render, why the church was called Catholic. Pearson.

To render a reason of an effect or phenomenon, is to deduce it from something else more known than itself. Boyle.

11. Moderation; moderate demands.

The most probable way of bringing France to reason, would be by the making an attempt upon the Spanish West Indies, and by that means to cut off all communication with this great source of riches. Addison.

To REA'SON.† v. n. [raisonner, Fr.]

1. To argue rationally; to deduce consequences justly from premises.

No man in the strength of the first grace, can merit the second; for reason they do not, who think so; unless a beggar, by receiving one alms, can merit another. South.

Ideas, as ranked under names, are those, that for the most part men reason of within themselves, and always those which they commune about with others. Locke.

In the lonely grove,

*Twas there just and good he reason'd strong, Clear'd some great truth, or rais'd some serious song. Tickell.

2. To debate; to discourse; to talk; to take or give an account.

Reason with the fellow,

Before you punish him, where he heard this. Shakspeare.

I reason'd with a Frenchman yesterday,

Who told me in the narrow seas,

There miscarried a vessel of our country. Shaks.

Stand still, that I may reason with you of all the righteous acts of the Lord. 1 Sam. xii. 7.

3. To raise disquisitions; to make enquiries.

Jesus, perceiving their thoughts, said, what reason ye in your hearts? St. Luke, v. 22.

They reason'd high,

Of providence, foreknowledge, will, and fate.

Milton, P. L.

To REA'SON.† v. a.

1. To examine rationally. This is a French mode of speech, Dr. Johnson says; and is the only instance which he brings of reason as a verb active: but he had mistakenly placed the word in the example from Addison, in the next meaning, as a verb neuter.

When they are clearly discovered, well digested, and well reasoned in every part, there is beauty in such a theory. Burnet.

2. To persuade by argument.

Men that will not be reasoned into their senses, may yet be laughed or drolled into them.

L'Estrange.

Love is not to be reason'd down, or lost

In high ambition. Addison.

REA'SONABLE. adj. [raison, Fr.]

1. Having the faculty of reason; endued with reason.

He perceived her only son lay hurt, and that his hurt was so deadly, as that already his life had lost use of the reasonable and almost sensible part. Sidney.

2. Acting, speaking, or thinking rationally.

The parliament was dissolved, and gentlemen furnished with such forces, as were held sufficient to hold in bridle either the malice or rage of reasonable people. Hayward.

3. Just; rational; agreeable to reason.

By indubitable certainty, I mean that which doth not admit of any reasonable cause of doubting, which is the only certainty of which most things are capable. Wilkins.

A law may be reasonable in itself, although a man does not allow it, or does not know the reason of the lawgivers. Swift.

4. Not immoderate.

Let all things be thought upon, That may with reasonable swiftness add More feathers to our wings. Shaks. Hen. V.

5. Tolerable; being in mediocrity.

I could with reasonable good manner receive the salutation of her and of the princess Pamela, doing them yet no further reverence than one princess oweth to another. Sidney.

A good way distant from the nigra rupes, there are four several lands of reasonable quantity.

Abbot, Desc. of the World.

Notwithstanding these defects, the English colonies maintained themselves in a reasonable good estate, as long as they retained their own ancient laws. Davies on Ireland.

REA'SONABLENESS. n. s. [from reasonable.]

1. The faculty of reason.

2. Agreeableness to reason.

They thought the work would be better done, if those, who had satisfied themselves with the reasonableness of what they wish, would undertake the converting and disposing of other men. Clarendon.

He that rightly understands the reasonableness and excellency of charity, will know, that it can never be excusable to waste any of our money in pride and folly. Law.

3. Compliance with reason.

The passive reason, which is more properly reasonableness, is that order and congruity which is impressed upon the thing thus wrought; as in a watch, the whole frame and contexture of it carries a reasonableness in it, the passive impression of the reason or intellectual idea that was in the artist. Hale.

4. Moderation.

REA'SONABLY. adv. [from reasonable.]

1. Agreeably to reason.

Chaucer makes Arcite violent in his love, and unjust in the pursuit of it; yet when he came to die, he made him think more reasonably.

Dryden, Pref. to Fab.

The church has formerly had eminent saints in that sex; and it may reasonably be thought, that it is purely owing to their poor and vain education, that this honour of their sex is for the most part confined to former ages. Law.

2. Moderately; in a degree reaching to mediocrity.

Some man, reasonably studied in the law, should be persuaded to go thither as chancellor.

Bacon, Adv. to Villiers.

If we can by industry make our deaf and dumb persons reasonably perfect in the language and pronunciation, he may be also capable of the same privilege of understanding by the eye what is spoken. Holder, Elem. of Speech.

REA'SONER. n. s. [raisonneur, Fr. from reason.] One who reasons; an arguer.

Due reverence pay

To learned Epicurus; see the way

By which this reasoner of so high renown

Moves through th' æliptic road the rolling sun. Blackmore.

The terms are loose and undefined; and what less becomes a fair reasoner, he puts wrong and invidious names on every thing to colour a false way of arguing. Addison.

Those reasoners, who employ so much of their zeal for the upholding the balance of power in Christendom, by their practices are endeavouring to destroy it at home. Swift.

REA'SONING.† n. s. [from reason.] Argument.

The violence of winds, and the reasonings of men. Wisd. vii. 20.

Then there arose a reasoning among them, which of them should be greatest. St. Luke, ix. 46.

Down, reason, then; at least vain reasonings, down. Milton, S. A.

Those who would make use of solid arguments and strong reasonings to a reader of so delicate a turn, would be like that foolish people, who worshipped a fly, and sacrificed an ox to it. Addison, Freeholder.

Your reasonings therefore on this head, amount only to what the schools call ignoratio elenchi; proving before the question, on talking wide of the purpose. Waterland.

REA'SONLESS. adj. [from reason.] Void of reason.

This profler is absurd and reasonless.

Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

Is it

Her true perfection, or my false transgression, That makes me reasonless to reason thus? Shaks.

That they wholly direct the reasonless mind, I am resolved; for all those which were created mortal, as birds and beasts, are left to their natural appetites. Raleigh, Hist. of the World.

These reasons in love's law have past for good, Though fond and reasonless to some. Milton, S. A.

REASSEMBLAGE.* n. s. [re and assemblage.] State of being again brought together.

New beings arise from the reassemblage of the scattered parts. Harris, Three Treas. Note, VII.

TO REASSE'MBLE. v. a. [re and assemble.]
To collect anew.

There, resembling our afflicted powers,
Consult how to offend our enemy. Milton, P. L.
TO REASSE'RT. v. a. [re and assert.] To assert anew; to maintain after suspension or cessation.

His steps I followed, his doctrine I reasserted.
Atterbury.

Young Orestes grown
To manly years should reassert the throne. Pope.
TO REASSU'ME. v. a. [reassumo, Lat. re and assume.] To resume; to take again.

To him the Son return'd
Into his blissful bosom reassum'd,
In glory as of old. Milton, P. L.
Nor only on the Trojans fell this doom,
Their hearts at last the vanquish'd reassum'd.
Denham.

For this he reassumes the nod,
While Semele commands the god. Prior.
After Henry VIII. had reassumed the supremacy, a statute was made, by which all doctors of the civil law might be made chancellors.

Ayliffe, Parergon.
TO REASSU'RE. v. a. [reassurer, Fr.] To free from fear; to restore from terror.
They rose with fear,
Till dauntless Pallas reassur'd the rest. Dryden.

RE'ASTINESS.* n. s. [from reasty.] State of being rancid.

Cotgrave, and Sherwood.
RE'ASTY.* adj. [perhaps a corruption of rusty; Sax. purcian, to contract rust.]
Covered with a kind of rust, and having a rancid taste: a word applied to dried meat, particularly to bacon, and yet used in the north of England. "Resty, as flesh; rancidus." Pr. Parv.

And then came halting Jone,
And brought a gambone
Of bakon that was reasty. Skelton, Poems, p. 132.

REATE.† n. s. [perhaps a corruption of reak.
See REAK.] A kind of long small grass that grows in water, and complicates itself together.

Let them lie dry six months to kill the water-weeds; as water-lilies, candocks, reate, and bul-rushes. Walton.

TO REATTE'MPT.* v. a. [re and attempt.]
To try again.

Reattempt a perfect mortification of the old man throughout, giving no unseasonable liberty to our deceitful body.

More, Song of the Soul, Notes, p. 369.

TO REAVE.† v. a. pret. reft. [reapian, Sax.
raffen, Teut. See also TO BEREAVE.]

1. To take away by stealth or violence.
An obsolete word, Dr. Johnson says;
but it is still a word of use, in the north,
for tearing off, or blowing off, as the wind does thatch.

Dismounting from his lofty steed,
Heto him leapt, in mind to reave his life. Spenser.
Some make his measly bed, but reave his rest.

Carew.
But these men, knowing, having heard the voice
Of God, by some means, that sad death hath reft
The ruler here; will never suffer left
Their unjust wooing of his wife. Chapman.

Who can be bound by any solemn vow,
To do a murderous deed, to rob a man,
To force a spotless virgin's chastity,
To reave the orphan of his patrimony,
And have no other reason for his wrong,
But that he was bound by a solemn oath?

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

Be wise, O my soul, and make sure of such friends as thou canst not be reaved of.

Bp. Hall, Soliloq. § 43.
Ah! who hath reft, quoth he, my dearest pledge?
Milton, Lycidas.

2. It was used as well in a good as bad sense.

They sought my troubled sense how to deceive
With talk, that might unquiet fancies reave.

Spenser.
Each succeeding time addeth or reaveth goods and evils, according to the occasions itself producheth.

Carew.
REBAPTIZA'TION. n. s. [rebaptisation, Fr.
from rebaptize.] Renewal of baptism.

In maintenance of rebaptization, their arguments are built upon this, that hereticks are not any part of the church of Christ. Hooker.

TO REBAPTIZE. v. a. [rebaptiser, Fr. re
and baptize.] To baptize again.

Understanding that the rites of the church were observed, he approved of their baptism, and would not suffer them to be rebaptized. Ayliffe, Parergon.

REBAPTIZER.* n. s. [from rebaptize.] One that baptizes again.

There were Adamites in former times, and re- baptizers. Howell, Lett. iv. 29.
The name anabaptist signifieth a rebaptizer.

Featley, Diyp. Dipt. p. 23.
TO REBA'TE.† v. a. [rebattre, Fr.] To blunt; to beat to obtuseness; to deprive of keenness.

He doth rebate and blunt his natural edge
With profits of the mind, study, and fast. Shaks.
If a message be brought me from a man of absolute credit with me, but by a messenger that is not so, my confidence in the truth of the relation cannot but be rebatet, and lessened, by my diffidence in the relater.

Chillingworth, Rel. of Prot. ch. 1. § 8.
He modifies his first severe decree;
The keener edge of battle to rebatet,
The troops for honour fighting, not for hate.

Dryden.
My flagging soul flies under her own pitch,
My senses too are dull and stupify'd,
Their edge rebatet.

Dryden.
The key Goat, the Crab which square the scales;
With those of Aries trine consent to hate
The scales of Libra, and her rays rebatet. Creech.
Their innocence unfeign'd long joys afford
To the honest nuptial bed, and, in the wane
Of life, rebatet the miseries of age. Philips.

REBA'TEMENT.* n. s. [from rebatet.] Diminution.

He made narrowed rests round about, [in the margin, narrowings or rebatements.] 1 Kings, vi. 6.

REBA'TO.* n. s. A sort of ruff. See RA- BATO.

Spangles, embroideries, shadows, rebatetos.
Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 478.

RE'BECK.† n. s. [rebec, Fr. ribecca, Italian.
Dr. Johnson. — Armor. rebet, fiducula, pandura. Lye. — Menage traces the word to the Arab. rebab, or rebaba, lyra;

and accordingly rebebe in old French,
and ribibe in old English, is another name for the rebeck. Sir John Hawkins says, that the Moors brought it into Spain, whence it passed into Italy, and obtained the appellation of ribecca; or ribebbas, as Florio's dictionary of 1598 observes; in which it is rendered in English, a kit. The Moorish instrument is said by Mr. Warton to have had only two strings, played on by a bow. Dr. Johnson and Mr. Steevens pronounce our rebeck an instrument of three strings.] A kind of fiddle.

When the merry bells ring round,
And the jound rebecks sound,
To many a youth and many a maid,
Dancing in the checker'd shade. Milton, L'All.

RE'BEL. n. s. [rebelle, Fr. rebellis, Lat.]
One who opposes lawful authority by violence.

The merciless Macdonel
Worthy to be a rebel; for to that
The multiplying villanies of nature
Do swarm upon him. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

The rebels there are up,
And put the Englishmen unto the sword. Shaks.
Shall man from nature's sanction stray
A rebel to her rightful sway? Fenton.

RE'BEL.* adj. [rebellis, Lat.] Rebellious.

His pride
Had cast him out of heaven, with all his host
Of rebel angels. Milton, P. L.

Call to your aid, with boundless promises,
Each rebel wish, each traitor inclination,
That raises tumults in the female breast,
The love of power, of pleasure, and of show.

Johnson, Irene.
TO REBE'L. v. n. [rebellio, Lat.] To rise in violent opposition against lawful authority.

Boys, immature in knowledge,
Pawn their experience to their present pleasure,
And so rebel to judgement. Shaks. Ant. and Cleop.

If they perceive dissention in our looks,
How will their grudging stomachs be provok'd
To wilful disobedience, and rebel! Shaks. Hen. VI.
Such smiling rogues as these soothe every passion,
That in the nature of their lords rebels;
Bring oil to fire. Shakespeare, L. Lear.

There was a time, when all the body's members
Rebell'd against the belly. Shakespeare, Coriol.
How could my hand rebel against my heart?
How could your heart rebel against your reason?

Dryden.
Part of the angels rebelled against God,
and thereby lost their happy state. Locke.

REBE'LLD.* part. adj. Rebellious; having been guilty of rebellion.

Arm'd with thy might, rid heaven of these rebell'd.
Milton, P. L.
REBE'LLER.† n. s. [from rebel.] One that rebels. Dict.

All such rebellers I shall make for to flee,
And with hard punishments putt them to dethe.
Parfere, Myst. of Candlemas-Day, (1512).

REBE'LLION. n. s. [rebellion, Fr. rebellio, Lat. from rebel.] Insurrection against lawful authority.

He was victorious in rebellions and seditious of people. Bacon.

Adam's sin, or the curse upon it, did not deprive him of rule, but left the creatures to a rebellion or reluctation. Bacon.

Of their names in heavenly records now
[is] no memorial, blotted out and ras'd
By their rebellion from the books of life.

Milton, P. L.
REBE'LLIOUS. adj. [from rebel.] Opponent to lawful authority.

From the day that thou didst depart out of Egypt, until ye came unto this place, ye have been rebellious against the Lord. Deut. ix. 7.

This our son is stubborn and rebellious, he will not obey our voice. Deut. xxi. 20.

Bent he seems
On desperate revenge, which shall rebound
Upon his own rebellious head. Milton, P. L.

REBE'LLIOUSLY. adv. [from rebellious.] In opposition to lawful authority.

When one shewed him where a nobleman, that had rebelliously born arms against him, lay very honourably intomb'd, and advis'd the king to de-face the monument; he said, No, no; but I would all the rest of mine enemies may be honourably intomb'd. Camden, Rem.

REBELLIOUSNESS. † n. s. [from rebellious.] The quality of being rebellious. These pretermitted places were solid proofs of Romish rebelliousness. Bp. Morton, Discharge, &c. (1633), p. 201.

TO REBELLOW. v. n. [re and bellow.] To bellow in return; to echo back a loud noise.

He loudly bray'd with beastly yelling sound,
That all the fields rebellow'd again. Spenser.
The resisting air the thunder broke,
The cave rebellow'd, and the temple shook. Dryd.
From whence were heard, rebellowing to the main,
The roars of lions. Dryden.

REBOATION. † n. s. [rebo, Lat.] The return of a loud bellowing sound. I imagine that I should hear the rebocation of an universal groan. Patrick, Divine Arithmetic, (1659), p. 2.

TO REBOLL. * v. n. [rebullio, Lat. See REBOLLITION.] To take fire; to be hot.

Some of his companions thereat reboyl'd; — calling him a pick-thank.

Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 107. b.

TO REBOUND. v. n. [reboundir, Fr. re and boun.] To spring back; to be reverberated; to fly back, in consequence of motion impressed and resisted by a greater power.

Whether it were a roaring voice of most savage wild beasts, or a rebounding echo from the hollow mountains. Wisd. xvii.

It with rebounding surge the bars assail'd.

Milton, P. L.

Life and death are in the power of the tongue, and that not only directly with regard to the good or ill we may do to others, but reflexively with regard to what may rebound to ourselves.

Gov. of the Tongue.

Bodies which are absolutely hard, or so soft as to be void of elasticity, will not rebound from one another: impenetrability makes them only stop.

Newton, Opt.

She bounding from the shelvy shore,
Round the descending nymph the waves rebounding roar. Pope.

TO REBOUND. v. a.

1. To reverberate; to beat back.

All our invectives, at their supposed errors, fall back with a rebounded force upon our own real ones. Decay of Chr. Piety.

Silenus sung, the vales his voice rebound,
And carry to the skies the sacred sound. Dryden.

2. Prior has used it improperly.

Flowers, by the soft south-west
Open'd, and gather'd by religious hands,
Rebound their sweets from the odoriferous pavement. Prior.

REBOUND. n. s. [from the verb.] The act of flying back in consequence of motion resisted; resiliency.

I do feel,

By the rebound of yours, a grief that shoots
My very heart. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

If you strike a ball sidelong, not full upon the surface, the rebound will be as much the contrary way; whether there be any such resiliency in echoes may be tried. Bacon.

The weapon with unerring fury flew,
At his left shoulder aim'd: nor entrance found;
But back, as from a rock, with swift rebound,
Harmless return'd. Dryden.

TO REBRACE. * v. a. [re and brace.] To brace again.

'Tis a cause

To arm the hand of childhood, and rebrace

The slacken'd sinews of time-wearied age.

Gay, Agrippina.

TO REBREATH. * v. a. [re and breathe.]

To breathe again.

As you are a soldier,
And Englishman, have hope to be redeem'd
From this your scorn'd bondage you sustain; —
Hope to rebreath that air you tasted first.

Heywood, Challenge for Beauty.

REBUFF. n. s. [rebuffade, Fr. rebuffo, Italian.] Repercussion; quick and sudden resistance.

By ill chance

The strong rebuff of some tumultuous cloud,
Instinct with fire and nitre, hurried him
As many miles aloft. Milton, P. L.

TO REBUFF. v. a. [from the noun.] To beat back; to oppose with sudden violence.

TO REBUILD. v. a. [re and build.] To re-edify; to restore from demolition; to repair.

The fines imposed there were the more questioned, and repined against, because they were assigned to the rebuilding and repairing of St. Paul's church.

Clarendon.

Fine is the secret, delicate the art,
To raise the shades of heroes to our view,
Rebuild fall'n empires, and old time renew.

Tickell.

REBUILD. * n. s. [from rebuild.] One who rebuilds.

The rebuilders of Jerusalem after the captivity were necessitated, every one with one of his hands, to work in the building; with the other, to hold a weapon. Bp. Bull, Works, vol. i. p. 240.

REBUKABLE. adj. [from rebuke.] Worthy of reprehension.

Rebukable

And worthy shameful check it were, to stand
On mere mechanic compliment.

Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

TO REBUKE. † v. a. [reboucher, Fr. Dr. Johnson. — Serenius refers the word to the "Arm. rebeck, objurgare; fortè à re, and *Ice*l. beckin, insultatio." The Fr. reboucher, is to stop the mouth of a person.] To chide; to reprehend; to repress by objurgation.

I am asham'd; does not the stone rebuke me
For being more stone than it? Shaks. Wint. Tale.
[He] was rebuked for his iniquity; the dumb ass, speaking with man's voice, forbade the madness of the prophet. 2 Pet. ii. 16.

The proud he tam'd, the penitent he cheer'd,
Nor to rebuke the rich offender fear'd. Dryden.

REBUKE. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Reprehension; chiding expression; objurgation.

Why bear you these rebukes, and answer not?

Shakspeare.

If he will not yield,
Rebuke and dread correction wait on us,
And they shall do their office. Shaks. Hen. IV.
Thy rebuke hath broken my heart. Ps. lxxix. 21.
The rebukes and chiding to children, should be in grave and dispassionate words. Locke.

Shall Cibber's son, without rebuke,
Swear like a lord? Pope.

Should vice expect to 'scape rebuke,
Because its owner is a duke? Swift, Miscell.

2. In low language, it signifies any kind of check.

He gave him so terrible a rebuke upon the forehead with his heel, that he laid him at his length.

L'Estrange.

REBUKER. n. s. [from rebuke.] A chider; a reprehender.

The revolvers are profound to make slaughter, though I have been a rebuker of them all. Hosea, v. 2.

REBUKEFUL. * adj. [rebuke and full.] Abounding in rebuke: as, "a railer [is] a rebukeful speaker." Huloet. Not now in use.

REBUKEFULLY. * adv. [from rebukeful.] With reprehension.

Unto every man disclose not thy heart, least peradventure he will give to thee a fayned thanke, and after report rebukefully of thee.

Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 112. b.

REBULLITION. * n. s. [rebullio, Latin.] Act of boiling or effervescing.

We are sorry to hear that the Scottish gentlemen, who have been lately sent to that king, found (as they say) but a bruske welcome; which makes all fear, that there may be a rebullition in that business. Wotton, Rem. p. 582.

TO REBURY. * v. a. [re and bury.] To inter again.

He caused her body to be re-buried in St. Maries church in Oxford, with great pomp and solemnity. Ashmole, Berk. i. p. 154.

REBUS. † n. s. [rebus, old Fr. from the Latin word rebus; the origin of which adoption is ascribed to the priests of Picardy, who, during the time of the carnival, made certain libels "de rebus quæ geruntur," that is, jokes and satires, by breaking and joining words, or by representing meanings in a kind of picture. See Menage. Hence the term rebus de Picardy; which Sir George Buck explains by "devises and representations of odd things by words and mottoes; which present one thing, and by dividing the word, in pronunciation, signify another." Hist. of Rich. III. ad fin.] A word or name represented by things; a sort of riddle.

Some citizens, wanting arms, have coined themselves certain devices alluding to their names, which we call rebuses: Master Juggle the printer, in many of his books, took, to express his name, a nightingale sitting in a bush with a scrole in her mouth, wherein was written juggle, juggle, juggle. Peacham.

A rebus has been lately hewn out in free-stone, and erected over the two portals of Blenheim house, being the figure of a monstrous lion tearing to pieces a little cock. For the better understanding of which device, I must acquaint my English reader, that the cock has the misfortune to be called in Latin by the same word that signifies a Frenchman, as a lion is the emblem of the English nation.

Addison, Spect. No. 59.

From Egyptian hieroglyphics to modern rebus-writing: Louth, Lett. to Warburton, p. 13.

TO REBUT. † v. n. [rebuter, Fr.]

1. To retire back. Obsolete.

Themselves too rudely rigorous,
Astounded with the stroke of their own hand,
Do back rebut, and each to other yielded land. Spenser.

2. To return an answer: a law term.

The plaintiff may answer the rejoinder by a sur-rejoinder; upon which the defendant may rebut. Blackstone.

TO REBUT. * v. a. To beat back; to keep off; to drive away.

But he, not like a weary traveller,
Their sharp assault right boldly did rebut. Spenser, F. Q. ii. li. 23.

About his head a rocky canopye,
And craggy hangings, round a shadow threw,
Rebutting Phœbus' parching fervencie.

P. Fletcher, Pisc. Ecl. i. st. 3.

REBUTTER.† n. s. An answer to a rejoinder.

The plaintiff may answer the rejoinder by a sur-rejoinder; upon which the defendant may rebut; and the plaintiff answer him by a sur-rebutter. Which pleas, replications, rejoinders, sur-rejoinders, rebutters, and sur-rebutters answer to the exceptio, replicatio, duplicatio, triplicatio, et quadruplicatio of the Roman laws. Blackstone.

TO RECALL. v. a. [re and call.] To call back; to call again; to revoke.

They who recall the church unto that which was at the first, must set bounds unto their speeches.

Hooker.

If Henry were recall'd to life again,
These news would cause him once more yield the ghost.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

Neglected long, she let the secret rest,
Till love recall'd it to her labouring breast.

Dryden.

It is strange the soul should never once recall over any of its pure native ideas, before it borrowed any thing from the body; never any other ideas, but what derive their original from that union.

Locke.

To the churches, wherein they were ordained, they might of right be recalled as to their proper church, under pain of excommunication.

Ayliffe, Parergon.

It is necessary to recall to the reader's mind, the desire Ulysses has to reach his own country.

Broome on the Odyssey.

If princes, whose dominions lie contiguous, be forced to draw from those armies which act against France, we must hourly expect having those troops recalled, which they now leave with us in the midst of a siege.

Swift, Miscell.

RECALL. n. s. [from the verb.] Revocation; act or power of calling back.

Other decrees

Against these are gone forth, without recall.

Milton, P. L.

'Tis done, and since 'tis done, 'tis past recall;
And since 'tis past recall, must be forgotten.

Dryden.

TO RECA'NT. v. a. [recanto, Lat.] To retract; to recall; to contradict what one has once said or done.

He shall do this, or else I do recant

The pardon that I late pronounced.

Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

How soon would ease recant

Vows made in pain as violent and void?

Milton, P. L.

TO RECA'NT. v. n. To revoke a position; to unsay what has been said.

If it be thought, that the praise of a translation consists in adding new beauties, I shall be willing to recant.

Dryden.

That the legislature have power to change the succession, whenever the necessities of the kingdom require, is so useful towards preserving our religion and liberty, that I know not how to recant.

Swift.

RECA'NTATION. n. s. [from recant.] Retraction; declaration contradictory to a former declaration.

She could not see means to join this recantation to the former vow.

Sidney.

The poor man was imprisoned for this discovery, and forced to make a publick recantation.

Stillington.

RECA'NTER. n. s. [from recant.] One who recants.

The publick body, which doth seldom

Play the recanter, feeling in itself

A lack of Timon's aid, hath sense without

Of its own fall, restraining aid to Timon.

Shakespeare.

TO RECAPA'CITATE. * v. a. [re and capacitate.] To qualify again.

There was another [amendment] which provided; that persons, recapacitating themselves by taking the oaths, should not come into the places out of which they were turned, if full.

Atterbury, Lett. to Bp. Trelawney.

TO RECAPITULATE. v. a. [recapituler, Fr. re and capitulum, Lat.] To repeat again the sum of a former discourse.

Hylobares judiciously and resentingly recapitulates your main reasonings. More, Div. Dialogues.

I have been forced to recapitulate these things, because mankind is not more liable to deceit, than it is willing to continue in a pleasing error.

Dryden, Dufresnoy.

RECAPITULATION. n. s. [from recapitulate.] Distinct repetition of the principal points.

He maketh a recapitulation of the Christian churches; among the rest, he addeth the isle of Eden by name.

Raleigh.

Instead of raising any particular uses from the point that has been delivered, let us make a brief recapitulation of the whole.

South.

RECAPITULATORY.† adj. [from recapitulate.] Repeating again.

This law is comprehensive, and recapitulatory, as it were, of the rest concerning our neighbour.

Barrow on the Decalogue.

Illustrating it by recapitulatory moral reflections.

Watson, Hist. E. P. iii. 358.

TO RECAPTURE. * v. a. To retake a prize.

TO RECAR'NIFY. * v. a. [re and car'nify.] To convert again into flesh.

Looking upon a herd of kine quietly grazing up and down, I fell to consider that the flesh which is daily dished upon our tables is but concocted grass, which is recar'nified in our stomachs, and transmuted to another flesh.

Howell, Lett. ii. 50.

TO CARRY. v. a. [re and carry.] To carry back.

When the Turks besieged Malta or Rhodes, pigeons carried and recarried letters.

Walton, Angler.

TO RECA'ST. * v. a. [re and cast.]

1. To throw again.

In the midst of their running race, they would cast and recast themselves from one to another horse.

Florio, Tr. of Montaigne, p. 155.

2. To moulder away.

The advocates of free inquiry have recast the annals of Christian antiquity.

Bp. Burgess on the Div. of Christ, p. 28.

TO RECE'DE. v. n. [recedo, Lat.]

1. To fall back; to retreat.

A deaf noise of sounds that never cease, Confus'd and chiding, like the hollow roar Of tides, receding from the insulted shore.

Dryden.

Ye doubts and fears!

Scatter'd by winds recede, and wild in forests rove.

Prior.

All bodies, moved circularly, have a perpetual endeavour to recede from the centre, and every moment would fly out in right lines, if they were not violently restrained by contiguous matter.

Bentley.

2. To desist; to relax any claim.

I can be content to recede much from my own interests and personal rights.

King Charles.

They hoped that their general assembly would be persuaded to depart from some of their demands; but that, for the present, they had not authority to recede from any one proposition.

Clarendon.

RECEIPT.† n. s. [receptum, Latin.]

1. The act of receiving.

Villain, thou didst deny the gold's receipt,
And told me of a mistress.

Shakespeare, Com. of Err.

It must be done upon the receipt of the wound, before the patient's spirits be overheated.

Wiseman, Surg.

The joy of a monarch for the news of a victory must not be expressed like the ecstasy of a harlequin, on the receipt of a letter from his mistress.

Dryden.

2. The place of receiving.

Jesus saw Matthew sitting at the receipt of custom.

St. Matthew, ix. 9.

3. [Recepte, Fr.] A note given, by which money is acknowledged to have been received.

4. Reception; admission.

It is of things heavenly an universal declaration, working in them, whose hearts God inspirith with the due consideration thereof, an habit or disposition of mind, whereby they are made fit vessels, both for the receipt and delivery of whatsoever spiritual perfection.

Hooker.

5. Reception; welcome.

The same words in my lady Philoclea's mouth might have had a better grace, and perchance have found a gentler receipt.

Sidney.

Jove requite

And all th' immortal gods, with that delight

Thou most desir'st, thy kind recette of me;

Of friend, to humane hospitality.

Chapman.

6. [From recipe. Dr. Johnson. — Rather from the low Lat. recepta; or Ital. recepta. "Medicus varia remedia scribebat in scedulis quas receptas vocant." Poggii Facetia, ed. 1538. Bas. p. 473. See also Du Cange in V. RECEPTA.] Prescription of ingredients for any composition.

On his bed of death

Many receipts he gave me, chiefly one

Of his old experience the only darling.

Shaks.

I'll teach him a receipt to make

Words that weep, and tears that speak.

Cowley.

That Medea could make old men young again, was nothing else, but that, from knowledge of simples, she had a receipt to make white hair black.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

Wise leeches will not vain receipts obtrude,
While growing pains pronounce the humours crude.

Dryden.

Some dryly plain, without invention's aid,
Write dull receipts how poems may be made.

Pope.

Scribonius found the receipt in a letter wrote to Tiberius, and was never able to procure the receipt during the emperor's life.

Arbutnot on Coins.

RECEIVABLE.† adj. [recevabile, Fr. from receve.] Capable of being received.

TO RECEI'VE. v. a. [recevoir, Fr. recipio, Lat.]

1. To take or obtain any thing as due.

If by this crime he owes the law his life,
Why, let the war receiv't in valiant gore.

Shakespeare.

A certain nobleman went into a far country, to receive for himself a kingdom, and return.

St. Luke, xiv. 12.

2. To take or obtain from another, whether good or evil.

Though I should receive a thousand shekels of silver in mine hand, yet would I not put forth mine hand against the king's son. 2 Sam. xviii. 12.

What? shall we receive good at the hands of God, and shall we not receive evil? Job, ii. 10.

To them hast thou poured a drink-offering? should I receive comfort in these? Is. lvii. 6.

He that doeth wrong, shall receive for the wrong done; and there is no respect of persons.

Col. iii. 25.

Put all in writing that thou givest out, and receive in. Eccles. xlii. 7.

They lived with the friendship and equality of brethren; received no laws from one another, but lived separately. Locke.

3. To take any thing communicated.

Draw general conclusions from every particular they meet with: these make little true benefit of history; nay, being of forward and active spirits, receive more harm by it. Locke.

The idea of solidity we receive by our touch. Locke.

The same inability will every one find, who shall go about to fashion in his understanding any simple idea, not received in by his senses or by reflection. Locke.

To conceive the ideas we receive from sensation, consider them, in reference to the different ways, whereby they make their approaches to our minds. Locke.

4. To embrace intellectually.

We have set it down as a law, to examine things to the bottom, and not to receive upon credit, or reject upon improbabilities. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

In an equal indifferency for all truth; I mean the receiving it, in the love of it, as truth; and in the examination of our principles, and not receiving any for such, till we are fully convinced of their certainty, consists the freedom of the understanding. Locke.

5. To allow.

Long received custom forbidding them to do as they did, there was no excuse to justify their act; unless, in the Scripture, they could shew some law, that did licence them thus to break a received custom. Hooker.

Will it not be receiv'd,

When we have mark'd with blood those sleepy two,
And us'd their very daggers; that they have done't?
— Who dares receive it other? Shakespeare, Macbeth.

Lest any should think that any thing in this number eight creates the diapason; this computation of eight is rather a thing received, than any true computation. Bacon.

6. To admit.

When they came to Jerusalem, they were received of the church. Acts, xv. 4.

Thou shalt guide me with thy counsel, and afterward receive me to glory. Ps. lxxiii. 24.

Let her be shut out from the camp seven days, and after that received in again. Numb. xii. 14.

Enough is shewn. Shakespeare.

10. To entertain as a guest.

Abundance fit to honour, and receive,
Our heavenly stranger. Milton, P. L.

RECEIVEDNESS. n. s. [from received.] General allowance.

Others will, upon account of the receivedness of the proposed opinion, think it rather worth to be examined, than acquiesced in. Boyle.

RECEIVEUR. n. s. [receveur, Fr. from receive.] 1. One to whom any thing is communicated by another.

All the learnings that his time could make him receiver of, he took as we do air. Shaks. Cymb.
She from whose influence all impression came,
But by receivers impotencies lame. Donne.

What was so mercifully designed, might have been improved by the humble and diligent receivers unto their greatest advantages. Hammond.

2. One to whom any thing is given or paid.

In all works of liberality, something more is to be considered, besides the occasion of the givers; and that is the occasion of the receivers. Syrat.

Gratitude is a virtue, disposing the mind to an inward sense, and an outward acknowledgement of a benefit received, together with a readiness to return the same, as the occasions of the doer shall require, and the abilities of the receiver extend to. South.

If one-third of the money in trade were locked up, landholders must receive one-third less for their goods; a less quantity of money by one-third being to be distributed amongst an equal number of receivers. Locke.

Wood's halfpence will be offered for six a penny, and the necessary receivers will be losers of two-thirds in their pay. Swift.

3. An officer appointed to receive publick money.

There is a receiver who alone handleth the monies. Bacon.

4. One who partakes of the blessed sacrament.

The signification and sense of the sacrament dispose the spirit of the receiver to admit the grace of the spirit of God there consigned. Bp. Taylor, Vow Communicant.

5. One who co-operates with a robber, by taking the goods which he steals.

This is a great cause of the maintenance of thieves, knowing their receivers always ready; for were there no receivers, there would be no thieves. Spenser on Ireland.

6. The vessel into which spirits are emitted from the still.

These liquors, which the wide receiver fill,
Prepar'd with labour, and refin'd with skill,
Another course to distant parts begin. Blackmore.

Alkaline spirits run in veins down the sides of the receiver in distillations, which will not take fire. Arbutnot.

7. The vessel of the air pump, out of which the air is drawn, and which therefore receives any body on which experiments are tried.

The air that in exhausted receivers of air pumps is exhaled from minerals, is as true as to elasticity and density or rarefaction, as that we respire in. Bentley.

TO RECELEBRATE. v. a. [re and celebrate.] To celebrate anew.

French air and English verse here wedded lie:
Who did this knot compose,
Again hath brought the lily to the rose;
And with their chained dance,
Recelebrates the joyful match. B. Jonson.

RE'GENCY. n. s. [recens, Lat.] Newness; new state.

A schirrus in its recency, whilst it is in its augment, requireth milder applications than the confirmed one. Wiseman.

TO RE'CE'NSE.* v. a. [recenser, old Fr. recenseur, Lat.] To examine; to review; to revise.

Sixtus and Clemens, at a vast expence, had an assembly of learned divines to recense and adjust the Latin Vulgate. Bentley, Lett. p. 232.

RE'CE'NSION.† n. s. [recensio, Lat.] Enumeration; review.

A catalogue or recension of the parts of the church.

Mede, Apost. of the Lat. Times, (1641,) p. 32.

In this recension of monthly flowers, it is to be understood from its first appearing to its final withering. Evelyn.

RE'CENT.† adj. [recent, Fr. Cotgrave; recens, Latin.]

1. New; not of long existence.

The ancients were of opinion, that those parts, where Egypt now is, were formerly sea, and that a considerable portion of that country was recent, and formed out of the mud discharged into the neighbouring sea by the Nile. Woodward.

2. Late; not antique.

Among all the great and worthy persons, whereof the memory remaineth, either ancient or recent, there is not one that hath been transported to the mad degree of love. Bacon.

3. Fresh; not long dismissed, released, or parted from.

Ulysses moves,
Urg'd on by want, and recent from the storms,
The brackish ooze his manly grace deforms. Pope.

RE'CENTLY. adv. [from recent.] Newly; freshly.

Those tubes, which are most recently made of fluids, are most flexible and most easily lengthened. Arbutnot.

RE'CENTNESS. n. s. [from recent.] Newness; freshness.

This inference of the recentness of mankind from the recentness of these apothoses of Gentile deities, seems too weak to bear up this supposition of the novitas humani generis. Hale.

RE'CEPTACLE.† n. s. [receptacle, Fr. Cotgrave; receptaculum, Lat.] A vessel or place into which any thing is received. This had formerly the accent on the first syllable.

When the sharpness of death was overcome, he then opened heaven, as well to believing Gentiles as Jews: heaven till then was no receptacle to the souls of either. Hooker.

The county of Tipperary, the only county palatine in Ireland, is by abuse of some bad ones made a receptacle to rob the rest of the counties about it. Spenser on Ireland.

As in a vault, an ancient receptacle,
Where, for his many hundred years, the bones
Of all my buried ancestors are packt. Shakespeare.

The eye of the soul, or receptacle of sapience and divine knowledge. Raleigh, Hist. of the World.

Let Paradise a receptacle prove
To spirits foul, and all my trees their prey. Milton, P. L.

Their intelligence, put in at the top of the horn, shall convey it into a little receptacle at the bottom. Addison.

These are conveniences to private persons; instead of being receptacles for the truly poor, they tempt men to pretend poverty, in order to share the advantages. Atterbury.

Though the supply from this great receptacle below be continual and alike to all the globe; yet when it arrives near the surface, where the heat is not so uniform, it is subject to vicissitudes. Woodward.

RE'CEPTARY. n. s. [receptus, Lat.] Thing received. Not in use.

They, which behold the present state of things, cannot condemn our sober enquiries in the doubtful appertenancies of arts, and receptaries of philosophy. Brown.

RECEPTIBILITY. n. s. [receptus, Lat.] Possibility of receiving.

The peripatetic matter is a pure unactuated power; and this conceited vacuum a mere receptibility. Glanville.

RECEPTION.† n. s. [reception, Fr. Cotgrave; receptus, Latin.]

1. The act of receiving.

Both serve completely for the reception and communication of learned knowledge.

Holder, Elem. of Speech.
In this animal are found parts official unto nutrition, which were its aliment the empty reception of air, provisions had been superfluous.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

2. Capacity; power of receiving.

Causes, according still
To the reception of their matter, act;
Not to the extent of their own sphere.

Milton, P. L.

3. Admission of any thing communicated.
In some animals, the avenues, provided by nature for the reception of sensations, are few, and the perception they are received with, obscure and dull. Locke.

4. Readmission.

All hope is lost
Of my reception into grace. Milton, P. L.

5. The act of containing.

I cannot survey this world of fluid matter, without thinking on the hand that first poured it out, and made a proper channel for its reception. Addison.

6. Treatment at first coming; welcome; entertainment.

This succession of so many powerful methods being farther prescribed by God, have found so discouraging a reception, that nothing but the violence of storming or battery can pretend to prove successful. Hammond on Fundamentals.

Pretending to consult
About the great reception of their king, Thither to come. Milton, P. L.

7. Opinion generally admitted.

Philosophers, who have quitted the popular doctrines of their countries, have fallen into as extravagant opinions, as even common reception countenanced. Locke.

8. Recovery. Not in use.

He was right glad of the French king's reception of those towns from Maximilian.

Bacon, Hen. VII.

RECEPTIVE. adj. [receptus, Lat.] Having the quality of admitting what is communicated.

The soul being, as it is active, perfected by love of that infinite good, shall, as it is receptive, be also perfected with those supernatural passions of joy, peace and delight. Hooker.

To advance the spiritual concerns of all that could in any kind become receptive of the good he meant them, was his unlimited designment and endeavour. Fell, Life of Hammond.

The pretended first matter is capable of all forms, and the imaginary space is receptive of all bodies. Glanville.

RECEPTIVITY.* n. s. [receptivité, Fr.] State or quality of being receptive.

These things the sun can work in one place, because the matter is prepared for him; in another he cannot, because the matter is unprepared for such and such a form: for he cannot work any where beyond the possibility or receptivity of his matter. Fotherby, Aethom. (1622,) p. 181.

RECEPTORY. adj. [receptus, Lat.] Generally or popularly admitted.

Although therein be contained many excellent things, and verified upon his own experience, yet there are many also receptory, and will not endure the test. Brown.

RECESS. n. s. [recessus, Latin.]

1. Retirement; retreat; withdrawing; secession.

What tumults could not do, an army must; my recess hath given them confidence that I may be conquered. K. Charles.

Fair Thames she haunts, and every neighbouring grove,
Sacred to soft recess and gentle love. Prior.

2. Departure.

We come into the world, and know not how; we live in it in a self-nescience, and go hence again, and are as ignorant of our recess. Glanville, Scopsis.

3. Place of retirement; place of secrecy; private abode.

This happy place our sweet
Recess, and only consolation left. Milton, P. L.
The deep recesses of the grove he gain'd. Dryd.
I wish that a crowd of bad writers do not rush into the quiet of your recesses. Dryden.

4. [Recesz, Fr.] Perhaps an abstract of the proceedings of an imperial diet.

In the imperial chamber, the proctors have a florin taxed and allowed them for every substantial recess. Ayliffe.

5. Departure into privacy.

The great seraphic lords, and cherubim,
In close recess and secret conclave sat. Milton, P. L.

In the recess of the jury, they are to consider their evidence. Hale.

6. Remission or suspension of any procedure.

On both sides they made rather a kind of recess, than a breach of treaty, and concluded upon a truce. Bacon.

I conceived this parliament would find work, with convenient recesses, for the first three years. King Charles.

7. Removal to distance.

Whatsoever sign the sun possessed, whose recess or vicinity defineth the quarters of the year, those of our seasons were actually existent. Brown, Vulg. Err.

8. Privacy; secrecy of abode.

Good verse, recess and solitude requires;
And ease from cares, and undisturb'd desires. Dryden.

9. Secret part.

In their mysteries, and most secret recesses, and adyta of their religion, their heathen priests betrayed and led their votaries into all the most horrid unnatural sins. Hammond.

Every scholar should acquaint himself with a superficial scheme of all the sciences, yet there is no necessity for every man of learning to enter into their difficulties and deep recesses. Watts on the Mind.

RECESSION.† n. s. [recessio, Lat.]

1. The act of retreating.

I do not mean recessions, or distances, from states of enmity or perfection.

Bp. Taylor, Holy Dying, ch. 5. § 3.
Every degree of recession from the state of grace Christ first put us in, is a recession from our hopes. Bp. Taylor, Gr. Exemplar.

Death is nothing else but the privation or recession of life. Pearson on the Creed, Art. 4.

2. Act of relaxing or desisting from any claim.

His [Christ's] whole life went in a constant recession from his own rights. South, Sermon, x. 301.

Abating something from the height and strictness of our pretences: and a favourable recession in such cases will greatly engage men to have an honourable opinion, and a peaceful affection towards us. Barrow, vol. i. S. 29.

TO RECHARGE. v. a. [recharger, Fr. re and charge.] To change again.

Those endued with foresight, work with facility; others are perpetually changing and recharging their work. Dryden.

TO RECHARGE. v. a. [recharger, Fr. re and charge.]

1. To accuse in return.

The fault, that we find with them, is, that they overmuch abridge the church of her power in these things: whereupon they recharge us, as if in these things we gave the church a liberty, which hath no limits or bounds. Hooker.

2. To attack anew.

They charge, recharge, and all along the sea
They drive and squander the huge Belgian fleet. Dryden.

RECHEAUTE.† n. s. [rechet, old Fr. lieu de retraite. Roquefort. Rechet was used in the same sense as retraite. Hanmer.]

Among hunters, a lesson which the huntsman winds on the horn, when the hounds have lost their game, to call them back from pursuing a counter-scent. Bailey.

That a woman conceived me, I thank her; but that I will have a rechet winded in my forehead, or hang my bugle in an invisible baldrick, all women shall pardon me. Shakespeare.

TO RECHEAUTE.* v. n. To blow the rechet.

Rechet, mark you, sir, upon the same three winds. Return from Parnassus, (1606.)

Rechating with his horn, which then the hunter cheers. Drayton, Polyolb, S. 13.

TO RECIDIVATE.* v. n. [recidivo, low Lat.] To backslide; to fall again. Not now in use.

Thus then to recidivate, and to go against her own act and promise; to dash the second time against this rock of offence; must needs make it more grievous.

Bp. Andrewes, Speech, Opuscula, (1629,) p. 79.

RECIDIVATION.† n. s. [recidivus, Latin.] Backsliding; falling again.

This recidivation is desperate.

Bp. Hall, St. Paul's Combat.

Having been sick, and but newly recovered, he adventured to travel to wait in his place, and so by recidivation he died.

Sir J. Harrington, Br. View of the Ch. p. 141.

When these temporary supporters fail, the building that relies upon them, rushes into coldness, recidivation, and lukewarmness.

Bp. Taylor, Sermon, (1651,) p. 137.

Our renewed obedience is still most indispensably required, though mixed with much of weakness, frailties, recidivations, to make us capable of pardon. Hammond, Pract. Catechism.

RECIDIVOUS. adj. [recidivus, Lat.] Subject to fall again.

RECIPE. n. s. [recipe, Lat. the term used by physicians, when they direct ingredients.] A medical prescription.

I should enjoin you travel; for absence doth in a kind remove the cause, and answers the physician's first recipe, vomiting and purging; but this would be too harsh. Suckling.

The apothecary train is wholly blind;
From files a random recipe they take,
And many deaths of one prescription make. Dryden.

RECIPIENT. n. s. [recipiens, Latin.]

1. The receiver; that to which any thing is communicated.

Though the images, or whatever else is the cause of sense, may be alike as from the object, yet may the representations be varied according to the nature of the recipient. Glanville.

2. The vessel into which spirits are driven by the still.

The form of sound words, dissolved by chymical preparation, ceases to be nutritive; and after all the labours of the alembick, leaves in the recipient a fretting corrosive. Dec. of Chr. Plety.

RECIPROCAL.† adj. [reciprocus, Lat. reciproque, Fr. Dr. Johnson. — Our own word was also reciproque, which Bacon has used, as Mr. Malone likewise has observed: "Except the love be reciproque." Ess. on Love. Ben Jonson has also the same word. Bacon, in his Natural History, uses reciprocal as a substantive; but Dr. Johnson has cited the passage inaccurately, and made the word an adjective.]

1. Acting in vicissitude; alternate.

What if that light,
To the terrestrial moon be a star,
Enlightening her by day, as she by night
This earth? reciprocal, if land be there,
Fields and inhabitants. Milton, P. L.

2. Mutual; done by each to each.

Where there's no hope of a reciprocal aid, there can be no reason for the mutual obligation.

In reciprocal duties, the failure on one side justifies not a failure on the other.

3. Mutually interchangeable.

These two rules will render a definition reciprocal with the thing defined; which, in the schools, signifies, that the definition may be used in the place of the thing defined. Watts.

4. In geometry, reciprocal proportion is, when, in four numbers, the fourth number is so much lesser than the second, as the third is greater than the first, and vice versa. Harris.

According to the laws of motion, if the bulk and activity of aliment and medicines are in reciprocal proportion, the effect will be the same.

Arbutnot on Aliments.

RECIPROCAL.* n. s. An alternacy.

Corruption is a reciprocal to generation; and they two are as nature's two terms or boundaries, and the guides to life and death.

Bacon, Nat. Hist. No. 328.

RECIPROCALLY. adv. [from reciprocal.]

Mutually; interchangeably.

His mind and place

Infecting one another reciprocally.

Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.
Make the bodies appear enlightened by the shadows which bound the sight; which cause it to repose for some space of time; and reciprocally the shadows may be made sensible by enlightening your ground. Dryden.

If the distance be about the hundredth part of an inch, the water will rise to the height of about an inch; and if the distance be greater or less in any proportion, the height will be reciprocally proportional to the distance very nearly: for the attractive force of the glasses is the same, whether the distance between them be greater or less; and the weight of the water drawn up is the same, if the height of it be reciprocally proportional to the height of the glasses. Newton, Opt.

Those two particles do reciprocally affect each other with the same force and vigour, as they would do at the same distance in any other situation. Bentley.

RECIPROCALNESS. n. s. [from reciprocal.] Mutual return; alternateness.

The reciprocalness of the injury ought to allay the displeasure at it. Dec. of Chr. Plety.

TO RECIPROCAT. v. n. [reciprocus, Lat. reciproquer, Fr.] To act interchangeably; to alternate.

One brawny smith the puffing bellows plies,
And draws, and blows reciprocating air. Dryden.

From whence the quick reciprocating breath,
The lobe adhesive, and the sweat of death. Sewel.

TO RECIPROCAT.* v. a. To exchange; to interchange.

Vainly reciprocating the saw of endless contention. Barrow, Sermon i. 359.

A youth or maiden, meeting by chance, or brought together by artifice, exchange glances, reciprocate civilities, go home and dream of one another. Johnson, Rasselas.

RECIPROCA'TION. n. s. [reciprocatio, from reciprocus, Latin.] Alternation; action interchanged.

Bodies may be altered by heat, and yet no such reciprocation or rarefaction, condensation, and separation. Bacon.

That Aristotle drowned himself in Euripus, as despairing to resolve the cause of its reciprocation or ebb and flow seven times a day, is generally believed. Brown.

Where the bottom of the sea is owze or sand, it is by the motion of the waters, so far as the reciprocation of the sea extends to the bottom, brought to a level. Ray.

The systole resembles the forcible bending of a spring, and the diastole its flying out again to its natural size: what is the principal efficient of this reciprocation? Ray.

RECIPROCITY.* n. s. [Fr. reciprocité.] Reciprocation obligation. I have heard the introduction of this word attributed to the late lord Shelburne, when secretary of state, which he first was in 1766.

Any degree of reciprocity will prevent the pact from being nude. Blackstone.

RECIS'ION.† n. s. [recision, Fr. Cotgrave; recisus, Lat.] The act of cutting off. Sherwood.

RECIT'AL. n. s. [from recite.]

1. Repetition; rehearsal.

T h last are repetitions and recitals of the first. Denham.

2. Narration.

This often sets him on empty boasts, and betrays him into vain fantastick recitals of his own performances. Addison.

3. Enumeration.

To make the rough recital aptly chime,
Or bring the sum of Gallia's loss to rhyme,
Is mighty hard. Prior.

RECITATION. n. s. [from recite.] Repetition; rehearsal.

If menaces of Scripture fall upon men's persons, if they are but the recitations and descriptions of God's decreed wrath, and those decrees and that wrath have no respect to the actual sins of men; why should terrors restrain me from sin, when present advantage invites me to it? Hammond.

He used philosophical arguments and recitations. Temple.

RECITAT'VE.† n. s. [Ital. from recite.]

RECITAT'VO. } A kind of tuneful pronunciation, more musical than common speech, and less than song; chant. It is said to have been invented by Jacopo Peri for the opera of Euridice, first performed at Florence in 1600.

He introduced the examples of moral virtue, writ in verse, and performed in recitative-music. Dryden.

There is nothing that has more startled our English audience, than the Italian recitativo at its first entrance upon the stage. Addison, Spect. No. 29.

By singing peers upheld on either hand,
Then thus in quaint recitativo spoke. Pope, Dunciad.

RECITAT'VELY.* adv. After the manner of the recitative.

The jubilee was sung in the same manner, after which the office was performed only recitatively; no organs made use of till after the second collect for Morning Prayer.

Lett. on Q. Anne's Going to St. Paul's, (1702.)

TO RECITE.† v. a. [recito, Lat. reciter, Fr.] To rehearse; to repeat; to enumerate; to tell over.

Such as found out musical tunes, and recited verses in writing. Ecclesi. xlv. 5.

While Telephus's youthful charms,
His rosy neck, and winding arms,
With endless rapture you recite,
And in the tender name delight. Addison.

The thoughts of gods let Granville's verse recite,
And bring the scenes of op'ning fate to light. Pope.

If we will recite nine hours in ten,
You lose your patience. Pope, Ep. of Horace.

RECITE. n. s. [recit, Fr. from the verb.] Recital. Not in use.

This added to all former recites or observations of long-liv'd races, makes it easy to conclude, that health and long life are the blessings of the poor as well as rich. Temple.

RECITER.† n. s. [from recite.] One who recites.

In Italy they have solemn declamations of certain select young gentlemen in Florence, like those reciters in old Rome.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 270.

Narrative songs were committed to memory, and delivered down from one reciter to another. Bp. Percy, Ess. on the Anc. Metr. Romances, § 1.

TO RECK. v. n. [pecan, Saxon.]

1. To care; to heed; to mind; to rate at much; to be in care. Out of use. Reck is still retained in Scotland: it has of before the thing.

Thou'st but a laesie loord,
And recks much of thy swinke,
That with fond terms and witless words,
To bleer mine eyes do'st think. Spenser, Shep. Cal.

Good or bad,
What do I reck, sith that he dy'd entire. Spenser, F. Q.

I reck as little what betideth me,
As much I wish all good beforneth you. Shaksp.

With that care lost
Went all his fear; of God, or hell or worse,
He reck'd not. Milton, P. L.

2. It RECKS, v. impersonal. To care.

Of night or loneliness it recks me not;
I fear the dread events that dog them both,
Lest some ill-greeting touch attempt the person
Of our unworned sister. Milton, Comus.

TO RECK. v. a. To heed; to care for.

This son of mine, not recking danger, and neglecting the present good way he was in of doing himself good, came hither to do this kind office to my unspeakable grief. Sidney.

If I do lose thee, I do lose a thing,
That none but fools would reck. Shakespeare.

Do not, as some ungracious pastors do,
Show me the steep and thorny way to heaven;
Whilst, like a puff'd and reckless libertine,
Himself the primrose path of dalliance treads,
And recks not his own read. Shaks. Hamlet.

RECKLESS.† adj. [from reck; peceleary, Saxon.] Careless; heedless; mindless; untouched. See RECK. This is written reckless by old writers, and also by Dryden. See WRETCHLESS. In the north of England, as in Scotland, it is reckless.

It made the king as reckless, as them diligent. Sidney.

I'll after, more to be reveng'd of Eglamour
Than for the love of reckless Silvia. Shakspeare.
He apprehends death no more dreadfully, but as a drunken sleep; careless, reckless, and fearless of what's past, present, or to come; insensible of mortality, and desperately mortal. Shakspeare.
Next this was drawn the reckless cities' flame,
When a strange hell pour'd down from heaven
there came. Cowley.

RECKLESSNESS. n. s. [from reck. This word in the seventeenth article is erroneously written wretchlessness.] Carelessness; negligence.

Over many good fortunes began to breed a proud recklessness in them. Sidney.

To RECKON. v. a. [precan, Saxon; reckenen, Dutch.]

1. To number; to count.

The priest shall reckon unto him the money according to the years that remain, and it shall be shated. Lev. xxvii. 18.

Num'ring of his virtues praise,
Death lost the reckoning of his days. Crashaw.

When are questions belonging to all finite existences by us reckoned from some known parts of this sensible world, and from some certain epochs marked out by motions in it? Locke.

The freezing of water, or the blowing of a plant, returning at equidistant periods, would as well serve men to reckon their years by, as the motions of the sun. Locke.

I reckoned above two hundred and fifty on the outside of the church, though I only told three sides of it. Addison.

A multitude of cities are reckoned up by the geographers, particularly by Ptolemy.

Arbutnot on Coins.

2. To esteem; to account.

Where we cannot be persuaded that the will of God is, we should so far reject the authority of men, as to reckon it nothing. Hooker.

Varro's aviary is still so famous, that it is reckoned for one of those notables, which men of foreign nations record. Wotton.

For him I reckon not in high estate;
But thee, whose strength, while virtue was her mate,

Might have subdu'd the earth. Milton, S. A.
People, young and raw, and soft-natured, are apt to think it an easy thing to gain love, and reckon their own friendship a sure price of another man's; but when experience shall have shewn them the hardness of most hearts, the hollowness of others, and the baseness of all, they will find that a friend is the gift of God, and that he only,
who made hearts, can unite them. South, Serm.

Would the Dutch be content with the military government and revenues, and reckon it among what shall be thought necessary for their barrier?

Swift, Miscell.

3. To assign in an account.

To him that worketh is the reward not reckoned of grace, but of debt. Rom. iv. 4.

To RECKON. † v. n.

1. To compute; to calculate.

We may fairly reckon that this first age of apostles, with that second generation of many who were their immediate converts, extended to the middle of the second century. Addison.

2. To state an account: it has with before the other party.

We shall not spend a large expence of time,
Before we reckon with your several loves,
And make us even with you. Shakspeare.

3. To charge to account: with on.

I call posterity
Into the debt, and reckon on her head. B. Jonson.

4. To give an account; to assign reasons of action.

All flesh shall rise and reckon.
Abp. Sandys, Serm. fol. 175.

5. To pay a penalty: with for before the crime.

If they fail in their bounden duty, they shall reckon for it one day. Sanderson.

6. To call to punishment: it has with.

God suffers the most grievous sins of particular persons to go unpunished in this world, because his justice will have another opportunity to meet and reckon with them. Tillotson.

7. [Compter sur, Fr.] To lay stress or dependance upon.

You reckon upon losing your friends' kindness, when you have sufficiently convinced them, they can never hope for any of yours. Temple, Miscel.

RECKONER. n. s. [from reckon.] One who computes; one who calculates cost.

Reckoners without their host must reckon twice.
Camden.

RECKONING. n. s. [from reckon.]

1. Computation; calculation.

2. Account of time.

Canst thou their reck'nings keep? the time compute?

When their swoln bellies shall enlarge their fruit.
Sandys.

3. Accounts of debtor and creditor.

They that know how their own reckoning goes,
Account not what they have, but what they lose.
Daniel.

It is with a man and his conscience, as with one man and another; even reckoning makes lasting friends; and the way to make reckonings even, is to make them often. South.

4. Money charged by an host.

His industry is up stairs and down; his elo-quencé the parcel of a reckoning. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

When a man's verses cannot be understood, it strikes a man more dead than a great reckoning in a little room. Shakspeare.

A coin would have a nobler use than to pay a reckoning. Addison.

5. Account taken.

There was no reckoning made with them of the money delivered into their hand. 2 Kings.

6. Esteem; account; estimation.

Beauty, though in a great excellency in yourself as in any, yet you make no further reckoning of it, than of an outward fading benefit nature bestowed. Sidney.

Were they all of as great account as the best among them, with us notwithstanding they ought not to be of such reckoning, that their opinion should cause the laws of the church to give place.
Hooker, Pref.

RECKONING-BOOK. n. s. [from reckoning and book.] A book in which money received and expended is set down.

To RECLAIM. † v. a. [reclamo, Lat.]

1. To reform; to correct.

He spared not the heads of any mischievous practices, but shewed sharp judgement on them for ensample sake, that all the meaner sort, which were infected with that evil, might, by terror thereof, be reclaimed and saved. Spenser.

This error whosoever is able to reclaim, he shall save more in one summer, than Themison destroyed in any autumn. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Reclaim your wife from strolling up and down
To all assizes. Dryden, Juv.

'Tis the intention of Providence in all the various expressions of his goodness, to reclaim mankind, and to engage their obedience. Rogers, Serm.

The penal laws in being against papists have been found ineffectual, and rather confirm than reclaim men from their errors. Swift.

2. [Reclamer, Fr.] To reduce to the state desired.

It was for him to hasten to let his people see, that he meant to govern by law, howsoever he came in by the sword; and fit also to reclaim them, to know him for their king, whom they had so lately talked of as an enemy. Bacon.

Much labour is requir'd in trees, to tame
Their wild disorder, and in ranks reclaim. Dryden.

Minds shee the dangers of the Lycian coast?
Or is her towering flight reclaim'd,
By seas from Icarus's downfal nam'd?

Vain is the call, and useless the advice. Prior.

3. To recall; to cry out against.

The headstrong horses hurried Octavius, the trembling charioteer, along, and were deaf to his reclaiming them. Dryden.

4. To tame.

Upon his fist he bore
An eagle well reclaim'd. Dryden, Kn. Tale.

2. Knowledge confessed.

Every species of fancy hath three modes; recognition of a thing, as present; memory of it, as past; and foresight of it, as to come.

3. Acknowledgement; memorial.

The Israelites, in Moses' days, were redeemed out of Egypt; in memory and recognition whereof they were commanded to observe the weekly sabbath.

If the recognition or acknowledgment of a final concord, upon any writ of covenant finally, be taken by justice of assize, and the yearly value of those lands be declared by affidavit made before the same justice; then is the recognition and value signed with the handwriting of that justice.

To RECOL. v. n. [recoler, Fr.]

1. To rush back in consequence of resistance, which cannot be overcome by the force impressed.

The very thought of my revenges that way
Recol upon me; in himself too mighty.

Revenge, at first though sweet,
Bitter are long, back on itself recolts.

Amazement seiz'd

All the host of heaven; back they recol'd, afraid
At first.
Evil on itself shall back recol.
Who in deep mines for hidden knowledge toils,
Like guns o'ercharg'd, d, breaks, misses, or recoils.

My hand's so soft, his heart so hard,
The blood recoils, and hurts me while I strike!

Whatever violence may be offered to nature, by endeavouring to reason men into a contrary persuasion, nature will still recoil, and at last return to itself.

2. To fall back.

Ye both forwardwearied be; therefore a while
I read you rest, and to your bowers recoil.

Ten paces huge
He back recol'd; the tenth on bended knee,
His massy spear upstay'd.

RECOINAGE. n. s. [re and coinage.] The act of coining anew.

The mint gained upon the late statute, by the recoinage of groats and half-groats, now twelve-pences and sixpences.

To RECOLLECT.† v. a. [recollectus, Lat.]

1. To recover to memory.

It did relieve my passion much;
More than light airs and recollected terms
Of these most brisk and giddy-paced times.

2. To recover reason or resolution.

The Tyrian queen
Admir'd his fortunes, more admir'd the man;
Then recollected stood.

3. To gather what is scattered; to gather again.

If I were but mere dust and ashes, I might speak unto the Lord; for the Lord's hand made me of this dust, and the Lord's hand shall recollect these ashes.

Donne, Devot. (1624), p. 9.

God will one day raise the dead, recollecting our scattered dust, and rearing our dissolved frame.

Barrow, vol. ii. §. 2.

Now that God hath made his light radiate in his word, men may recollect those scattered divine beams, and kindling with them the topics proper to warm our affections, enflame holy zeal. Boyle.

RECOLLECT'ION. n. s. [from recollect.] Recovery of notion; revival in the memory.

Recollection is when an idea is sought after by the mind, and with pain and endeavour found, and brought again in view. Locke.

Finding the recollection of his thoughts disturb his sleep, he remitted the particular care of the composition. Fell, Life of Hammond.

Let us take care that we sleep not without such a recollection of the actions of the day, as may represent any thing that is remarkable, as matter of sorrow or thanksgiving. Bp. Taylor.

The last image of that troubled heap,
When sense subsides, and fancy sports in sleep,
Though past the recollection of the thought,
Becomes the stuff of which our dream is wrought. Pope.

To RECOMB'NE.* v. a. [re and combine.] To join together again.

—That fair hand —
When first it joy'n'd her virgin snow to thine,
Which when to-day the priest shall recombine,
From the mysterious holy touch such charms
Will flow, as shall unlock her wreathed arms. Carew, Poems, p. 113.

To RECOM'FORT. v. a. [re and comfort.]

1. To comfort or console again.
What place is there left, we may hope our woes to recomfort? Stimney.

In that recourseful deep. Drayton, Polygl. S. 1.

RECREANT.† adj. [Not from the Fr. recriant, as Dr. Johnson supposes, and accordingly defines recreant, crying out for mercy; but from the old Fr. recreant, "tired, wearied, out of heart, faint-hearted." Cotgrave. "C'étoit une grande honte pour un chevalier d'être recreant."

Lacombe. And see Du Cange in V. RECREditus. "Recreditus vulgò, vel recreanti appellati, qui quidem inter infames habebantur; adeò ut maximo probro haberetur objecta recreditus contumelia.—Recreantus idem quòd recreditus, ex Gallico recreant pro recreu."]

1. Cowardly; meanspirited; subdued.

Let be that lady debonaire,
Thou recreant knight, and soon thyself prepare

To battle. Spenser, F. Q.

But that thou yield thee as recreant and over-come, thou shalt die.

Morie d'Arthur.

Dost
Thou wear a lion's skin? doff it for shame,
And hang a calf's skin on those recreant limbs.

Here standeth Thomas Mowbray, duke of Norfolk,
On pain to be found false and recreant. Shaks.
The knight, whom fate and happy chance shall grace
From out the bars to force his opposite,
Or kill, or make him recreant on the plain,
The prize of valour and of love shall gain. Dryden.

2. Apostate; false.

Like a recreant Jew, he calls for stones.
Milton, Apol. for Smectymn.
Who for so many benefits receiv'd,
Turn'd recreant to God, ingrate and false,
And so of all true good himself despoil'd.
Milton, P. R.

To RECREATE.* v. a. [re and create.] To create anew.

Father of heaven! —
Thou mad'st, and govern'st ever; come,
And re-create me, now grown ruinous.

Where then are the regenerated thrones and dominions? where are the re-created principalities and powers? Pearson on the Creed, Art. 2.

To RECREATE. v. a. [recreo, Lat. recreo, Fr.]

1. To refresh after toil; to amuse or divert in weariness.

He hath left you all his walks,
And to your heirs for ever: common pleasures,
To walk abroad and recreate yourselves. Shaks.

Necessity and the example of St. John, who recreated himself with sporting with a tame partridge, teach us, that it is lawful to relax our bow, but not suffer it to be unstrung. Bp. Taylor.

Painters, when they work on white grounds, place before them colours mixt with blue and green, to recreate their eyes, while wearying and paining the sight more than any. Dryden.

2. To delight; to gratify.

These ripe fruits recreate the nostrils with their aromatick scent. More, Div. Dialogues.

He walked abroad, which he did not so much to recreate himself, as to obey the prescripts of his physician. Fell, Life of Hammond.

3. To relieve; to revive.

Take a walk to refresh yourself with the open air, which inspired fresh doth exceedingly recreate the lungs, heart, and vital spirits. Harvey on Consumptions.

To RECREATE.* v. n. To take recreation.

They suppose the souls in purgatory have liberty to recreate. L. Addison, State of the Jews, p. 121.

RECREATION. n. s. [from recreate.]

1. Relief after toil or pain; amusement in sorrow or distress.

The chief recreation she could find in her anguish, was sometime to visit that place, where first she was so happy as to see the cause of her unhap. Sidney.

I'll visit
The chapel where they lie; and tears, shed there, Shall be my recreation. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

The great men among the antients, understood how to reconcile manual labour with affairs of state; and thought it no lessening to their dignity to make the one the recreation to the other. Locke on Education.

2. Refreshment; amusement; diversion.

You may have the recreation of surprising those with admiration, who shall hear the deaf person pronounce whatsoever they shall desire, without your seeming to guide him. Holder, Elem. of Speech.

Nor is that man less deceived, that thinks to maintain a constant tenure of pleasure, by a continual pursuit of sports and recreations: for all these things, as they refresh a man when weary, so they weary him when refreshed. South.

RECREATIVE. adj. [from recreate.] Refreshing; giving relief after labour or pain; amusing; diverting.

Let the music be recreative, and with some strange changes. Bacon.

Let not your recreations be lavish spenders of your time; but chase such as are healthful, recreative, and apt to refresh you: but at no hand dwell upon them. Bp. Taylor.

The access these trifles gain to the closets of ladies, seem to promise such easy and recreative experiments, which require but little time or charge. Boyle.

RECREATIVELY.* adj. [from recreative.] With recreation; with diversion. Sherwood.

RECREATIVENESS. n. s. [from recreative.] The quality of being recreative.

RECREMENT.* n. s. [recrementum, Lat.] Dross; spume; superfluous or useless parts.

Of all the visible creatures that God hath made, none is so pure and simple as light: it discovers all the fullness of the most earthly recrement, it mixeth with none of them. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 41.

The vital fire in the heart requires an ambient body of a yielding nature, to receive the superfluous serosities and other recrement of the blood. Boyle.

RECREMENTAL.* } adj. [from recre-RECREMENTIOUS.* } ment.] Drossy.

As sensation will be the consequence of the ideal aliment to the mind, so muscular motion will be the expulsion of the recrementitious part of it. Reid, Inq.

To RECRIMINATE. v. n. [recriminer, Fr. re and crimino, Lat.] To return one accusation with another.

It is not my business to recriminate, hoping sufficiently to clear myself in this matter. Stillingfleet.

How shall such hypocrites reform the state,
On whom the brothels can recriminate? Dryden.

To RECRIMINATE. v. a. To accuse in return. Unusual.

Did not Joseph lie under black infamy? he scorned so much as to clear himself, or to recriminate the strumpet. South.

RECRIMINATION. n. s. [recrimination, Fr. from recriminate.] Return of one accusation with another.

Publick defamation will seem disabbling enough to provoke a return, which again begets a rejoinder, and so the quarrel is carried on with mutual recriminations. Gov. of the Tongue.

RECRIMINATOR. n. s. [from recriminate.] One that returns one charge with another.

RECRIMINATORY.* adj. [from recriminate.] Retorting accusation.

They (the opposition) seem to have been so entirely occupied with the defence of the French directory, so very eager in finding recriminatory precedents to justify every act of its intolerable insolence. Burke on the Fr. Revol. Lett. 3.

RECRUDENCY.* } n. s. [recrudir, Fr.
RECRUDESCENCY.* } to make raw;
recrudesco, Lat.] State of becoming sore again; a sort of relapse.

If the wound be not ripped up again, and come to a recrudency by new foreign succours, I think that no physician will go on much with letting blood "in declinatione morbi."

Bacon, Lett. to Secretary Cecil, (ed. 1657,) p. 15.

RECRUDESCENT. adj. [recrudesco, Lat.] Growing painful or violent again.

To RECRUIT. v. a. [recruter, Fr.]

1. To repair any thing wasted by new supplies.

He was longer in recruiting his flesh than was usual; but by a milk diet he recovered it. Wiseman, Surgery.

Increase thy care to save the sinking kind;
With greens and flow'rs recruit their empty hives,
And seek fresh forage to sustain their lives. Dryden.

Her cheeks glow the brighter, recruiting their colour;
As flowers by sprinkling revive with fresh odour. Granville.

This sun is set, but see in bright array
What hosts of heavenly lights recruit the day!
Love in a shining galaxy appears Triumphant still. Granville.

Seeing the variety of motion, which we find in the world is always decreasing, there is a necessity of conserving and recruiting it by active principles; such as are the cause of gravity, by which planets and comets keep their motions in their orbs, and bodies acquire great motion in falling. Newton.

2. To supply an army with new men.

He trusted the earl of Holland with the command of that army, with which he was to be recruited and assisted. Clarendon.

To RECRUIT. v. n. To raise new soldiers.

The French have only Switzerland besides their own country to recruit in; and we know the difficulties they meet with in getting thence a single regiment. Addison.

RECRUIT. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Supply of any thing wasted; Pope has used it less properly for a substitute to something wanting.

Whatever nature has in worth deny'd,
She gives in large recruits of needful pride. Pope.
The endeavour to raise new men for the recruit of the army found opposition. Clarendon.

2. New soldiers.

The powers of Troy
With fresh recruits their youthful chief sustain:
Not theirs a raw and unexperienc'd train,
But a firm body of embattled men. Dryden.

RECRUITER.* n. s. [from recruit.] One who recruits; one who supplies a company with new members.

After this he (Christopher Love) was made minister of St. Ann's church near to Aldersgate, a recruiter of the assembly of divines, and at length minister of the church of St. Lawrence. A. Wood, Fast. Ox. 1st ed. ii. 74.

RECTANGLE.* n. s. [rectangle, Fr. rectangulus, Lat.] A figure having four sides, of which the opposite ones are equal, and all its angles right angles.

The mathematician considers the truth and properties belonging to a rectangle, only as it is in idea in his own mind. Locke.

RECTANGLE.* } adjec. Having a right
RECTANGLED.* } angle.

If all Athens should decree, that in rectangle triangles the square, which is made of the side that subtendeth the right angle, is equal to the squares which are made of the sides containing the right angle, geometers would not receive satisfaction without demonstration. Brown, Vulg. Err.

RECTANGULAR. adj. [rectangulaire, Fr. rectus and angulus, Lat.] Right angled; having angles of ninety degrees.

Bricks moulded in their ordinary rectangular form, if they shall be laid one by another in a level row between any supporters sustaining the two ends, then all the pieces will necessarily sink. Wotton, Architecture.

RECTANGULARLY. adv. [from rectangular.] With right angles.

At the equator, the needle will stand rectangularly; but approaching northward toward the tropic, it will regard the stone obliquely.

RECTIFIABLE. adj. [from rectify.] Capable to be set right.

The natural heat of the parts being insufficient for a perfect and thorough digestion, the errors of one concoction are not rectifiable by another.

RECTIFICATION. n. s. [rectification, Fr. from rectify.]

1. The act of setting right what is wrong. To the cure of melancholy the rectification of air is necessarily required.

It behoved the Deity to renew that revelation from time to time, and to rectify abuses with such authority for the renewal and rectification, as was sufficient evidence of the truth of what was revealed.

2. In chymistry, rectification is drawing any thing over again by distillation, to make it yet higher or finer.

At the first rectification of some spirit of salt in a retort, a single pound afforded no less than six ounces of phlegm.

RECTIFIER.* n. s. [from rectify.]

1. One who sets right what is wrong. I fly for justice and relief into the hands of that great rectifier of saddles, and lover of mankind, Dr. B.

2. One employed in the process of rectifying by distillation.

3. An instrument that shows the variation of the compass, in order to rectify the course of a ship.

TO RECTIFY. v. a. [rectifier, Fr. rectus and facio, Lat.]

1. To make right; to reform; to redress. That whereas unsound times have done amiss, the better ages ensuing must rectify as they may.

It shall be bootless That longer you defer the court, as well For your own quiet, as to rectify What is unsettled in the king. Shaks. Hen. VIII. Where a long course of piety has purged the heart, and rectified the will, knowledge will break in upon such a soul, like the sun shining in his full might. South. The substance of this theory I mainly depend on, being willing to suppose that many particularities may be rectified upon farther thoughts. Burnet. If those men of parts, who have been employed in vitiating the age, had endeavoured to rectify and amend it, they needed not have sacrificed their good sense to their fame. Addison. The false judgements he made of things are owned; and the methods pointed out by which he rectified them. Atterbury.

2. To exalt and improve by repeated distillation. The skin had been kept white and smooth for above fifteen years, by being included with rectified spirit of wine in a cylindrical glass. Grew, Mus.

RECTILINEAR. } adj. [rectus and linea,
RECTILINEOUS. } Lat.] Consisting of right lines.

There are only three rectilineous and ordinate figures, which can serve to this purpose; and inordinate or unlike ones must have been not only less elegant, but unequal.

This image was oblong and not oval, but terminated with two rectilinear and parallel sides and two semicircular ends.

The rays of light, whether they be very small bodies projected, or only motion and force propagated, are moved in right lines; and whenever a ray of light is by any obstacle turned out of its rectilinear way, it will never return into the same rectilinear way, unless perhaps by very great accident.

RECTITUDE. n. s. [rectitude, Fr. rectitudo, Lat. from rectus.] This word is rarely used in the plural number.]

1. Straitness; not curvity.

2. Rightness; uprightness; freedom from moral curvity or obliquity.

Faith and repentance, together with the rectitude of their present engagement, would fully prepare them for a better life. King Charles. Calm the disorders of thy mind, by reflecting on the wisdom, equity, and absolute rectitude of all his proceedings. Atterbury.

3. Right judgement; due deliberation and decision: a philosophical term.

They perceive a result, but they think little of the multitude of concurrences and rectitudes which go to form it. Paley, Nat. Theol. ch. 9. § 6.

RECTOR. n. s. [recteur, Fr. rector, Latin.]

1. Ruler; lord; governor.

God is the supreme rector of the world, and of all those subordinate parts thereof.

When a rector of an university of scholars is chosen by the corporation or university, the election ought to be confirmed by the superior of such university. Ayliffe, Parergon.

2. Parson of an unimpropriated parish.

A parson is one that hath full possession of all the rights of a parochial church. — He is sometimes called the rector, or governor, of the church. Blackstone.

RECTORIAL.* adj. [rectorial, Fr. from rector.] Belonging to the rector of a parish. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

Wood is in some countries a rectorial, and in some a vicarial tithes. Blackstone.

RECTORSHIP. n. s. [rectoratus, Fr. from rector.] The rank or office of rector.

Had your bodies No heart among you? or had you tongues to cry Against the rectorship of judgement? Shakspeare, Coriol.

RECTORY. n. s. [rectorerie, Fr. from rector.]

A rectory or parsonage is a spiritual living, composed of land, tithe and other oblations of the people, separate or dedicate to God in any congregation for the service of his church there, and for the maintenance of the governor or minister thereof, to whose charge the same is committed. Spelman.

RECTRESS.* n. s. [rectrix, Lat.] GO-RECTRIX. n. s. verness.

Great mother Fortune, queen of human state, Rectress of action, arbitress of fate, To whom all sway, all power, all empire bows, Be present and propitious to our vows! B. Jonson, Sejanus.

A late queen rectrix prudently commanded, &c. Sir T. Herbert, Travels.

RECUBATION. n. s. [recubo, Latin.] The act of lying or leaning.

Whereas our translation renders it sitting, it cannot have that illation, for the French and Italian translations express neither position of session or recubation. Brown.

TO RECULÉ. v. n. [reculer, Fr.] To retire; to fall back; to recoil. Obsolete. Barret.

When Hector and the Trojans would have set fire on the Greek ships, Teucer with his bow made them recule back again. Ascham, Toxophilus.

[They] forced them, however strong and stout They were, as well approv'd in many a doubt, Back to recule. Spenser, F. Q. v. xi. 47.

TO RECUMBE.* v. n. [recumbo, Lat.] To lean; to repose. Not in use.

The king makes an overture of pardon and favour unto you, upon condition that any one of you will recumb, rest, lean upon, or roll himself upon the person of his son.

Barrow on the Creed, Sermon. IV. What shall we think of the loud and repeated cries — of a faith justifying the most hardened sinners in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye? Of a faith which so justifies, that the justified can fall no more? Of a faith, which consists in lolling, rolling, and recumbent on Christ? Allen, No Accept. with God by Faith only, (1761,) p. 23.

RECUMBENCE.* n. s. [from recumbent.] Act of reposing, or resting in confidence.

Instead of this πληροφορία, some of our divines bring in a recumbence or reliance upon Christ for justification and salvation, which is not exposed to the former dilemma, and may stand for justifying faith, if it may properly be called faith at all; whereof there may be some doubt. Ld. North, Light to Paradise, (1682,) p. 54.

RECUMBENCY. n. s. [from recumbent.]

1. The posture of lying or leaning. In that memorable shew of Germanicus, twelve elephants danced unto the sound of musick, and after laid them down in tricliniums, or places of festival recumbency. Brown.

2. Rest; repose. When the mind has been once habituated to this lazy recumbency and satisfaction on the obvious surface of things, it is in danger to rest satisfied there. Locke.

RECUMBENT. adj. [recumbens, Lat.]

1. Lying; leaning. The Roman recumbent, or more properly accumbent, posture in eating was introduced after the first Punic war. Arbutnot.

Aloft recumbent o'er the hanging ridge The brown woods wav'd, while ever-trickling springs Wash'd from the naked roots of oak and pine The crumbling soil. Akenside, Pleas. of Imag. B. 2.

2. Reposing; inactive; listless.

Shall Heaven, which gave us ardour, and has shewn Her own for man so strongly, not disdain What smooth emollients in theology, Recumbent virtue's downy doctors preach? Young, Night Th. 4.

RECUPERATION. n. s. [recuperatio, Lat.] The recovery of a thing lost.

The reproduction or recuperation of the same thing that was before.

Moré, Myst. of Godliness, (1660,) p. 225.

RECUPERATIVE, or RECUPERATORY. adj. [from recuperation.] Belonging to recovery. Recuperative is in the old vocabulary of Cockeram, with the substantive recuperation.

TO RECURRE. v. n. [recurro, Lat.]

1. To come back to the thought; to revive in the mind.

The idea, I have once had, will be unchangeably the same, as long as it recurs the same in my memory. Locke.

In this life, the thoughts of God and a future state often offer themselves to us; they often spring up in our minds, and when expelled, recur again

Calamy.

A line of the golden verses of the Pythagoreans recurring on the memory, hath often guarded youth from a temptation to vice. Watts.

When any word has been used to signify an idea, that old idea will recur in the mind when the word is heard. Watts.

2. [Recurir, Fr.] To have recourse to; to take refuge in.

If to avoid succession in eternal existence, they recur to the punctum stans of the schools, they will thereby very little help us to a more positive idea of infinite duration. Locke.

The second cause we know, but trouble not ourselves to recur to the first.

Wake, Preparation for Death.

To RECURRE.† v. a. [recurer, Fr. re and cure.] Written more than once by Spenser recoure, for the sake of exactness in his rhyme. Recure was formerly much in use; and not merely in the sense assigned to it, by Dr. Johnson, of "to recover from sickness or labour."] Spenser, F. Q.

1. To recover; to regain.

Freedom of kinde so lost hath he,
That never maie recured be.

Chaucer, Rom. R. 4920.

You shall recure my right. Spenser, F. Q.

2. To recover from sickness or labour; to find a remedy or cure for.

Pleaseth you ponder your suppliant's plaint,
Caused of wrong and cruel constraint,
Which I your poor vassal daily endure;
And but your goodness the same recure,
Am like for desperate doole to die.

Spenser, Shep. Cal.

Through wise handling and fair governance,
I him recured to a better will,
Purged from drugs of dole intemperance. Spenser.

Phœbus pure

In western waves his weary wagon did recure.

Spenser.

With one look she doth my life dismay,
And with another doth it straight recure. Spenser.
The wanton boy was shortly well recur'd
Of that his malady. Spenser.

This noble life doth want her proper limbs;
Her face defac'd with scars of injury: —
Which to recure we heartily solicit
Your gracious self to take on you the charge
And kingly government of this your land.

Shakespeare, Rich. III.

These my observations, and collections in my reading, accept, gentle reader; and the slips pass over with a gentle eye, as slips of youth; which more mature years may recure, if God prosper and second. Lightfoot, Miscell. (1629), p. 203.

Thy death's wound

Which he who comes thy Saviour shall recure,
Not by destroying Satan, but his works
In thee and in thy seed. Milton, P. L.

RECURRE.† n. s. Recovery; remedy.

Pale malady was plac'd,
Sore sick in bed, her colour all forgone; —
Her breath corrupt; her keepers every one
Abhorring her; her sickness past recure.

Sackville, Induct. Mirr. for Mag.

Whatsoever fell into the enemies hands, was lost without recure: the old men were slain, the young men led away into captivity.

Knolles, Hist. of the Turks.

RECURELESS.* adj. [recure and less.] Incapable of remedy.

Whether ill timent, or recureless pain,
Procure his death; the neighbours all complain,
The unskillful leech murder'd his patient
By poison of some foul ingredient!

Bp. Hall, Sat. ii. 4.

RECURRENCE. } n. s. [from recurrent.] RE-
CURRENCY.* turn.

Although the opinion at present be well sup-

RECUSANCY.* n. s. The tenets of a recusant; non-conformity. See RECUSANT.

The penalty or sanction for recusancy was not loss of life or limb, or whole state, but only a pecuniary mulct and penalty; and that also, until they would submit and conform themselves.

Sir E. Coke, Proc. against Garnett, (1606.) H. 2. b.

RECUSANT.† n. s. [recusans, Lat.] Our word was originally accented on the second syllable, as Mr. Malone also has observed, and as Dr. Johnson gave it; but it is now generally on the first.] One that refuses to acknowledge the king's supremacy in matters of religion; a non-conformist; one that refuses any terms of communion or society.

But sith our Church him disciplin'd so sore,
He, rank recusant, comes to church no more.

Davies, Wit's Bedlam, (1615.)

Such recusants as have been convicted and condemned.

All that are recusants of holy rites. Holyday.

Were all corners ransacked, what a multitude of recusants should we find upon a far differing account from that of conscience!

Dec. of Chr. Piety.

RECUSANT.* adj. Refusing to conform; refusing to take certain oaths.

They demand of the lords, that no recusant lord might have a vote in passing that act.

And with worse fires the trembling ghosts affright. Cowley.

The angelick squadron bright

If red lead and white paper be placed in the red light of the coloured spectrum, made in a dark chamber by the refraction of a prism, the paper will appear more lucid than the red lead, and therefore reflects the red-making rays more copiously than red lead doth. Newton, Opt.

Why heavenly truth,

And moderation fair, were the red marks
Of superstition's scourge. Thomson, Winter.

RED.* n. s. Red colour.

The sixth red was at first of a very fair and lively scarlet, and soon after of a brighter colour, being very pure and brisk, and the best of all the reds.

Newton, Opt.

The George and garter dangled from that bed,
Where tawdry yellow strove with dirty red. Pope.

To REDACT.* v. a. [redactus, Lat.] To force; to reduce or shape into form. Not in use.

He curs'd Petrarch for redacting verses into sonnets; which, he said, was like that tyrant's bed, where some who were too short were racked, and others too long cut short.

Drummond, Conv. of B. Jonson.

Plants they had, but metals whereby they might make use of those plants, and redact them into any form for instruments of work, were yet, till Tubal-Cain, to seek. Bp. Hall, Sermon on Mon.

It were but just

And equal to reduce me to the dust,
Desirous to resign and render back
All I receiv'd.

Milton, P. L.

3. To reform from any disorder.

That temper in the archbishop, who licensed their most pernicious writings, left his successor a very difficult work to do, to reform and reduce a church into order, that had been so long neglected, and so ill filled.

Clarendon.

4. To bring into any state of diminution.

A diaphanous body, reduced to very minute parts, thereby acquires many little surfaces in a narrow compass.

Boyle.

His ire will quite consume us, and reduce To nothing this essential. Milton, P. L.

The ordinary smallest measure is looked on as an unit in number, when the mind by division would reduce them into less fractions. Locke.

5. To degrade; to impair in dignity.

There is nothing so bad, but a man may lay hold of something about it, that will afford matter of excuse; nor nothing so excellent, but a man may fasten upon something belonging to it, whereby to reduce it. Tillotson.

6. To bring into any state of misery or meanness.

The most prudent part was his moderation and indulgence, not reducing them to desperation.

Arbutnot on Coins.

7. To subdue.

Under thee, as head supreme,

Milton, P. L.

Bodies close together reflect their own colour.

Dryden.

To REFLECT. v. n.

1. To throw back light.

In dead men's skulls, and in those holes,
Where eyes did once inhabit, there were crept,
As 'twere in scorn of eyes, reflecting gems.

Shakespeare.

2. To bend back.

Inanimate matter moves always in a straight line, and never reflects in an angle, nor bends in a circle, which is a continual reflection, unless by some external impulse, or by an intrinsic principle of gravity.

Bentley, Sermon.

3. To throw back the thoughts upon the past or on themselves.

The imagination casts thoughts in our way, and forces the understanding to reflect upon them.

Duypa.

In every action reflect upon the end; and in your undertaking it, consider why you do it.

Bp. Taylor.

Who saith, who could such ill events expect
With shame on his own counsels doth reflect.

Denham.

When men are grown up, and reflect on their own minds, they cannot find any thing more ancient there, than those opinions which were taught them before their memory began to keep a register of their actions.

Locke.

It is hard that any part of my land should be settled upon one who has used me so ill; and yet I could not see a sprig of any bough of this whole walk of trees, but I should reflect upon her and her severity.

Addison, Spect.

Let the king dismiss his woes,
Reflecting on her fair renown;
And take the cypress from his brows,
To put his wonted laurels on.

Prior.

4. To consider attentively.

Into myself my reason's eye I turn'd;
And as I much reflected, much I mourn'd.

Prior.

5. To throw reproach or censure.

Neither do I reflect in the least upon the memory of his late majesty, whom I entirely acquit of any imputation.

Swift.

6. To bring reproach.

Errors of wives reflect on husbands still.

Dryden.

REFLECTENT. adj. [reflectens, Lat.] Bending back; flying back.

The ray descendent, and the ray reflectent, flying with so great a speed, that the air between them cannot take a formal play any way, before the beams of the light be on both sides of it; it follows, that according to the nature of humid things, it must first only swell.

Digby on the Soul.

REFLECTION. n. s. [from reflect: thence I think reflexion less proper: reflexion, Fr. reflex, Lat.]

1. The act of throwing back.

The eye sees not itself,

But by reflection from other things.

Shakespeare, Jul. Cæs.

If the sun's light consisted but of one sort of rays, there would be but one colour, and it would be impossible to produce any new by reflections or refractions.

Cheyne.

2. The act of bending back.

Inanimate matter moves always in a straight line, nor ever reflects in an angle or circle, which is a continual reflection, unless by some external impulse.

Bentley, Sermon.

3. That which is reflected.

She shines not upon fools, lest the reflection should hurt her.

Shakespeare, Cymb.

As the sun in water we can bear,
Yet not the sun, but his reflection there;
So let us view her here, in what she was,
And take her image in this wat'ry glass.

Dryden.

4. Thought thrown back upon the past, or the absent, on itself.

The three first parts I dedicate to my old friends, to take off those melancholy reflections, which the sense of age, infirmity, and death may give them.

Denham.

This dreadful image so possess'd her mind,
She ceas'd all farther hope; and now began
To make reflection on th' unhappy man.
Job's reflections on his once flourishing estate, did at the same time afflict and encourage him.

Atterbury.

What wounding reproaches of soul must he feel, from the reflections on his own ingratitude!

Rogers, Sermon.

5. The action of the mind upon itself.

Reflection is the perception of the operations of our own minds within us, as it is employed about the ideas it has got.

Locke.

6. Attentive consideration.

This delight grows and improves under thought and reflection; and while it exercises, does also endear itself to the mind; at the same time employing and inflaming the meditations.

South, Sermon.

7. Censure.

He died; and oh! may no reflection shed
Its poisonous venom on the royal head.

Prior.

REFLECTIVE. adj. [from reflect.]

1. Throwing back images.

When the weary king gave place to night,
His beams he to his royal brother lent,
And so shone still in his reflective light.

Dryden.

In the reflective stream the sighing bride,
Viewing her charms impair'd, abash'd shall hide
Her pensive head.

Prior.

2. Considering things past; considering the operations of the mind.

For'd by reflective reason I confess,
That human science is uncertain guess.

Prior.

REFLECTOR.† n. s. [from reflect.]

1. Considerer.

There is scarce any thing that nature has made, or that men do suffer, whence the devout reflector cannot take an occasion of an aspiring meditation.

Boyle on Colours.

2. That which reflects; a reflecting telescope.

REFLEX. adj. [reflexus, Lat.] Directed backward.

The motions of my mind are as obvious to the reflex act of the soul, or the turning of the intellectual eye inward upon its own actions, as the passions of my sense are obvious to my sense; I see the object, and I perceive that I see it.

Hale.

The order and beauty of the inanimate parts of the world, the discernible ends of them, do evince by a reflex argument, that it is the workmanship, not of blind mechanism or blinder chance, but of an intelligent and benign agent.

Bentley.

REFLEX. n. s. [reflexus, Lat.] Reflection. There was no other way for angels to sin, but by reflex of their understandings upon themselves.

Hooker.

I'll say you gray is not the morning's eye,
'Tis but the pale reflex of Cynthia's brow.

To REFLEX.* v. a.

1. To reflect. Not now in use.

May never glorious sun reflex his beams
Upon the country where you make abode.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI. P. I.

2. To bend back; to turn back.

A dog lay, — his head reflex upon his tail.

Gregory, Posthum. (1640), p. 118.

REFLEXIBILITY. n. s. [from reflexible.] The quality of being reflexible.

Reflexibility of rays is their disposition to be reflected or turned back into the same medium from any other medium, upon whose surface they fall; and rays are more or less reflexible, which are turned back more or less easily.

Newton.

REFLEXIBLE. adj. [from reflexus, Latin.] Capable to be thrown back.

Sir Isaac Newton has demonstrated, by convincing experiments, that the light of the sun consists of rays differently refrangible and reflexible; and that those rays are differently reflexible, that are differently refrangible.

Cheyne.

REFLEXIVE.† adj. [reflexus, Lat.]

1. Having respect to something past.

That assurance reflexive cannot be a divine faith, but at the most an human, yet such as perhaps I may have no doubting mixed with.

Hammond, Pract. Catechism.

2. Having a tendency to reproach or censure.

What man does not resent an ugly reflexive word?

South, Sermon. x. 174.

REFLEXIVELY.† adv. [from reflexive.]

1. In a backward direction.

Solomon tells us life and death are in the power of the tongue, and that not only directly in regard of the good or ill we may do to others, but reflexively also, in respect of what may rebound to ourselves.

Gov. of the Tongue.

2. With a tendency to censure or reproach.

He spoke slightly and reflexively of such a lady.

South, Sermon. vi. 96.

REFLOAT. n. s. [re and floa.] Ebb; reflux.

The main float and reflow of the sea is by consent of the universe, as part of the diurnal motion.

Bacon.

To REFLOURISH. v. n. [re and flourish.] To flourish anew.

Virtue, given for lost,
Revives, reflows, rises, then vigorous most,
When most unactive deem'd.

Milton, S. A.

To REFLOW.† v. n. [refluer, Fr. refluo, Lat. re and flow.] To flow back.

Hulot.

Why do not now

W. Browne.

REFLUENCE.* } n. s. [refluens, Lat.] Qua-REFLUENCY. } lity or state of flowing back.

In the sea betwixt Norway and Scotland there is clearly observed a flow and refluence, because it is near to the ocean.

Summary of Du Bart. (1621.) p. 106.

All things sublunary move continually, in an interchangeable flowing and refluency.

W. Mountague, Dev. Ess. P. i. (1648.) p. 58.

REFLUENT. adj. [refluens, Lat.] Running back; flowing back.

The liver receives the refluent blood almost from all the parts of the abdomen.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

Tell, by what paths,

Back to the fountain's head the sea conveys

The refluent rivers, and the land repays.

Blackmore.

REFLUX. n. s. [reflux, Fr. refluxus, Latin.] Backward course of water.

Besides

Mine own that 'bide upon me, all from me
Shall with a fierce reflux on me redound.

Milton, P. L.

The variety of the flux and reflux of Euripus, or whether the same do ebb and flow seven times a day, is incontrovertible.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

TO REFOCILLATE.* v. a. [refociller, Fr. Cotgrave; refocillo, Latin.] To strengthen by refreshment: a pedantic word.

His man was to bring him a roll, and a pot of ale, to refocillate his wasted spirits.

Aubrey (of Pryune), Anecd. ii. 508.

REFOCILLATION.† n. s. [refocillation, Fr. Cotgrave; from refocillo, Lat. This pedantic word, given by Dr. Johnson without any reference or authority, is in the enlarged edition of Bullokar's Expositor, 1656.] Restoration of strength by refreshment.

Some precious cordial, some costly refocillation, a composure comfortable and restorative.

Middleton, Mad World.

TO REFOMENT.* v. a. [re and foment; Fr. refomenter.] To cherish or warm again.

Cotgrave.

TO REFORM.† v. a. [reformo, Lat. reformer, Fr.]

1. To form again: the primary meaning. Not noticed by Dr. Johnson.

And right so in the same forme,
In fleshe and blood he shall reforme,
When time cometh, the quick and dede,
At thilke wofull daie of drede,
Where every man shall take his dome,
As well the master as the grome.

Gower, Conf. Am. B. 2.

2. To change from worse to better.

A sect in England, following the very same rule of policy, seeketh to reform even the French reformation, and purge out from thence also dregs of popery.

Hooker.

Seat worthier of gods, was built
With second thoughts, reforming what was old.

Milton, P. L.

May no such storm

Fall on our times, where ruin must reform.

Denham.

Now lowering looks presage approaching storms,

And now prevailing love her face reforms.

Dryden.

One cannot attempt the perfect reforming his languages of the world, without rendering himself ridiculous.

Locke.

The example alone of a vicious prince will corrupt an age; but that of a good one will not reform it.

Swift.

TO REFORM. v. n. To pass by change from worse to better.

Was his doctrine of the mass struck out in this conflict? or did it give him occasion of reforming in this point?

Aiterbury.

REFORM.† n. s. [French.] Reformation.

Tinkers bawl'd aloud to settle

Church-discipline, for mending kettle;

No sow-gelder did blow his horn

To geld a cat, but cry'd Reform! Hudibras, i. ii.

The reforms in representation, and the bills for shortening the duration of parliaments, he uniformly and steadily opposed for many years together.

Burke.

REFORMADO.* n. s. [Spanish.]

1. A monk adhering to the reformation of his order.

Amongst others this was one of Celestin the pope's caveats for his new reformados.

Weever.

2. An officer retained in a regiment, when his company is disbanded.

His knights reformados are wound up as high and insolent as ever they were.

B. Jonson, Epicoene.

TO REFORMALIZE.* v. n. [re and formalize.] To affect reformation; to pretend correctness.

Christ's doctrine [is] pure, correcting all the unpure glosses of the reformalizing Pharisees.

Loe, Bliss of Br. Beauty, (1614.) p. 25.

REFORMATION.† n. s. [reformation, Fr. from reform.]

1. Act of forming anew; renovation; regeneration.

There are but two kinds of creation in the language of the Scriptures; the one literal, the other metaphorical; one old, the other new; one by way of formation, the other by way of reformation.

Pearson on the Creed, Art. 2.

2. Change from worse to better; commonly used of human manners.

Never came reformation in a flood

With such a heady current, scow'ring faults;

Nor ever Hydra-headed wilfulness

So soon did lose his seat, as in this king.

Shakespeare, Hen. V.

Satire lashes vice into reformation.

Dryden.

The pagan converts mention this great reformation of those who had been the greatest sinners, with that sudden and surprising change which the christian religion made in the lives of the most profligate.

Addison.

3. [By way of eminence.] The change of religion from the corruptions of popery to its primitive state.

The burden of the reformation lay on Luther's shoulders.

Aiterbury.

REFORMER. n. s. [from reform.]

1. One who makes a change for the better; an amender.

Public reformers had need first practise that on their own hearts, which they purpose to try on others.

King Charles.

The complaint is more general, than the endeavours to redress it: Abroad every man would be a reformer, how very few at home! Sprat, Sermon.

It was honour enough, to behold the English churches reformed; that is, delivered from the reformers.

South.

2. One of those who changed religion from popish corruptions and innovations.

Our first reformers were famous confessors and martyrs all over the world.

Bacon.

REFORMIST.* n. s. [from reform.]

1. One who is of the reformed churches.

This comely subordination of degrees we once had, and we had a visible conspicuous church, to whom all other reformists gave the upper hand.

Howell, Lett. iv. 36.

2. In recent times, one who proposes political reforms.

REFORMATION.* n. s. [refossus, Lat.] Act of digging up.

Hence are murders of men, rapes of virgins, mangling of carcases, refossion of graves.

Bp. Hall, St. Paul's Combat.

TO REFOUND.* v. a. [re and found.] To cast anew.

Perhaps they are all ancient bells refounded.

Watson, Hist. of Kiddington, p. 8.

TO REFRACT. v. a. [refractus, Lat.] To break the natural course of rays.

If its angle of incidence be large, and the refractive power of the medium not very strong to throw it far from the perpendicular, it will be refracted.

Cheyne, Phil. Prin.

Rays of light are urged by the refracting media.

Cheyne.

Refracted from you eastern cloud,

The grand ethereal bow shoots up.

Thomson.

REFRACTION. n. s. [refraction, Fr.]

Refraction, in general, is the incurvation or change of determination in the body moved, which happens to it whilst it enters or penetrates any medium: in dioptricks, it is the variation of a ray of light from that right line, which it would have passed on in, had not the density of the medium turned it aside.

Harris.

Refraction, out of the rarer medium into the denser, is made towards the perpendicular.

Newton, Opt.

REFRACTIVE. adj. [from refract.] Having the power of refraction.

Those superficies of transparent bodies reflect the greatest quantity of light, which have the greatest refracting power; that is, which intercede mediums that differ most in their refractive densities.

Newton, Opt.

REFRACTORINESS. n. s. [from refractory.]

Sullen obstinacy.

I did never allow any man's refractoriness against the privileges and orders of the houses.

King Charles.

Great complaint was made, by some ministers of the presbyterian gang, of my refractoriness to obey the parliament's order.

Sanderson, Cases of Consc. p. 160.

REFRACTORY.† adj. [refractaire, Fr. refractorius, Lat. and so should be written refractory, Dr. Johnson observes. It is so written in our old lexicography. See Cotgrave and Sherwood. And, so late as 1675, this orthography was used. "The stubborn and the refractory." L. Addison, State of the Jews, 1675, p. 189. See also bishop Hall in the substantive refractory. It is now accented on the first syllable, but by Shakespeare on the second.] Obstinate; perverse; contumacious.

There is a law in each well-ordered nation,

To curb those raging appetites that are
Most disobedient and refractory.

Shakespeare.

A rough-hewn seaman, being brought before a wise justice for some misdemeanor, was by him ordered to be sent away to prison, and was refractory after he heard his doom, inasmuch as he would not stir a foot from the place where he stood; saying it was better to stand where he was, than to go to a worse place.

Bacon, Apoph.

Vulgar compliance with any illegal and extravagant ways, like violent motions in nature, soon grows weary of itself, and ends in a refractory sullenness. King Charles.

Refractory mortal! if thou wilt not trust thy friends, take what follows; I know assuredly, before next full moon, that thou wilt be hung up in chains. Arbutnot, John Bull.

These atoms of theirs may have it in them, but they are refractory and sullen; and therefore like men of the same tempers, must be banged and buffeted into reason. Bentley.

REFRACTORY.* n. s.

1. An obstinate person.

How sharp hath your censure been of those refractaries amongst us, that would forego their stations, rather than yield to these harmless impossibilities! Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 306.

2. Obstinate opposition.

Gloring in their scandalous refractoriness to public order and constitutions. Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 138.

REFRAGABLE. adj. [refragabilis, Latin.]

Capable of confutation and conviction.

To REFRAIN. v. a. [refrenere, Fr. re and frēnum, Lat.] To hold back; to keep from action.

Hold not thy tongue, O God, keep not still silence; refrain not thyself. Ps. lxxxiii. 1.

My son, walk not thou in the way with them, refrain thy foot from their path. Prov. i. 15.

Nor from the Holy One of heaven

Neptune aton'd, his wrath shall now refrain,
Or thwart the synd of the gods in vain. Pope.

To REFRAIN. v. n. To forbear; to abstain; to spare.

In what place, or upon what consideration soever it be, they do it, were it their own opinion of no force being done, they would undoubtedly refrain to do it. Hooker.

For my name's sake will I defer mine anger, and refrain for thee, that I cut thee not off. Is. xlviii. 9.

That they feed not on flesh, at least the faithful party before the flood, may become more probable, because they refrained therefrom some time after. Brown, Vulg. Err.

REFRAIN.* n. s. [refrain, Fr. as "refrain" d'une balade." Cotgrave.] The burden of a song, or piece of musick; a kind of musical repetition.

Evermore, alas! was his refrain.

Chaucer, Tr. and Cress. ii. 1571.
Confine the organist to a slightly ornamented refrain. Mason on Church Musick, p. 213.

To REFRAIME.* v. a. [re and frāme.] To put together again.

That most exquisite silver sphere—was unframed and reframed in the grand signior's presence. Hakevill on Providence, p. 274.

REFRANGIBILITY. n. s. [from refrangible.]

Refrangibility of the rays of light, is their disposition to be refracted or turned out of their way, in passing out of one transparent body or medium into another. Newton.

REFRANGIBLE.† adj. [re and frango, Latin.] Capable of being refracted.

As some rays are more refrangible than others; that is, are more turned out of their course, in passing from one medium to another; it follows, that after such refraction, they will be separated, and their distinct colour observed. Locke.

REFRACTION.† n. s. [refractionem, Fr. Cotgrave; re and frāno, Lat.] The act of restraining.

To REFRESH. v. a. [refraischir, Fr. refrigero, Lat.]

1. To recreate; to relieve after pain, fatigue, or want.

Service shall with steeld sinews toil;

And labour shall refresh itself with hope. Shaks.

Musick was ordain'd to refresh the mind of man.

After his studies or his usual pain. Shakspeare.

He was in no danger to be overtaken; so that he was content to refresh his men. Clarendon.

His meals are coarse and short, his employment warrantable, his sleep certain and refreshing,

neither interrupted with the lasses of a guilty mind,

nor the aches of a crazy body. South.

2. To improve by new touches any thing impaired.

The rest refresh the scaly snakes, that sold

The shield of Pallas, and renew their gold. Dryd.

3. To refrigerate; to cool.

A dew coming after heat refresheth. Eccius. xliii. 22.

REFRESH.* n. s. [from the verb.] Act of refreshing. Not in use.

My field, of flowers quite bereaven,

Wants refresh of better hap. Daniel, Ode.

Beauty, sweet love, is like the morning dew,

Whose short refresh upon the tender green

Cheers for a time, but still the sun doth shew,

And straight 'tis gone as it had never been. Daniel, Sonnet.

REFRESH. n. s. [from refresh.] That which refreshes.

The kind refresher of the summer heats. Thomson.

REFRESHING.* n. s. Relief after pain, fatigue, or want.

Secret refreshings that repair his strength,

And fainting spirits uphold. Milton, S. A.

If you would have trees to thrive, take care that no plants be near them, which may deprive them of nourishment, or hinder refreshings and helps that they might receive. Mortimer, Husbandry.

REFRESHMENT. n. s. [from refresh.]

1. Relief after pain, want, or fatigue.

2. That which gives relief, as food, rest.

He was full of agony and horror upon the approach of a dismal death, and so had most need of the refreshments of society, and the friendly assurances of his disciples. South.

Such honest refreshments and comforts of life,

our christian liberty has made it lawful for us to use. Sprat.

REFRE'T. n. s. The burden of a song.

Dictionary.

REFRIGERANT. adj. [refrigerant, French,

from refrigerate.] Cooling; mitigating heat.

In the cure of gangrenes, you must beware of dry heat, and resort to things that are refrigerant, with an inward warmth and virtue of cherishing. Bacon.

REFRIGERANT.* n. s. A cooling medicine.

If it arise from an external cause, apply refrigerants, without any preceding evacuation. Wiseman, Surgery.

To REFRIGERATE. v. a. [refrigero, re

and frigus, Lat.] To cool.

The great breezes, which the motion of the air

in great circles, such as the girdle of the world produced, do refrigerate; and therefore in those parts noon is nothing so hot, when the breezes are great, as about ten of the clock in the forenoon. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Whether they be refrigerated inclinately or somewhat equinoctially, though in a lesser degree, they discover some veracity. Brown, Vulg. Err.

REFRIGERATION. n. s. [refrigeratio, Lat.

refrigeration, Fr.] The act of cooling; the state of being cooled.

Divers do stut; the cause may be the refrigeration of the tongue, whereby it is less apt to move. Bacon.

If the mere refrigeration of the air would fit it for breathing, this might be somewhat helped with bellows. Wilkins.

REFRIGERATIVE.† adj. [refrigerativus, Fr.

REFRIGERATORY. † adj. [refrigeratorius, Lat.]

Cooling; having the power to cool.

His meats must be but very little nutritive, but rather refrigerative and of a cooling quality.

Ferrand on Love Melanch. (1640.), p. 242.

This grateful acid spirit is—highly refrigeratory.

Bp. Berkeley, Siris, § 120.

REFRIGERATORY. n. s.

1. That part of a distilling vessel that is placed about the head of a still, and filled with water to cool the condensing vapours; but this is now generally done by a worm or spiral pipe, turning through a tub of cold water. Quincy.

2. Anything internally cooling.

A delicate wine, and a durable refrigeratory. Mortimer.

REFRIGERIUM. n. s. [Latin.] Cool

refreshment; refrigeration.

It must be acknowledged, the ancients have talked much of annual refrigeriums, respites or intervals of punishment to the damned; as particularly on the festivals. South.

REFR. part. pret. of reave.

1. Deprived; taken away. Obsolete.

Thus we well left, he better left,

In heaven to take his place,

That by like life and death, at last,

We may obtain like grace. Ascham, Schoolmaster.

I, in a desperate bay of death,

Like a poor bark, of sails and tackling left,

Rush all to pieces on thy rocky bosom. Shaks.

Another ship had seiz'd on us,

And would have left the fishers of their prey. Shakspeare.

Our dying hero, from the continent

Ravish'd whole towns, and forts from Spaniards left. Waller.

2. Preterite of reave. Took away. Obsolete.

So 'twixt them both, they not a lambkin left,

And when lambs fall'd left, the old sheeps lives they left. Spenser.

About his shoulders broad he threw

An hairy hide of some wild beast, whom he

In savage forest by adventure slew,

And left the spoil his ornament to be. Spenser.

REFR.* n. s. A chink. See RIFT.

REFUGE. n. s. [refuge, Fr. refugium,

Latin.]

1. Shelter from any danger or distress protection.

Rocks, dens, and caves! but I in none of these

Find place or refuge. Milton, P. L.

The young virgins supposed to break through the belly of the dam, will, upon any fright, for protection run into it; for then the old one receives them in at her mouth, which way, the fright being past, they will return again; which is a peculiar way of refuge. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Those, who take refuge in a multitude, have an

Arian council to answer for. Atterbury.

2. That which gives shelter or protection.

The Lord will be a refuge for the oppressed; a refuge in times of trouble. Ps. ix. 9.

They shall be your refuge from the avenger of blood. Jos. xx. 3.

Fair majesty, the refuge and redress

Of those whom fate pursues. Dryden.

3. Expedient in distress.

This last old man,

Whom with a crack'd heart I have sent to Rome,

Lov'd me above the measure of a father;

Their latest refuge was to send him. Shakspeare, Coriol.

4. Expedient in general.

Light must be supplied, among graceful refuges, by tarring any story in danger of darkness.

Wotton.

To REFUGE. v. a. [refugier, Fr. from the noun.] To shelter; to protect.

Silly beggars,

Who sitting in the stocks, refuge their shame,
That many have, and others must, sit there.

Shakespeare.

Dreads the vengeance of her injur'd lord;
Ev'n by those gods, who refug'd her, abhorr'd.

Dryden.

To REFUGE.* v. n. To take refuge.

The duke de Soubise refuged hither from France, upon miscarriage of some undertakings of his there.

Sir J. Finett, Obs. on Ambass. (1656,) p. 111.

REFUGEE. n. s. [refugié, Fr.] One who flies to shelter or protection.

Poor refugees, at first they purchase here;
And soon as denizen'd they domineer. Dryden.
This is become more necessary in some of their governments, since so many refugees settled among them.

Addison.

REFUGENCE.† } n. s. [from refugent.]
REFUGENCY. } Splendour; brightness.

The refugence of the eternal light.

Knatchbull, Tr. Annot. N. Test. p. 259.

He [Moses] was obliged to keep at a more awful distance from the tremendous throne of God, and not come within the circle of its refugency.

Stockhouse, Hist. of the Bib. B. 4. ch. 2.

REFUGENT.† adj. [refugent, old Fr.] Lacombe, refugens, Latin.] Bright; shining; glittering; splendid.

He neither might, nor wish'd to know
A more refugent light.

Wallers.

So conspicuous and refugent a truth is that of God's being the author of man's felicity, that the dispute is not so much concerning the thing, as concerning the manner of it.

Boyle.

Agamemnon's train,

When his refugent arms flash'd through the shady plain,

Fled from his well-known face. Dryden, Æn.
REFUGENTLY. adv. [from refugent.] In a shining manner.

To REFUND. v. n. [refundo, Lat.]

1. To pour back.

Were the humours of the eye tinged with any colour, they would refund that colour upon the object, and so it would not be represented as in itself it is.

Ray.

2. To repay what is received; to restore.

A governor, that had pillaged the people, was, for receiving of bribes, sentenced to refund what he had wrongfully taken.

L'Estrange.

Such wise men as himself account all that is past, to be also gone; and know, that there can be no gain in refunding, nor any profit in paying debts.

South.

How to Icarus, in the bridal hour,
Shall I, by waste undone, refund the dowry? Pope.

3. Swift has somewhere the absurd phrase, to refund himself, for to reimburse.

REFUNDER.* n. s. [from refund.] One who repays what is received.

A city usurer turned into a refunder of his ill-gotten estate.

Reas. of New Converts taking the Oaths, (1691,) p. 3.

Rogers.

2. The preemption; the right of having any thing before another; option.

When employments go a begging for want of hands, they shall be sure to have the refusal. Swift.

To REFUSE. v. a. [refuser, Fr.]

1. To deny what is solicited or required; not to comply with.

If he should chuse the right casket, you should refuse to perform his father's will, if you should refuse to accept him.

Shaks. Merch. of Ven.

Having most affectionately set life and death before them, and conjured them to choose one, and avoid the other, he still leaves them to them, as to free and rational agents, a liberty to refuse all his calls, to let his talents lie by them unprofitable.

Hammond.

Wonder not then what God for you saw good
If I refuse not, but convert, as you,
To proper substance.

Milton, P. L.

Common experience has justly a mighty influence on the minds of men, to make them give or refuse credit to any thing proposed.

Locke.

2. To reject; to dismiss without a grant.

I may neither choose whom I would, nor refuse whom I dislike.

Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

To REFUSE. v. n. Not to accept; not to comply.

Women are made as they themselves would choose;

Too proud to ask, too humble to refuse.

Garth.

REFUSE. adj. [from the verb. The noun has its accent on the first syllable, the verb on the second.] Unworthy of reception; left when the rest is taken.

Every thing vile and refuse they destroyed.

1 Sam. xv. 9.

He never had vexatious law-disputes about his dues, but had his thythes fully paid, and not of the most refuse parts, but generally the very best.

Fell, Life of Hammond.

Please to bestow on him the refuse letters; he hopes by printing them to get a plentiful provision.

Spectator.

REFUSE.† n. s. [refus, Fr.]

1. That which remains disregarded when the rest is taken.

We dare not disgrace our worthy superiours with offering unto them such refuse, as we bring unto God himself.

Hooker.

Many kinds have much refuse, which counter-vaits that which they have excellent.

Bacon.

I know not whether it be more shame or wonder, to see that men can so put off ingenuity, as to descend to so base a vice; yet we daily see it done, and that not only by the scum and refuse of the people.

Gov. of the Tongue.

Down with the falling stream the refuse run,
To raise with joyful news his drooping son.

Dryden.

This humourist keeps more than he wants, and gives a vast refuse of his superfluities to purchase heaven.

Addison.

2. Refusal: with the accent on the last syllable. Obsolete.

This spoken, ready with a proud refuse

Argantes was his proffer'd aid to scorn.

Fairfax, Tass. B. 12.

Dict.

REFUTATION. n. s. [refutatio, Lat. refutation, Fr. from refute.] The act of refuting; the act of proving false or erroneous.

'Tis such miserable absurd stuff, that we will not honour it with especial refutation.

Bentley.

To REFUTE. v. a. [refuto, Lat. refuter, Fr.] To prove false or erroneous. Applied to persons or things.

Self-destruction sought, refutes

That excellence thought in thee. Milton, P. L.

He knew that there were so many witnesses in these two miracles, that it was impossible to refute such multitudes.

Addison.

REFUTER.* n. s. [from refute.] One who refutes.

My refuter's forehead is stronger, with a weaker wit: let him try here the power of his audacity.

Bp. Hall, Hon. of the Marr. Clergy, p. 20.

To REGAIN. v. a. [regagner, Fr. re and gain.] To recover; to gain anew.

Hopeful to regain

Thy love, from thee I will not hide
What thoughts in my unquiet breast are risen.

Milton, P. L.

We've driven back

These heathen Saxons, and regain'd our earth,
As earth recovers from an ebbing tide. Dryden.

As soon as the mind regains the power to stop or continue any of these motions of the body or thoughts, we then consider the man as a free agent.

Locke.

REGAL. adj. [regal, Fr. regalis, Lat.] Royal; kingly.

Edward, duke of York,
Usurps the regal title and the seat
Of England's true anointed lawful heir.

Shaks.

Why am I sent for to a king,
Before I have shook off the regal thoughts

Wherewith I reign'd? Shakspeare, Rich. II.

With them comes a third of regal port,
But faded splendour worn, who by his gait
And fierce demeanour seems the prince of hell.

Milton, P. L.

When was there ever a better prince on the throne than the present queen? I do not talk of her government, her love of the people, or qualities that are purely regal; but her piety, charity, temperance, and conjugal love.

Swift.

REGAL. n. s. [regale, Fr.] A musical instrument.

The sounds, that produce tones, are ever from such bodies as are in their parts and parts equal; and such are in the nightingale pipes of regals or organs.

Bacon.

REGALE. n. s. [Latin.] The prerogative of monarchy.

To REGALE.† v. a. [regaler, Fr. from the old word galer, to make merry.] To refresh; to entertain; to gratify.

Nothing does so gratify, so regale an haughty humour, as this usurped sovereignty over our brethren.

Gov. of the Tongue, p. 87.

I— with a warming puff
Regale chill'd fingers. Philips, Splendid Shilling.

To REGALE.* v. n. To feast; to fare sumptuously.

REGALEMENT. n. s. [regalement, Fr.] Refreshment; entertainment.

The muses still require

Humid regalement, nor will aught avail
Imploping Phœbus with unmoisten'd lips. Philips.

REGALIA.† n. s. [Latin.] Ensigns of royalty.

Shew
The mighty potentate, to whom belong
These rich regalia pompously display'd.

Young, Night Th. 9.

REGALITY.† n. s. [regalis, Latin.]

1. Royalty; sovereignty; kingship.

Behold the image of mortality,
And feeble nature cloth'd with fleshly 'tire,
When raging passion with fierce tyranny,
Robs reason of her due regality. Spenser.

He neither could, nor would, yield to any diminution of the crown of France, in territory or regality. Bacon.

He came partly in by the sword, and had high courage in all points of regality. Bacon, Hen. VII.

The majesty of England might hang like Mahomet's tomb by a magnetick charm, between the privileges of the two houses, in airy imagination of regality. King Charles.

2. An ensign or token of royalty.

Kings in an open and stately place, before all their subjectes, receive their crowne and other regalities. Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 145. b.

REGALLY.* adv. [from regal.] In a regal manner.

Alfred—was buried regally at Winchester. Milton, Hist. of Eng. B. 5.

To REGARD. v. a. [regarder, Fr.]

1. To value; to attend to as worthy of notice.

This aspect of mine,
The best regarded virgins of our clime
Have lov'd. Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

He denies

He that observeth the wind shall never sow, and he that regardeth the clouds shall never reap. Proverbs.

6. To respect; to have relation to.

7. To look towards.

It is a peninsula, which regardeth the mainland. Sandys.

REGARD.† n. s. [regard, Fr. from the verb.]

1. Attention as to a matter of importance.

We observe omens, the falling of the salt, a dream of a funeral, an unlucky day or hour, the voice of the screech-owl, odd noises in the night, to command the most solemn regards of persons, whose imagination is more busy and active than their reason; heathens, women, young persons, melancholicks, superstitious or infirm persons, the illiterate multitude. Spencer on Prod. (1665), p. 75.

The nature of the sentence he is to pronounce, the rule of judgement by which he will proceed, requires that a particular regard be had to our observation of this precept. Atterbury.

2. Respect; reverence; attention.

To him they had regard, because long he had bewitched them. Acts, viii. 11.

With some regard to what is just and right, They'll lead their lives. Milton, P. L.

To shew greater regards to each other. Ld. Lyttelton, Obs. on the Conn. of St. Paul.

He has rendered himself worthy of their most favourable regards.

A. Smith, Theory of Mor. Sentiments.

3. Note; eminence.

Mac Ferlagh was a man of meanest regard amongst them, neither having wealth nor power. Spenser on Ireland.

4. Respect; account.

Change was thought necessary, in regard of the great hurt which the church did receive by a number of things then in use. Hooker.

5. Relation; reference.

How best we may
Compose our present evils, with regard
Of what we are and were. Milton, P. L.
Their business is to address all the ranks of mankind, and persuade them to pursue and persevere in virtue, with regard to themselves; in justice and goodness, with regard to their neighbours; and piety towards God. Watts.

6. [Regard, Fr.] Look; aspect directed to another.

Soft words to his fierce passion she assay'd;
But with stern regard he thus repell'd. Milton, P. L.

One sweet regard, shot by the royal maid. Dryden.

7. Prospect; object of sight. Not proper, nor in use.

Throw out our eyes for brave Othello,
Even till we make the main and th' aerial blue
An indistinct regard. Shakespeare, Othello.

8. Matter demanding notice.

A sage old sire,—
That many high regards and reasons 'gainst her read. Spenser, F. Q. v. ix. 43.

REGARDABLE. adj. [from regard.]

1. Observable. Not used.

I cannot discover this difference of the badger's legs, although the regardable side be defined, and the brevity by most imputed to the left. Brown, Vulg. Err.

2. Worthy of notice. Not used.

Tintogel, more famous for his antiquity, than regardable for his present estate, abuteth on the sea. Carew.

REGARDER.† n. s. [from regard.]

1. One that regards.

The regarders of times. Judges, ix. 37. (margin.)

2. An officer of the king's forest, whose business was to view and inquire into matters respecting it.

A forest hath laws of her own, to take cognizance of all trespasses; she hath also her peculiar officers, as foresters, verderers, regarders, &c. Hovell, Lett. iv. 16.

REGARDFUL. adj. [regard and full.] Attentive; taking notice of.

Bryan was so regardful of his charge, as he never disposed any matter, but first he acquainted the general. Hayward.

Let a man be very tender and regardful of every pious motion made by the spirit of God to his heart. South.

REGARDFULLY. adv. [from regardful.]

1. Attentively; heedfully.

2. Respectfully.

Is this the Athenian minion, whom the world
Voic'd so regardfully? Shakespeare, Timon.

REGARDLESS.† adj. [from regard.]

1. Headless; negligent; inattentive.

He liketh is to fall into mischance,
That is regardless of his governance. Spenser.

Regardless of the bliss wherein he sat,
Second to thee, offer'd himself to die
For man's offence. Milton, P. L.

We must learn to be deaf and regardless of other things, besides the present subject of our meditation. Watts.

2. Not regarded; slighted.

Sounding titles, stately buildings, fine gardens, gilded chariots, rich equipages, what are they? They dazzle every one but the possessor. To him, that is accustomed to them, they are cheap and regardless things. Spectator, No. 626.

Yes, traitor, Zara, lost, abandoned Zara
Is a regardless suppliant now to Osmynn.

Congreve, Mour. Bride.

REGARDLESSLY.† adv. [from regardless.] Without heed.

If any preciser idiots quarrel with my distaste towards them, I pass by them regardlessly.

Sir M. Sandys, Ess. (1634), p. 189.

REGARDLESSNESS.† n. s. [from regardless.] Heedlessness; negligence; inattention.

They are too bookish; their regardlessness of men and ways of thriving makes them stand in their own light.

Whitlock, Mann. of the Eng. p. 432.

REGATTA.* n. s. [Italian.] A kind of boat-race.

Though I stayed in this city [Venice] longer than I could have wished, I was extremely well entertained with the sight of a regatta, which is a sort of rowing match, with boats of different kinds, not performed in any other part of the world, [that is in 1744, when this remark was made,] & very seldom here, on account, I suppose, of the vast expence to which it subjects the young noblesse. This diversion seems to have taken its rise from a custom introduced by the doge Pietro Landi, in the year 1539. Drummond, Trav. p. 84.

REGENCY.† n. s. [from regent.]

1. Authority; government.

As Christ took manhood, that by it he might be capable of death, whereunto he humbled himself; so because manhood is the proper subject of compassion and feeling pity, which maketh the scepter of Christ's regency even in the kingdom of heaven amiable. Hooker.

Men have knowledge and strength to fit them for action: women affection, for their better compliance; and herewith beauty to compensate their subjection, by giving them an equivalent regency over men. Grew.

2. Vicarious government.

This great minister, finding the regency shaken by the faction of so many great ones within, and awed by the terror of the Spanish greatness without, durst begin a war. Temple.

3. The district governed by a vicegerent.

Regions they pass'd, the mighty regencies
Of seraphim. Milton, P. L.

4. Those collectively to whom vicarious regality is intrusted: as, the regency transacted affairs in the king's absence.

Instead of naming the duke of Lancaster sole protector, they constituted a council or regency, consisting of twelve persons.

Louth, Life of Wykeham, sect. 5.

REGENERACY.* n. s. [from regenerate.]

State of being regenerate.

Called from the depth of sin to regeneracy and salvation. Hammond, Works, iv. 686.

To REGENERATE. v. a. [regenero, Lat.]

1. To reproduce; to produce anew.

Albeit the son of this earl of Desmond, who lost his head, were restored to the earldom; yet could not the king's grace regenerate obedience in that degenerate house, but it grew rather more wild. Davies on Ireland.

Through all the soil a genial ferment spreads,
Regenerates the plants, and new adorns the meads.

Blackmore.

An alkali, poured to that which is mixed with an acid, raiseth an effervescence, at the cessation of which, the salts, of which the acid is composed, will be regenerated. Arbuthnot.

2. To make to be born anew; to renew by change of carnal nature to a Christian life.

No sooner was a convert initiated, but by an easy figure he became a new man, and both acted and looked upon himself as one regenerated and born a second time into another state of existence.

Addison on the Chr. Religion.

REGENERATE. adj. [regeneratus, Lat.]

1. Reproduced.

Thou! the earthly author of my blood,
Whose youthful spirit, in me regenerate,
Doth with a twofold vigour lift me up
To reach at victory. Shakespeare, Rich. II.

2. Born anew by grace to a Christian life.

For, from the mercy-seat above,
Prevenient grace descending, had remov'd
The stony from their hearts, and made new flesh
Regenerate grow instead. Milton, P. L.

If you fulfil this resolution, though you fall sometimes by infirmity; nay, though you should fall into some greater act, even of deliberate sin, which you presently retract by confession and amendment, you are nevertheless in a regenerate estate, you live the life of a christian here, and shall inherit the reward that is promised to such in a glorious immortality hereafter.

Wake, Prep. for Death.

REGENERATION. n. s. [regeneration, Fr.] New birth; birth by grace from carnal affections to a Christian life.

He saved us by the washing of regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Ghost. Tit. iii. 5.

REGENERATENESS. n. s. [from regenerate.] The state of being regenerate.

REGENT. adj. [regent, Fr. regens, Lat.]

1. Governing; ruling.

The operations of human life flow not from the corporeal moles, but from some other active regent principle that resides in the body, or governs it, which we call the soul. Hale.

2. Exercising vicarious authority.

He together calls the regent powers
Under him regent. Milton, P. L.

REGENŦ. n. s.

1. Governour; ruler.

Now for once beguill'd
Uriel, though regent of the sun, and held
The sharpest-sighted spirit of all in heaven.

Milton, P. L.

Neither of these are any impediment, because the regent thereof is of an infinite immensity. Hale.

But let a heifer with gilt horns be led
To Juno, regent of the marriage-bed. Dryden.

2. One invested with vicarious royalty.

Lord regent, I do greet your excellence
With letters of commission from the king. Shaks.

3. [Regent, Fr. professeur.] One of a certain standing, who taught in our universities; the word formerly in use for a professor; retained in the present academical designation of doctors of every faculty, and masters of arts, whether as necessary regents, regents ad placitum, or non-regents.

REGENTESS. n. s. [from regent; Fr. regente.] Protectress of a kingdom.

Cotgrave.

REGENTSHIP. n. s. [from regent.]

1. Power of governing.

2. Deputed authority.

If York have ill-demean'd himself in France,
Then let him be deny'd the regentship. Shaks.

REGERMINATION. n. s. [re and germination.] The act of sprouting again.

The Jews commonly express resurrection by regeneration, or growing up again like a plant.

Gregory, Notes on Script. (ed. 1684.) p. 125.

REGISTER. n. s. [registum, Latin.] A register. See REGISTER.

Others of later time have sought to assert him by old legends and cathedral registers.

Milton, Hist. of Eng. B. 3.

REGIBLE. adj. Governable. Dict.

REGICIDE. n. s. [regicida, Lat.]

1. Murderer of his king.

I through the mazes of the bloody field,
Hunted your sacred life; which that I miss'd
Was the propitious error of my fate,
Not of my soul; my soul's a regicide. Dryden.

2. [Regicidium, Lat.] Murder of his king.

Were it not for this amulet, how were it possible for any to think they may venture upon perjury, sacrilege, murder, regicide, without impeachment to their saintship? Decay of Chr. Piety.

Did fate or we, when great Atreides dy'd,
Urge the bold traitor to the regicide? Pope, Odys.

REGIMEN. n. s. [Latin.] That care in diet and living, that is suitable to every particular course of medicine, or state of body.

Yet should some neighbour feel a pain,
Just in the parts where I complain,
How many a message would he send,
What hearty prayers that I should mend,
Enquire what regimen I kept,
What gave me ease, and how I slept. Swift.

REGIMENT. n. s. [regiment, old Fr.] 1. Established government; polity; mode of rule. Not in use.

We all make complaint of the iniquity of our times, not unjustly, for the days are evil; but compare them with those times wherein there were no civil societies, with those times wherein there was as yet no manner of publick regiment established, and we have surely good cause to think, that God hath blessed us exceedingly. Hooker.

The corruption of our nature being presupposed, we may not deny, but that the law of nature doth now require of necessity some kind of regiment. Hooker.

They utterly damn their own consistorian regiment, for the same can neither be proved by any literal texts of holy Scripture, nor yet by necessary inference out of Scripture. White.

2. Rule; authority. Not in use.

The regiment of the soul over the body, is the regiment of the more active part over the passive. Hale.

3. [Regiment, Fr.] A body of soldiers under one colonel.

Higher to the plain we'll set forth,
In best appointment, all our regiments. Shaks.

The elder did whole regiments afford,
The younger brought his conduct and his sword. Waller.

The standing regiments, the fort, the town,
All but this wicked sister are our own. Waller.

Now they aid,
Eugene, with regiments unequal prest,
Awaits. Philips.

REGIMENTAL. adj. [from regiment.] Belonging to a regiment; military.

He sat, with a patient degree of attention, to observe the proceedings of a regimental court-martial. Langton, of Johnson, in Boswell's Life.

REGIMENTALS. n. s. pl. The uniform dress of a regiment of soldiers.

He now entered, handsomely dressed in his regimentals; and without vanity (for I am above it) he appeared as handsome a fellow as ever wore a military dress. Goldsmith, Pic. of Wakefield, ii. 12.

REGION. n. s. [regio, Fr. regio, Lat.]

1. Tract of land; country; tract of space.

All the regions
Do seemingly revolt; and, who resist,
Are mock'd for valiant ignorance. Shakespeare.

Her eyes in heaven

Would through the airy regions stream so bright,
That birds would sing, and think it were not night. Shakespeare.

The upper regions of the air perceive the collection of the matter of tempests before the air below. Bacon.

They rag'd the goddess, and with fury fraught,
The restless regions of the storm she sought. Dryd.

2. Part of the body.

The bow is bent and drawn, make from the shaft.
— Let it fall rather, though the fork invade
The region of my heart. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

3. Place; rank.

The gentleman kept company with the wild prince and Poin: he is of too high a region; he knows too much. Shakespeare.

REGISTER. n. s. [registre, Fr. registre, Lat. Dr. Johnson. — It is a corruption of registum: and Milton, as I have shewn, correctly uses regist. Spenser also writes the present word register, (not register;) F. Q. ii. ix. 59. The Lat. registum became registrum, and then registrum. See Du Cange: "Regestum, liber in quem regeantur commentarii quavis, &c. Registrum, liber qui rerum gestarum memoriam continet, &c.]"

1. An account of any thing regularly kept.

Joy may you have, and everlasting fame,
Of late most hard achievement by you done,
For which inrolled is your glorious name
In heavenly registers above the sun. Spenser.

Sir John, as you have one eye upon my follies, as you hear them unfolded, turn another into the register of your own. Shakespeare.

This island, as appeareth by faithful registers of those times, had ships of great content.

Bacon, New Atlantis.

Of these experiments, our friend, pointing at the register of this dialogue, will perhaps give you a more particular account. Boyle.

For a conspiracy against the emperor Claudius, it was ordered that Scribonianus's name and consulate should be effaced out of all public registers and inscriptions. Addison.

2. [Registrarius, law Lat.] The officer whose business is to write and keep the register.

He being able to shew no certificate, save only a ticket from Mr. French, the register was refused. Alp. Laud, Rem. ii. 182.

3. [In chymistry.] A sliding plate of iron which, in small chimneys, regulates the heat of the fire: hence the modern term, a register-stove.

Look well to the register:
And let your heat still lessen by degrees.

B. Jonson, Alchemist.

4. A sliding piece of wood, called a stop, in an organ, perforated with a number of holes answerable to those in a sound-board: which being drawn one way stops them, and the other opens them, for the readmission of wind into the pipes.

From Petrius, whose work was printed so late as 1615, he learns that registers, by which only a variety of stops could be formed, were not invented till towards the conclusion of the preceding century. Mason on Church Music, p. 40.

5. One of the inner parts of the mould wherein printing types are cast; and also the disposing the forms of the press, so as that the lines and pages printed on one side of the sheet meet exactly against those on the other. Chambers.

To RE'GISTER. v. a. [registrar, Fr. from the noun.]

1. To record; to preserve from oblivion by authentic accounts.
The Roman emperors registered their most remarkable buildings, as well as actions.

Addison on Italy.

2. To enrol; to set down in a list.

Such follow him, as shall be register'd;

Part good, part bad: of bad the longer scrowl.

Milton, P. L.

RE'GNANT. adj. [French.]

1. Reigning; having regal authority.

Princes are shy of their successors, and there may be reasonably supposed in queens regnant a little proportion of tenderness that way, more than in kings.

Watson.

2. Predominant; prevalent; having power.

The law was regnant, and confin'd his thought, Hell was not conquer'd, when the poet wrote.

Waller.

His guilt is clear, his proofs are regnant,

A traitor to the vices regnant.

Swift, Miscell.

To REGO'RGE. v. a. [re and gorge.]

1. To vomit up; to throw back.

It was scoffingly said, he had eaten the king's goose, and did then regorge the feathers.

Hayward.

2. To swallow eagerly.

Drunk with wine,

And fat regorg'd of bulls and goats.

Milton, S. A.

3. [Regorger, Fr.] To swallow back.

As tides at highest mark regorge the flood,
So fate, that could no more improve their joy,
Took a malicious pleasure to destroy.

Dryden.

To REGRA'DE.* v. n. [regredior, Lat. re and gradus.] To retire.

They saw the darkness commence at the eastern limb of the sun, and proceed to the western, till the whole was eclipsed; and then regrade backwards from the western to the eastern, till his light was fully restored; which they attributed to the miraculous passage of the moon across the sun's disk.

Dr. Hales, New Analysis of Chronology, ii. 897.

To REGRA'FT. v. a. [regresser, Fr. re and graft.] To graft again.

Of regrafting the same cions, may make fruit greater.

Bacon.

To REGRA'NT. v. a. [re and grant.] To grant back.

He, by letters patents, incorporated them by the name of the dean and chapter of Trinity-church, in Norwich, and *regranter*ed their lands to them.

Ayliffe, Paregon.

To REGRATE. v. a.

1. To offend; to shock.

The clothing of the tortoise and viper rather regrate than pleaseth the eye.

Derham, Phys. Theol.

2. [Regrater, Fr.] To engross; to forestal.

Neither should they buy any corn, unless it were to make malt thereof; for by such engrossing and regrating, the dearth that commonly reigneth in England hath been caused.

Spenser.

REGRA'TER.† n. s. [regrateur, Fr. from regrate.] Forestaller; engrosser: originally a seller by retail; a huckster.

The people would gladly have the ragrater's head where his feet are.

Outred, Tr. of Cope on Proverbs, (1580.) fol. 192. b.

Through the scarcity caused by regulators of bread corn, of which starch is made, the ladies, to save charges, have their heads washed at home, and the basins put out their linen to common laundresses!

Tatler, No. 118.

To REGREE'T. v. a. [re and greet.] To resalute; to greet a second time.

Hereford, on pain of death,
Till twice five summers have enrich'd our fields,
Shall not regreet our fair dominions,
But lead the stranger paths of banishment.

Shaks.

REGREE'T. n. s. [from the verb.] Return or exchange of salutation. Not in use.

And shall these hands, so newly join'd in love,
Unyoke this seizure, and this kind regreet?

Play fast and loose with faith?

Shaks.

REGRESS. n. s. [regress, Fr. regressus, Lat.] Passage back; power of passing back.

'Tis their natural place which they always tend to; and from which there is no progress nor regress.

Burnet.

To REGRE'SS. v. n. [regressus, Lat.] To go back; to return; to pass back to the former state or place.

All being forced unto fluent consistencies, naturally regress unto their former solidities.

Brown.

REGRESS'ION. n. s. [regressus, Lat.] The act of returning or going back.

To desire there were no God, were plainly to unwish their own being, which must needs be annihilated in the subtraction of that essence, which substantially supporteth them, and restrains from regression into nothing.

Brown.

REGRE'T.† n. s. [regret, Fr. regretto, Italian. Dr. Johnson.—The word is probably from the Goth. greitan, to weep, to cry. See To GREIT. Regret is lamentation repeated.]

1. Vexation at something past; bitterness of reflection.

I never bare any touch of conscience with greater regret.

King Charles.

A passionate regret at sin, a grief and sadness at its memory, enters us into God's roll of mourners.

Dec. of Chr. Piety.

Though sin offers itself in never so pleasing a dress, yet the remorse and inward regrets of the soul, upon the commissions of it, infinitely overbalance those faint gratifications it affords the senses.

South, Sermon.

2. Grief; sorrow.

Neger any prince expressed a more lively regret for the great man; in all offices of grace towards his servants, and in a wonderful solicitous care for the payment of his debts.

Clarendon.

That freedom, which all sorrows claim,
She does for thy content resign;
Her piety itself would blame,
If her regrets should waken thine.

Prior.

3. Dislike; aversion. Not proper.

It is a virtue to have some ineffective regrets to damnation, and such a virtue too, as shall balance all our vices?

Dec. of Chr. Piety.

To REGRET. v. a. [regretter, Fr. from the noun.]

1. To repent; to grieve at.

I shall not regret the trouble my experiments cost me, if they be found serviceable to the purposes of respiration.

Boyle.

Calmly he look'd on either life, and here
Saw nothing to regret, or there to fear;
From nature's temp'rate feast rose satisfy'd,
Thank'd heav'n that he had liv'd, and that he dy'd.

Pope.

2. To be uneasy at. Not proper.

Those, the impiety of whose lives makes them regret a Deity, and secretly wish there were none, will greedily listen to atheistical notions.

Glanville, Scepis.

REGRE'TFUL.* adj. [regret and full.] Full of regret.

Thou art return'd, but nought returns with thee,
Save my lost joys' regretful memory.

Fanshawe, Past. Fido, p. 76.

Think not regretful I survey the deed.

Shenstone, Eleg. 19.

REGRE'TFULLY.* adv. [from regretful.] With regret.

He departs out of this world regretfully.

Greenhill, Art of Embalming, p. 104.

REGUE'RDON. n. s. [re and gurdon.] Reward; recompense.

Stoop, and set your knee against my foot;
And in regueardon of that duty done,
I gird thee with the valiant sword of York.

Shakspeare.

To REGUE'RDON.† v. a. [regueardon, old French; re and gurdon. Chaucer uses this verb.] To reward. The verb and noun are both obsolete.

Long since we were resolved of your truth,
Your faithful service and your toil in war;
Yet never have you tasted your reward,
Or been regueardon'd with so much as thanks.

Shakspeare.

REGULAR. adj. [regulier, Fr. regularis, Lat.]

1. Agreeable to rule; consistent with the mode prescribed.

The common cant of critics is, that though the lines are good, it is not a regular piece.

Guardian.

The ways of heaven are dark and intricate,
Fuzzled in mazes, and perplex'd with errors;
Our understanding traces them in vain,
Lost and bewilder'd in the fruitless search;
Not seeing with how much art the windings run,
Nor where the regular confusion ends.

Addison.

So when we view some well-proportion'd dome,
No monstrous height or breadth or length appear;
The whole at once is bold and regular.

Pope.

2. Governed by strict regulations.

So just thy skill, so regular my rage. Pope.

3. In geometry, regular body is a solid, whose surface is composed of regular and equal figures, and whose solid angles are all equal, and of which there are five sorts, viz. 1. A pyramid, comprehended under four equal and equilateral triangles. 2. A cube, whose surface is composed of six equal squares. 3. That which is bounded by eight equal and equilateral triangles. 4. That which is contained under twelve equal and equilateral pentagons. 5. A body consisting of twenty equal and equilateral triangles: and mathematicians demonstrate, that there can be no more regular bodies than these five. Muschenbroek.

There is no universal reason, not confined to human fancy, that a figure, called regular, which hath equal sides and angles, is more beautiful than any irregular one. Bentley.

4. Instituted or initiated according to established forms or discipline: as, a regular doctor; regular troops.

5. Methodical; orderly.

More people are kept from a true sense and taste of religion, by a regular kind of sensuality and indulgence, than by gross drunkenness. Law.

REGULAR. n. s. [regulier, Fr.]

In the Romish church, all persons are said to be regulars, that do profess and follow a certain rule of life, in Latin stiled regula; and do likewise observe the three approved vows of poverty, chastity, and obedience.

Ayliffe, Parergon.

REGULARITY. n. s. [regularité, Fr. from regular.]

1. Agreeableness to rule.

2. Method; certain order.

Regularity is certain where it is not so apparent, as in all fluids; for regularity is a similitude continued. Grew.

He was a mighty lover of regularity and order; and managed all his affairs with the utmost exactness. Atterbury.

REGULARLY. adv. [from regular.] In a manner concordant to rule; exactly.

If those painters, who have left us such fair platforms, had rigorously observed it in their figures, they had indeed made things more regularly true, but withal very displeasing. Dryden.

With one judicious stroke,
On the plain ground Appellus drew
A circle regularly true. Prior.

Strains that neither ebb nor flow,
Correctly cold, and regularly low. Pope.

TO REGULATE. v. a. [regula, Latin.]

1. To adjust by rule or method.

Nature, in the production of things, always designs them to partake of certain, regulated, established essences, which are to be the models of all things to be produced: this, in that crude sense, would need some better explication. Locke.

2. To direct.

Regulate the patient in his manner of living. Wiseman.

Ev'n goddesses are women; and no wife
Has pow'r to regulate her husband's life. Dryden.

REGULATION.† n. s. [from regulate.]

1. The act of regulating.

Being but stupid matter, they cannot continue any regular and constant motion, without the guidance and regulation of some intelligent being. Ray on the Creation.

2. Method; the effect of being regulated.

Of this sense no example is given; nor is it easy to find any, where the word regulation would be perfectly answerable to the meaning of method; which should more properly be rule. Mason.

I may safely affirm, that nothing is, under due regulations, improper to be taught in this place, which is proper for a gentleman to learn. Blackstone.

REGULATOR. n. s. [from regulate.]

1. One that regulates.

The regularity of corporeal principles sheweth them to come at first from a divine regulator. Grew, Cosmol.

2. That part of a machine which makes the motion equable.

REGULUS. n. s. [Lat.; regule, Fr.]

Regulus is the finer and most weighty part of metals, which settles at the bottom upon melting. Quincy.

TO REGURGITATE.† v. a. [regurgiter, Fr. Cotgrave; re and gurgus, Lat.] To throw back; to pour back.

The inhabitants of the city remove themselves into the country so long, until, for want of receipt and encouragement, it regurgitates and sends them back. Graunt.

Arguments of divine wisdom, in the frame of animate bodies, are the artificial position of many valves, all so situate, as to give a free passage to the blood and other humours in their due channels, but not permit them to regurgitate and disturb the great circulation. Bentley.

TO REGURGITATE. v. n. To be poured back.

Nature was wont to evacuate its vicious blood out of these veins, which passage being stopt, it regurgitates upwards to the lungs. Harvey on Consumptions.

REGURGITATION.† n. s. [regurgitation, Fr.] Resorption; the act of swallowing back.

Regurgitation of matter is the constant symptom. Sharp.

TO REHABILITATE.* v. a. [re and habilitate; Fr. rehabilitier.] To restore a delinquent to former rank, privilege, or right; to qualify again: a term both of the civil and canon law.

The king alone can rehabilitate an officer noted, condemned, and degraded; or a gentleman who has derogated from his rank. Chambers.

As to foreign powers, so long as they were conjoined with Great Britain in this contest, so long they were treated as the most abandoned tyrants, and indeed the basest of the human race. The moment any of them quits the cause of this government, and of all governments, he is rehabilitated, his honour is restored, all his attainders are purged! Burke, on a Regicide Peace.

Pope Calixtus rehabilitated the memory of Jeanne d'Arc, declaring her, by a bull, a martyr to her religion, to her country, and to her sovereign. Seward, Anecd. iii. 26.

REHABILITATION.* n. s. [from rehabilitate.] Act of restoring to a right or privilege which had been forfeited.

They transmitted to him from his sovereign letters of rehabilitation, that established him in his rank of an honest man. Stuart, Hist. of Scott. ii. 240.

TO REHEAR.† v. a. [re and hear.] To hear again: principally, a law expression.

Every petition for a rehearing, in the court of Chancery, must be signed by two counsel of chaacter, certifying that they apprehend the cause is proper to be reheard. Chambers.

REHEAR'ING.* n. s. [from rehear.] A second hearing.

My design is to give all persons a rehearing, who have suffered under any unjust sentence of the Examiner. Addison, Whig-Examiner.

So far, at that rehearing, from redress,
They then turn witnesses against themselves. Young, Night Th. 8.

REHEAR'SAL. n. s. [from rehearse.]

1. Repetition; recital.

Twice we appoint, that the words which the minister pronounceth, the whole congregation shall repeat after him; as first in the publick confession of sins, and again in rehearsal of our Lord's prayer after the blessed sacrament. Hooker.

What dream'd my lord? tell me, and I'll requite it

With sweet rehearsal of my morning's dream. Shakspeare.

What respected their actions as a rule or admonition, applied to yours, is only a rehearsal, whose zeal in asserting the ministerial cause is so generally known. South.

2. The recital of any thing previous to publick exhibition.

The chief of Rome,
With gaping mouths to these rehearsals come. Dryden.

TO REHEARSE. v. a. [from rehear. Skinner.]

1. To repeat; to recite.

Rehearse not unto another that which is told unto thee. Eccles. xix. 7.

Of modest poets be thou just,
To silent shades repeat thy verse,
Till fame and echo almost burst,
Yet hardly dare one line rehearse. Swift.

2. To relate; to tell.

Great master of the muse! inspir'd
The pedigree of nature to rehearse,
And sound the Maker's work in equal verse. Dryden.

3. To recite previously to publick exhibition.

All Rome is pleased, when Statius will rehearse,
And longing crowds expect the promis'd verse. Dryden.

REHEAR'SER.* n. s. [from rehearse.] One who recites.

The recital of genealogies, which has been considered as very efficacious to the preservation of a true series of ancestry, was anciently made when the heir of the family came of age. This practice has never subsisted within time of memory, nor was much credit due to such rehearsers, who might obtrude fictitious pedigrees, either to please their masters, or to hide the deficiency of their own memories. Johnson, Journ. West. Islands.

TO REJECT.† v. a. [rejecter, Fr. Cotgrave; rejicio, rejectus, Lat.]

1. To dismiss without compliance with proposal or acceptance of offer.

Barbarossa was rejected into Syria, although he perceived that it tended to his disgrace. Knolles, Hist. of the Turks.

Have I rejected those that me ador'd
To be of him, whom I adore, abhor'd? Brown.

2. To cast off; to make an abject.

Thou hast rejected the word of the Lord, and the Lord hath rejected thee from being king. 1 Sam. xv. 26.

Give me wisdom, and reject me not from among thy children. Wisd. ix. 4.

He is despised and rejected of men, a man of sorrows. Is. liii. 3.

3. To refuse; not to accept.

Because thou hast rejected knowledge, I will reject thee, that thou shalt be no priest. Hos. iv. 6.

Whether it be a divine revelation or no, reason must judge, which can never permit the mind to reject a greater evidence, to embrace what is less evident. Locke.

How would such thoughts make him avoid every thing that was sinful and displeasing to God, lest when he prayed for his children, God should reject his prayers? Law.

4. To throw aside, as useless or evil.

In the philosophy of human nature, as well as in physics and mathematics, let principles be examined according to the standard of common sense, and be admitted or rejected according as they are found to agree or disagree with it. Beattie.

REJECTABLE.* adj. [rejectable, Fr. from reject.] That may be rejected.

REJECTA'NEOUS.* adj. [rejectaneus, Lat.] Not chosen; rejected.

Taking notice how sacred a thing the Protestant religion is in the sight of God, and how rejectaneus that of the church of Rome.

More, on the Seven Churches, Dedic.
There have been sects of men, who have fancied themselves the special good men, the godly, the saints, the flower of mankind, the choice ones, the darlings of God, the favourites of heaven, the special objects of divine love and care; all others, they think, are impious and profane, rejectaneus and reprobate people, to whom God beareth no good will or regard. Barrow, vol. iii. S. 29.

REJECTER.* n. s. [from reject.] One who rejects; a refuser.

Bad men without the covenant, or rejecters of it.

REJECTION. n. s. [rejection, Lat.] The act of casting off or throwing aside.

The rejection I use of experiments, is infinite; but if an experiment be probable and of great use, I receive it. Bacon.

Medicines urinate do not work by rejection and indigestion, as solutive do. Bacon.

REJECTIOUS.* adj. [rejectus, Lat.] That may be rejected or refused.

Persons suspicious and rejectitious, whom their families and allies have disowned, and who ought to be set at table with servants.

Waterhouse, Apol. for Learn. (1653), p. 151.
They constituted some legitimate and other rejectitious days. Cudworth, Sermon. (1676), p. 23.

REIGLE.† n. s. [reigle, Fr. "a line, a square, a form, a pattern," Cotgrave; from regula, Lat.] A hollow cut to guide any thing.

A flood-gate is drawn up and let down through the reigles in the side posts.

Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

To REIGN. v. n. [regno, Lat. regner, Fr.] 1. To enjoy or exercise sovereign authority.

This, done by them, gave them such an authority, that though he reigned, they in effect ruled, most men honouring them, because they only deserved honour. Sidney.

Tell me, shall Banquo's issue ever Reign in this kingdom? Shakespeare, Macbeth.

A king shall reign in righteousness, and princes rule in judgement. Is. xxxi. 1.

Did he not first sev'n years, a life-time, reign? Cowley.

This right arm shall fix
Her seat of empire; and your son shall reign.

A. Phillips.

2. To be predominant; to prevail.

Now did the sign reign, under which Perkin should appear. Bacon.

More are sick in the summer, and more die in the winter, except in pestilence diseases, which commonly reign in summer or autumn. Bacon.

Great secrecy reigns in their publick councils. Addison.

3. To obtain power or dominion.

That as sin reigned unto death, even so might grace reign through righteousness unto eternal life by Jesus Christ. Rom. v. 21.

REIGN. n. s. [regne, Fr. regnum, Lat.]

1. Royal authority; sovereignty.

He who like a father held his reign,
So soon forgot, was just and wise in vain. Pope.

2. Time of a king's government.

Queer country puts extol queen Bess's reign,
And of lost hospitality complain. Bramston.

The following licence of a foreign reign,
Did all the dregs of hold Socinus drain. Pope.

Russel's blood
Stain'd the sad annals of a giddy reign. Thomson.

3. Kingdom; dominions.

Saturn's sons receiv'd the threefold reign
Of heaven, of ocean, and deep hell beneath. Prior.

That wrath which hurl'd to Pluto's gloomy reign,
The souls of mighty chiefs untimely slain. Pope.

4. Power; influence.

The year againe
Was turning round; and every season's raigue Renew'd upon us. Chapman.

Sherwood.

To REIMPORTUNE.* v. a. [reimportuner, Fr.] To importune or entreat again.

Cotgrave.

To REIMPLANT.* v. a. [re and implant.] To plant or graft again.

How many grave and godly matrons usually graffe or reimplant, on their now more aged heads and brows, the reliques, combings, or cuttings, of their own or others' more youthful hair!

Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 45.

To REIMPRE'GNATE. v. a. [re and impregnate.] To impregnate anew.

The vigour of the loadstone is destroyed by fire, nor will it be reimpregnated by any other magnet than the earth. Brown.

REIMPRESSION.† n. s. [re and impression.]

A second or repeated impression.

I have caused a re-impression of this tract. Clem. Spelman.

To REIMPRINT.* v. a. [re and imprint.] To imprint again.

I have been often solicited within these two years to reprint this little treatise. Spelman.

REIN.† n. s. [rein, Fr. "the rein of a bridle," Cotgrave. Renn-snara, Sueth.

laqueus constringens, from renna, constringere. Serenius.

1. The part of the bridle, which extends from the horse's head to the driver's or rider's hand.

Every horse bears his commanding rein,
And may direct his course as please himself. Shakespeare.

Take you the reins, while I from cares remove,
And sleep within the chariot which I drove. Dryden.

With hasty hand the ruling reins he drew;
He lash'd the coursers, and the coursers flew. Pope.

2. Used as an instrument of government, or for government.

The hard rein, which both of them have borne Against the old kind king. Shaks. K. Lear.

3. To give the REINS. To give license.

War —

[Hath] to disorder'd rage let loose the reins. Milton, P. L.

When to his lust Ægisthus gave the rein,
Did fate or we the adulterous act constrain? Pope.

To REIN. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To govern by a bridle.

He mounts and reins his horse. Chapman.

He, like a proud steed rein'd, went haughty on. Milton, P. L.

His son retain'd
His father's art, and warrior steeds he rein'd. Dryden.

2. To restrain; to controul.

And where you find a maid,
That, ere she sleep, hath thrice her pray'r said,
Rein up the organs of her fantasy;
Sleep she as sound as careless infancy. Shakespeare.

Being once chafed, he cannot
Be rein'd again to temperance; then he speaks
What's in his heart. Shakespeare, Coriol.

To REINGRA'TIATE.* v. a. [re and ingratiate.] To ingratiate again; to recommend to favour again.

Fearing his force, and that probably he would reingratiate himself. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 90.

Turkill, joining now with Canute, as it were now to reingratiate himself after his revolt, counselled him not to land. Milton, Hist. of Eng. B. 6.

If he were once reingratiated to his majesty's trust. Ld. Clarendon, Life, l. 152.

To REINHABIT.* v. a. [re and inhabit.] To inhabit again.

It should be such a time, when a commission to cause the people to return and re-inhabit, should be seconded with another, to build the wall of Jerusalem, and the plot within the wall.

Mede on Dem. p. 10.

Towns and cities were not re-inhabited, but lay ruined and waste. Milton, Hist. of Eng. B. 3.

To REINSE'RT. v. a. [re and insert.] To insert a second time.

To REINSPIRE. v. a. [re and inspire.] To inspire anew.

Time will run
On smoother, till Favonius reinspire
The frozen earth, and clothe in fresh attire
The lily and rose. Milton, Sonnet.

The mangled dame lay breathless on the ground
When on a sudden reinspir'd with breath,
Again she rose. Dryden.

To REINSTAL. v. a. [re and instal.]

1. To seat again.

That alone can truly reinstall thee
In David's royal seat, his true successor. Milton, P. L.

2. To put again in possession. This example is not very proper.

Thy father

Levied an army, weening to redeem
And reinstate me in the diadem. Shaks. Hen. VI.
To REINSTATE. v. a. [re and instate.] To put again in possession.

David, after that signal victory, which had preserved his life, reinstated him in his throne, and restored him to the ark and sanctuary; yet suffered the loss of his rebellious son to overwhelm the sense of his deliverance. Gov. of the Tongue.

Modesty reinstates the widow in her virginity. Addison.

The reinstating of this hero in the peaceable possession of his kingdom, was acknowledged. Pope.

To REINTEGRATE. v. a. [reintegrer, Fr. re and integrer, Lat. It should perhaps be written redintegrate.] To renew with regard to any state or quality; to repair; to restore.

This is the rejoicing city that dwelt carelessly, that said, there is none beside me. Zeph. ii. 15.

I will comfort them, and make them rejoice from their sorrow. Jer. xxxi. 13.

Let them be brought to confusion, that rejoice at mine hurt. Ps. xxxv. 26.

Jethro rejoiced for all the goodness which the Lord had done. Exod. xviii. 9.

They rejoice each with their kind. Milton, P. L.

To REJOICE. † v. a. To exhilarate; to gladden; to make joyful; to glad.

On May-day in the morning, every man, except impediment, would walke into the sweete meadows and greene woods, there to rejoice their spirits with the beauty and savour of sweete flowers. Stow, Surv. of Lond. (1603.)

Alone to thy renown 'tis giv'n,
Unbounded through all worlds to go;

While she great saint rejoices heaven,
And thou sustain'st the orb below. Prior.

I should give Cain the honour of the invention; were he alive, it would rejoice his soul to see what mischief it had made. Arbutnot on Coins.

REJOICE.  n. s.* Act of rejoicing. Not in use.

There will be signal examples of God's mercy, and the angels must not want their charitable rejoices for the conversion of lost sinners. Brown, Chr. Mor. ii. 6.

REJOICER. n. s. [from rejoice.] One that rejoices.

Whatsoever faith entertains, produces love to God; but he, that believes God to be cruel or a rejoicer in the unavoidable damnation of the greatest part of mankind, thinks evil thoughts concerning God. Bp. Taylor, Rule of Living Holy.

REJOIC'ING.  n. s.* Expression of joy; subject of joy.

Thy testimonies have I taken as an heritage for ever, for they are the rejoicing of my heart. Ps. cxix. 111.

Behold, I create Jerusalem a rejoicing, and her people a joy. Isa. lxx. 18.

Thy word was unto me the joy and rejoicing of mine heart. Jer. xv. 16.

We should particularly express our rejoicing by love and charity to our neighbours. Nelson.

REJOIC'INGLY.  adv.* [from rejoicing.] With joy; with exultation.

Parsons rejoicingly relateth, out of Walsingham, the answer of king Henry the Third of England to king Lewis of France, called the saint. Sheldon, Mir. of Antichr. (1616.) p. 263.

To REJOIN. v. a. [rejoindre, Fr.]

1. To join again.

The grand signior conveyeth his gallies down to Grand Cairo, where they are taken in pieces, carried upon camels' backs, and rejoined together at Sues. Brown, Vulg. Err.

2. To meet one again.

Thoughts, which at Hyde-park-corner I forgot, Meet and rejoin me in the pensive groat. Pope.

To REJOIN. v. n. To answer to an answer.

It will be replied, that he receives advantage by this lopping of his superfluous branches; but I rejoin, that a translator has no such right. Dryden, Pref. to Ovid.

REJOIN'DER. n. s. [from rejoin.]

1. Reply to an answer.

The quality of the person makes me judge myself obliged to a rejoinder. Glanville to Albion.

2. Reply; answer.

Injury of chance rudely beguiles our lips
Of all rejoindure. Shakspeare, Tr. and Cress.

To REJOIN'DER.  v. n.* [from the noun.] To make a reply. Not in use.

When Nathan shall rejoinder with a "Thou art the man!"—then their hearts come to the touchstone. Hammond, Works, iv. 604.

To REJOIN'T.  v. a.* [re and joint.] To reunite the joints.

Ezekiel saw dry bones rejoined and reinspired with life. Barrow on the Creed, Resur. of the Body.

REJOINT. n. s. [rejoillir, Fr.] Shock; succussion.

The sinner, at his highest pitch of enjoyment, is not pleased with it so much, but he is afflicted more; and as long as these inward rejoits and recoillings of the mind continue, the sinner will find his accounts of pleasure very poor. South.

To REJOURN.  v. a.* [readjourner, Fr.] To adjourn to another hearing or inquiry.

To the Scriptures themselves I rejoin all such atheistical spirits; as Tully did Atticus, doubting of this point, to Plato's Phædon. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 27.

You rejoin a controversy of three-pence to a second day of audience. Shakspeare, Coriol.

REIT. † n. s. Sedge or sea-weed. Bailey.

Calling it the sea of weeds, or sedge, of flag or rush, tang, rack or reet, in Latin, algae; which reddish weeds in abundance grew in it. Bp. Richardson on the O. Test. (1655.) p. 11.

REITER.  n. s.* [Germ. reiter.] A rider; a trooper: better known in old English, as rutter. See RUTTER.

To REITERATE. v. a. [re and itero, Lat. reiterer, Fr.] To repeat again and again.

You never spoke what did become you less
Than this; which to reiterate, were sin. Shaks.

With reiterated crimes he might Heap on himself damnation. Milton, P. L.

Although Christ hath forbid us to use vain repetitions when we pray, yet he hath taught us, that to reiterate the same requests will not be vain. Smauldridge.

REITERATION. n. s. [reiteration, Fr. from reiterare.] Repetition.

It is useful to have new experiments tried over again; such reiterations commonly exhibiting new phenomena. Boyle.

The words are a reiteration or reinforcement of an application, arising from the consideration of the excellency of Christ above Moses. Ward of Inidelity.

To REJUDGE. v. a. [re and judge.] To re-examine; to review; to recal to a new trial.

The muse attends thee to the silent shade;
'Tis hers the brave man's latest steps to trace,
Rejudge his acts, and dignity disgrace. Pope.

REJUVENESCENCE, or REJUVENESCENCY.  n. s.* [re and juvenescens, Lat.] State of being young again.

The whole creation, now grown old, expecteth and waiteth for a certain rejuvenescency. Smith on Old Age, (1666.) p. 264.

That degree of health I give up entirely; I might as well expect rejuvenescence. Ld. Chesterfield, Miscell. Works, iv. 275.

To REKINDLE. v. a. [re and kindle.] To set on fire again.

These disappearing, fixed stars, were actually extinguished, and would for ever continue so, if not rekindled, and new recruited with heat and light. Cheyne, Phil. Principles.

Rekindled at the royal charms,
Tumultuous love each beating bosom warms. Pope.

To RELAPSE. † v. n. [relaps, Fr. "fallen into an error which he had recanted, or sickness of which he had recovered,"

Cotgrave; relapsus, Lat.]

1. To slip back; to slide or fall back.

2. To fall back into vice or error.

The oftener he hath relapsed, the more significations he ought to give of the truth of his repentance. Bp. Taylor.

3. To fall back from a state of recovery to sickness.

He was not well cured, and would have relapsed. Wiseman.

RELAPSE. † n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Fall into vice or error once forsaken.

This would but lead me to a worse relapse
And heavier fall. Milton, P. L.

We see in too frequent instances the relapses of those, who, under the present smart, or the near apprehension of the divine displeasure, have resolved on a religious reformation. Rogers.

2. Regression from a state of recovery to sickness.

It was even as two physicians should take one sick body in hand; of which, the former would purge and keep under the body, the other pamper and strengthen it suddenly; whereof what is to be looked for, but a most dangerous relapse? Spenser.

3. Return to any state. The sense here is somewhat obscure.

Mark a bounding valour in our English;
That being dead like to the bullet's grazing,
Breaks out into a second course of mischief,
Killing in relapse of mortality. Shaks. Hen. V.

4. A person fallen into an error once forsaken.

Many other priests would defame me, and pursue me as a relapse. Exam. of W. Thorpe, in 1407, Fox's Acts.

RELAPSE.* n. s. [from relapse.] One who falls into vice or error once forsaken.

Speculative relapsers, that have, out of policy or guiltiness, abandoned a known and received truth.

Bp. Hall, St. Paul's Combat.

To RELATE.† v. a. [relater, Fr. Cotgrave; relatus, Lat.]

1. To tell; to recite.

Your wife and babes

Savagely slaughter'd; to relate the manner,

Were to add the death of you. Shaks. Macbeth.

Here I could frequent

With worship place by place, where he vouchsaf'd

Presence divine; and to my sons relate.

Milton, P. L.

The drama represents to view, what the poem only does relate. Dryden.

2. To vent by words. Unauthorized.

A man were better relate himself to a statute, than suffer his thoughts to pass in smother. Bacon.

3. To ally by kindred.

Avails thee not,

To whom related, or by whom begot;

A heap of dust alone remains. Pope.

4. To bring back; to restore: a Latinism.

Abate

Your zealous hast, till morrow next againe

Both light of heaven and strength of men relate.

Spenser, F. Q. iii. viii. 51.

To RELATE.† v. n. To have reference; to have respect; to have relation.

Certainly had men a deep and lively sense of that eternal misery that Christ has declared the portion of those who relate not to him, they would give their eyes no sleep, nor their thoughts any rest, till they had satisfied themselves of that sincerity that alone must stand between them and eternal wrath. South, Sermon xi. 153.

All negative or privative words relate to positive ideas, and signify their absence. Locke.

As other courts demanded the execution of persons dead in law, this gave the last orders relating to those dead in reason. Tatler.

RELA'TER.† n. s. [from relate; Fr. relateur.]

Teller; narrator; historian.

We find report a poor relater.

Bacon, and Fl. Isl. Princess.

We shall rather perform good offices unto truth, than any disservice unto their relaters.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

Her husband the relater she preferr'd

Before the angel. Milton, P. L.

The best English historian, when his style grows antiquated, will be only considered as a tedious relater of facts. Swift.

RELATION. n. s. [relation, Fr. from relate.]

1. Manner of belonging to any person or thing.

Under this stone lies virtue, youth,

Unblemish'd probity and truth;

Just unto all relations known,

A worthy patriot, pious son. Waller.

So far as service imports duty and subjection, all created beings bear the necessary relation of servants to God. South.

Our necessary relations to a family, oblige all to use their reasoning powers upon a thousand occasions. Watts.

Our intersection is made an exercise of love and care for those amongst whom our lot is fallen, or who belong to us in a nearer relation: it then becomes the greatest benefit to ourselves, and produces its best effects in our own hearts. Law.

2. Respect; reference; regard.

I have been importuned to make some observations on this art, in relation to its agreement with poetry. Dryden.

Relation consists in the consideration and comparing one idea with another. Locke.

3. Connection between one thing and another.

Of the eternal relations and fitnesses of things we know nothing; all that we know of truth and falsehood is, that our constitution determines us in some cases to believe, in others to disbelieve. Beattie.

4. Kindred; alliance of kin.

Relations dear, and all the charities

Of father, son, and brother, first were known. Milton, P. L.

Be kindred and relation laid aside,

And honour's cause by laws of honour try'd. Dryden.

Are we not to pity and supply the poor, though they have no relation to us? no relation? that cannot be: the gospel stiles them all our brethren; nay, they have a nearer relation to us, our fellow-members; and both these from their relation to our Saviour himself, who calls them his brethren. Smyth.

5. Person related by birth or marriage; kinsman; kinswoman.

A she-cousin, of a good family and small fortune, passed months among all her relations. Swift.

Dependants, friends, relations,

Savag'd by woe, forget the tender tie. Thomson.

6. Narrative; tale; account; narration; recital of facts.

In an historical relation, we use terms that are most proper. Burnet, Theory.

The author of a just fable, must please more than the writer of an historical relation. Dennis, Lett.

RELATIONSHIP.* n. s. [from relation.]

The state of being related to another either by kindred, or any artificial alliance. Mason.

Herein there is no objection to the succession of a relation of the half-blood; that is, where the relationship proceeds not from the same couple of ancestors (which constitutes a kinsman of the whole blood) but from a single ancestor only. Blackstone.

The only general private relation, now remaining to be discussed, is that of guardian and ward. — In examining this species of relationship, I shall first consider the different kinds of guardians. Blackstone.

RELATIVE. adj. [relativus, Lat. relativ, Fr.]

1. Having relation; respecting.

Not only simple ideas and substances, but modes are positive beings; though the parts of which they consist, are very often relative one to another. Locke.

2. Considered not absolutely, but as belonging to, or respecting something else.

Though capable it be not of inherent holiness, yet it is often relative. Holyday.

The ecclesiastical, as well as the civil governor, has cause to pursue the same methods of confirming himself; the grounds of government being founded upon the same bottom of nature in both, though the circumstances and relative considerations of the persons may differ. South.

Every thing sustains both an absolute and a relative capacity: an absolute, as it is such a thing, endued with such a nature; and a relative, as it is a part of the universe, and so stands in such relation to the whole. South.

Wholesome and unwholesome are relative, not real qualities. Arbutnot on Aliments.

3. Particular; positive; close in connection. Not in use.

I'll have grounds

More relative than this. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

RELATIVE. n. s.

1. Relation; kinsman.

'Tis an evil dutiffulness in friends and relatives, to suffer one to perish without reproof. Bp. Taylor.

Confining our care either to ourselves and relatives, Fell, Life of Hammond.

2. Pronoun answering to an antecedent.

Learn the right joining of substantives with adjectives, and the relative with the antecedent. Ascham, Schoolmaster.

3. Somewhat respecting something else.

When the mind so considers one thing, that it sets it by another, and carries its view from one to the other, this is relation and respect; and the denominations given to positive things, intimating that respect, are relatives. Locke.

RELATIVELY. adv. [from relative.] As it respects something else; not absolutely.

All those things, that seem so foul and disagreeable in nature, are not really so in themselves, but only relatively. More.

These being the greatest good or the greatest evil, either absolutely so in themselves, or relatively so to us; it is therefore good to be zealously affected for the one against the other. Spirit.

Consider the absolute affections of any being as it is in itself, before you consider it relatively, or survey the various relations in which it stands to other beings. Watts.

RELATIVENESS. n. s. [from relative.] The state of having relation.

To RELAX. v. a. [relaxo, Lat.]

1. To slacken; to make less tense.

The slaves, when the southern wind bloweth, are more relax. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Adam, amaz'd,

Astonied stood, and black, while horror chill

Ran through his veins, and all his joints relax'd. Milton, P. L.

2. To remit; to make less severe or rigorous.

The statute of mortmain was at several times relaxed by the legislature. Swift.

3. To make less attentive or laborious.

Nor praise relax, nor difficulty fright. Vanity of Hum. Wishes.

4. To ease; to divert: as, conversation relaxes the student.

5. To open; to loose.

It serv'd not to relax their serr'd files. Milton, P. L.

To RELAX. v. n. To be mild; to be remiss; to be not rigorous.

If in some regards she chose

To curb poor Paulo in too close;

In others she relax'd again,

And govern'd with a looser rein. Prior.

RELAX.* n. s. [from the verb.] Relaxation.

Labours and cares may have their relaxes and recreations. Foltham, Res. ii. 58.

RELAXABLE.* adj. [from relax.] That may be remitted.

Relaxable to him by some pardon. Barrow, vol. ii. S. 34.

RELAXATION. n. s. [relaxation, Fr. relaxatio, Lat.]

1. Diminution of tension; the act of loosening.

Cold sweats are many times mortal; for that they come by a relaxation or forsaking of the spirits. Bacon.

Many, who live healthy, in a dry air, fall into all the diseases that depend upon relaxation in a moist one. Arbutnot.

2. Cessation of restraint.

The sea is not higher than the land, as some imagined the sea stood upon a heap higher than the shore; and at the deluge relaxation being made, it overflowed the land. Burnet.

3. Remission; abatement of rigor.

They childishly granted, by common consent of their whole senate, under their town seal, a relaxation to one Bertelier, whom the eldership had excommunicated. Hooker.

The relaxation of the statute of mortmain is one of the reasons which gives the bishop terrible apprehensions of popery coming on us. Swift.

4. Remission of attention or application.
As God has not so devoted our bodies to toil, but that he allows us some recreation; so doubtless he indulges the same relaxation to our minds.

Gov. of the Tongue.

There would be no business in solitude, nor proper relaxations in business. Addison, Freeholder.

RELAXATIVE.* n. s. [relaxativus, Lat.] That which has power to relax.

You must use relaxatives. B. Jonson, Mag. Lady.
The Moresco festivals seem—as relaxatives of corporeal labours.

L. Addison, West Barbary, p. 217.

RELAX† n. s. [relax, Fr. Dr. Johnson. — Dr. Johnson defines this word, without any reference or example, merely “horses on the road to relieve others.” Anciently, it was a term of hunting, when hounds were set in readiness where it was supposed a deer would pass, and were cast off after the other hounds had passed by. See the Expos. of Bullokar, ed. 1656. So the word had been used by Chaucer; and so it continued to be till late in the seventeenth century. The word is from the old Fr. verb relayer, relaira, to succeed in the place of the weary. Hence Cotgrave: “Relayer coche et chevaux, to take new or fresh horses and coach.” Hunting-dogs kept in readiness at certain places to follow the deer, when the dogs which have been pursuing are wearied; horses on the road to relieve others in a journey.

A grete rout

Of hunters, and of foresters,
And many relaxes, and limers,
That hied ‘hem to the forest fast.

Chaucer, Dreame, ver. 362.

What relays set you? — None at all; we laid not in one fresh dog. B. Jonson, Sad Shepherd.

Their choice relays

Of horse and hounds.

Davenant, Gondibert, B. 1. C. 2.

RELAXABLE.* adj. [from release.] Capable of being released.

He discharged all monasteries of all kind of taxes, works, and imposts: excepting such as were for building of forts and bridges, being (as it seems the law was then) not relaxable.

Selden on Drayton's Polyolb. S. 11.

TO RELEA'SE, v. a. [relascher, relaxer, Fr.]

1. To set free from confinement or servitude.

Pilate said, Whom will ye that I release unto you? St. Matt. xxvii. 17.

You releas'd his courage, and set free
A valour fatal to the enemy. Dryden.

Why should a reasonable man put it into the power of fortune to make him miserable, when his ancestors have taken care to release him from her? Dryden.

2. To set free from pain.

3. To free from obligation, or penalty.

From death releas'd some days. Milton, P. L.

4. To quit; to let go.

Every creditor that lendeth ought unto his neighbour shall release it. Deut. xv. 2.

He had been base had he releas'd his right,
For such an empire none but kings should fight. Dryden.

5. To relax; to slacken. Not in use.

It may not seem hard, if in cases of necessity certain profitable ordinances sometimes be released, rather than all men always strictly bound to the general rigor thereof. Hooker.

RELEA'SE† n. s. [relasche, Fr. from the verb; relasches, old Fr. “abandonne de bien,” Lacombe.]

1. Dismission from confinement, servitude, or pain.

2. Relaxation of a penalty.

O fatal search, in which the labouring mind,
Still press'd with weight of woe, still hopes to find
A shadow of delights, a dream of peace,
From years of pain, one moment of release. Prior.

3. Remission of a claim.

The king made a great feast, and made a release to the provinces, and gave gifts. Esth. ii. 18.

The king would not have one penny abated of what had been granted by parliament; because it might encourage other countries to pray the like release or mitigation. Bacon.

4. Acquittance from a debt signed by the creditor.

5. A legal method of conveying land.

Releases are a discharge or conveyance of a man's right in lands or tenements to another that has some former estate in possession. Blackstone.

RELEA'SER.* n. s. [from release.] One who releases or sets free from servitude.

Of evils thou the chief and best

Releaser. Heywood's Hier. of Ang. (1635), p. 221.

Passamont 'i' the name of all the rest,
Bowing his body as became him best,
“Honour'd releaser,” said, “command what is “Feasible.” Gayton on D. Quixote, p. 125.

RELEA'SEMENT.* n. s. [from release.] Act of discharging; act of dismissing from servitude or pain.

Immediate rest and releasement from all evils.

Milton, Doct. and Disc. of Div. Prof.

If there be any releasement, any mitigation.

Milton, Animadv. Rem. Defence.

TO RELEGATE† v. a. [releguer, Fr. relego, Lat.] To banish; to exile.

Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

We have not relegated religion (like something we were ashamed to shew) to obscure municipalities or rustic villages. Burke.

RELEGATION. n. s. [relegation, Fr. relegatio, Latin.] Exile; judicial banishment.

According to the civil law, the extraordinary punishment of adultery was deportation or relegation. Ayliffe.

TO RELENT. v. n. [ralentir, Fr.]

1. To soften; to grow less rigid or hard; to give.

In some houses, sweetmeats will relent more than in others. Bacon.

In that soft season when descending showers
Call forth the greens, and wake the rising flowers;
When opening buds salute the welcome day,
And earth relenting feels the genial ray. Pope.

2. To melt; to grow moist.

Crows seem to call upon rain, which is but the comfort they seem to receive in the relenting of the air. Bacon.

Salt of tartar, brought to fusion, and placed in a cellar, will, in a few minutes, begin to relent, and have its surface softened by the imbibed moisture of the air, wherein, if it be left long, it will totally be dissolved. Boyle.

All nature mourns, the skies relent in showers,
Hush'd are the birds, and clos'd the drooping flowers;

If Delia smile, the flowers begin to spring,
The skies to brighten, and the birds to sing. Pope.

3. To grow less intense.

I have marked in you a relenting truly, and a slackening of the main career, you had so notably begun, and almost performed. Sidney.

The workmen let glass cool by degrees in such relentings of fire, as they call their nealing heats, lest it should shiver in pieces by a violent succeeding of air. Digby on Bodies.

4. To soften in temper; to grow tender; to feel compassion.

Can you behold

My tears, and not once relent? Shaks. Hen. VI.

I'll not be made a soft and dull-eyed fool,

To shake the head, relent, and sigh, and yield

To christian intercessors. Shaks. Merch. of Ven.

Undoubtedly he will relent, and turn

From his displeasure. Milton, P. L.

He sung, and held consented

To hear the poet's pray'r;

Stern Proserpine relented,

And gave him back the fair. Pope.

TO RELENT† v. a.

1. To slacken; to remit. Obsolete.

Apace he shot, and yet he fled apace,
And oftentimes he would relent his pace,
That him his foe more fiercely should pursue. Spenser.

2. To soften; to mollify.

Air hated earth, and water hated fire,

Till love relented their rebellious ire. Spenser.

3. To dissolve.

Thou art a pearl which nothing can relent,

But vinegar made of devotion's tears.

Davies, Wit's Pilgr. sign. C. 2.

RELENT.* part. adj. Dissolved.

The water is relent from frost.

Vulg. Hormanni.

RELENT.* n. s. Remission; stay.

She forward went

To seek her love where he was to be sought;

Ne rested, till she came without relent

Unto the land of Amazons, as she was bent. Spenser, F. Q. v. vii. 24.

RELENTLESS† adj. [from relent.]

1. Unpitiful; unmoved by kindness or tenderness.

She's obdurate,

Flinty, relentless. Beaumont and Fl. Lou. Progress.

For this the avenging power employs his darts;

Thus will persist; relentless in his ire,

Till the fair slave be render'd to her sire. Dryden.

Why should the weeping hero now

Relentless to their wishes prove? Prior.

2. In Milton, it perhaps signifies unremitted; intensely fixed upon disquieting objects. Dr. Johnson. — Rather, perhaps, as Mr. Upton also thought, not knowing where to stay; wandering, confused, perplexing thoughts.

Only in destroying I find ease

To my relentless thoughts. Milton, P. L.

RELEVANCY.* n. s. [from relevant.] State of being relevant.

The matter of the charge, which is there called the relevancy of the libel, was to be argued by lawyers, whether the matter, supposed it be proved, did amount to high treason or not.

Burnet, Hist. of his Own Time, temp. Q. Anne.

RELEVANT† adj. [French.] Relieving; lending aid; affording something to the purpose. This is not a modern word; though as Dr. Johnson has given no example, it might by many persons be supposed so.

Having shewed you that we differ about the meaning of Scripture, and are like to do so; certainly there ought to be a rule, or a judge, between us, to determine our differences, or at least to make our probations and arguments relevant.

K. Ch. Let. to A. Hend. Papers, &c. (1649), p. 55.

A positive regulation respecting marriage, relevant to a like regulation of the institution of the theocracy. Foswell on Antiq. (1782), p. 140.

RELEVATION. n. s. [relevatio, Lat.] A raising or lifting up.

RELI'ANCE. n. s. [from rely.] Trust; dependence; confidence; repose of mind: with on before the object of trust.

His days and times are past,
And my reliances on his fracted dates
Has smit my credit. Shakespeare, Timon.

That pellucid gelatinous substance, which he pitches upon with so great reliance and positiveness, is chiefly of animal constitution. Woodward.

He secured and increased his prosperity, by an humble behaviour towards God, and a dutiful reliance on his providence. Atterbury.

They afforded a sufficient conviction of this truth, and a firm reliance on the promises contained in it. Rogers.

Resignation in death, and reliance on the divine mercies, give comfort to the friends of the dying. Richardson, Clarissa.

Misfortunes often reduce us to a better reliance, than that we have been accustomed to fix upon. Richardson, Clarissa.

RELICK.† n. s. [reliquiae, Lat. relique, French.]

1. That which remains; that which is left after the loss or decay of the rest. It is generally used in the plural. Dr. Johnson.—Of the word in the singular number Dr. Johnson has not produced an instance; as such, however, it is of high authority and antiquity.

Up dreary dame of darkness queen,
Go gather up the reliques of thy race,
Or else go thou evenge. Spenser.

Shall we go see the reliques of this town? Shakespeare.

The fragments, scraps, the bits, and greasy reliques

Of her o'er-eaten faith are bound to Diomedes. Shakespeare.

Nor death itself can wholly wash their stains,
But long contracted filth ev'n in the soul remains;
The reliques of inveterate vice they wear,
And spots of sin. Dryden, Æn.

2. It is often taken for the body deserted by the soul.

What needs my Shakespeare for his honour'd bones,

The labour of an age in piled stones?

Or that his hollow'd reliques should be hid
Under a star-pointed pyramid?

Milton, Ep. on Shakespeare.

In peace, ye shades of our great grandsires, rest;
Eternal spring, and rising flowers adorn
The reliques of each venerable urn. Dryden.

Shall our reliques second birth receive?
Sleep we to wake, and only die to live? Prior.

Thy reliques, Rowe, to this fair shrine we trust,
And sacred place by Dryden's awful dust;
Beneath a rude and nameless stone he lies,
To which thy tomb shall guide enquiring eyes. Pope.

3. That which is kept in memory of another, with a kind of religious veneration.

And swear it were a relike of a saint.

Chaucer, Pard. Tale.

Cowls, hoods, and habits,—reliques, beads,—
The sport of winds. Milton, P. L.

This church is very rich in reliques; among the rest, they show a fragment of Thomas à Becket, as indeed there are very few treasures of reliques in Italy, that have not a tooth or a bone of this saint. Addison on Italy.

The pilgrim that journeys all day

To visit some far-distant shrine,

If he bear but a relick away,

Is happy, nor heard to repine. Shenstone, Pastoral Ballad.

RELICKLY. adv. [from relick.] In the manner of reliques. A word not used, nor elegantly formed.

Thrifty wench scrapes kitchen stuff,
And barreling the droppings and the snuff
Of wasting candles, which in thirty year
Relickly kept, perhaps buys wedding cheer. Donne.

RELICT. n. s. [relicite, old Fr. relicta, Lat.]

A widow; a wife desolate by the death of her husband.

If the fathers and husbands were of the household of faith, then certainly their relicts and children cannot be strangers in this household. Sprat, Serm.

Chaste relict!

Honour'd on earth, and worthy of the love

Of such a spouse, as now resides above. Garth.

RELIEF.† n. s. [relief, Fr.]

1. Alleviation of calamity; mitigation of pain or sorrow; not often found in the plural.

Charitable reliefs of the needy.

Sir E. Sandys, State of Relig. (ed. 1605), sign. P.

Thoughts in my unquiet breast are risen,

Tending to some relief of our extremes. Milton, P. L.

2. That which frees from pain or sorrow.

He found his designed present would be a relief, and then he thought it an impertinence to consider what it would be called besides.

Fell, Life of Hammond.

So should we make our death a glad relief

From future shame. Dryden, Kn. Tale.

Nor dar'd I to presume, that press'd with grief,

My light should urge you to this dire relief;

Stay, stay your steps. Dryden, Æn.

3. Dismission of a sentinel from his post.

For this relief, much thanks; 'tis bitter cold,

And I am sick at heart. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

4. [Relievum, law Lat.] Legal remedy of wrongs.

5. The prominence of a figure in stone or metal; the seeming prominence of a picture.

The figures of many ancient coins rise up in a much more beautiful relief than those on the modern; the face sinking by degrees in the several declensions of the empire, till about Constantine's time, it lies almost even with the surface of the medal. Addison on Medals.

Not with such majesty, such bold relief,
The form august of kings, or conquering chief,
E'er swell'd up on marble, as in verse have shi'd;
In polish'd verse, the manners and the mind. Pope.

6. The exposure of any thing, by the proximity of something different.

7. [Relief, old Fr. Lacombe. V. Coutume de Normandie.] In the feudal law, a payment made to the lord by the tenant coming into possession of an estate, held under him.

The fines on the succession to an estate, called in the feudal language reliefs, were not fixed to any certainty; and were therefore frequently made so excessive that they might rather be considered as redemptions, or new purchases, than acknowledgments of superiority and tenure. Burke, Abridg. of Engl. Hist. iii. 8.

8. [Relief, old Fr. "remnant of meat left at meals." Cotgrave.] Broken meat. Obsolete. Huloot.

Este of the relief that they left.

Lib. Fest. fol. 32.

RELIE'R.* n. s. [from rely.] One who places reliance.

My friends [are] no relievers on my fortune.

Beaumont and Fl. Tam. Tamed.

RELIE'VABLE. adj. [from relieve.] Capable of relief.

Neither can they, as to reparation, hold plea of things, wherein the party is relievable by common law. Hale.

To RELIEVE. v. a. [relevo, Lat. relever, Fr.]

1. To ease pain or sorrow.

2. To succour by assistance.

From thy growing store,
Now lend assistance, and relieve the poor;
A pittance of thy land will set him free. Dryden.

3. To set a sentinel at rest, by placing another on his post.

Honest soldier, who hath relieved you?

—Bernardo has my place, give you good night. Shakespeare.

Relieve the sentries that have watch'd all night. Dryden.

4. To right by law.

5. To recommend by the interposition of something dissimilar.

As the great lamp of day,

Through different regions, does his course pursue,

And leaves one world but to revive a new;

While, by a pleasing change, the queen of night

Relieves his lustre with a milder light. Stepney.

Since the inculcating precept upon precept will prove tiresome, the poet must not encumber his poem with too much business; but sometimes relieve the subject with a moral reflection. Addison on the Georgicks.

6. To support; to assist; to recommend to attention.

Parallels, or like relations, alternately relieve each other; when neither will pass asunder, yet are they pleasurable together. Brown, Vulg. Err.

RELIE'VER. n. s. [from relieve.] One that relieves.

He is the protector of his weakness, and the reliever of his wants. Rogers, Serm.

A convex mirror makes the objects in the middle come out from the superficies: the painter must do so in respect of the lights and shadows of his figures, to give them more relievo and more strength. Dryden, Dufresnay.

To RELIGH'T. v. a. [re and light.] To light anew.

His power can heal me, and relight my eye. Pope.

RELIGION.† n. s. [religion, Fr. religio, Lat.]

1. Virtue, as founded upon reverence of God, and expectation of future rewards and punishments.

He that is void of fear, may soon be just,

And no religion binds men to be traitors. B. Jonson.

One spake much of right and wrong,
Of justice, of religion, truth, and peace,
And judgement from above. Milton, P. L.

By religion, I mean that general habit of reverence towards the divine nature, whereby we are enabled and inclined to worship and serve God after such a manner as we conceive most agreeable to his will, so as to procure his favour and blessing. Wilkins.

If we consider it as directed against God, it is a breach of religion; if as to men, it is an offence against morality. South.

By her inform'd, we best religion learn,
Its glorious object by her aid discern. Blackmore.

Religion or virtue, in a large sense, includes duty to God and our neighbour; but in a proper sense, virtue signifies duty towards men, and religion duty to God. Watts.

I never once in my life considered, whether I was living as the laws of religion direct, or whether my way of life was such, as would procure me the mercy of God at this hour. Law.

2. A system of divine faith and worship as opposite to others.

The christian religion, rightly understood, is the deepest and choicest piece of philosophy that is.

More.
The doctrine of the gospel proposes to men such glorious rewards and such terrible punishments as no religion ever did, and gives us far greater assurance of their reality and certainty than ever the world had.

3. Religious rites : in the plural.

The Britons were taken up with religions, more than feats of arms. Milton, Hist. of Eng. B. 3.
Gay religions full of pomp and gold.

Milton, P. L.

RELIGIONARY.* adj. [from religion.]
Relating to religion; pious.

His [bishop Sanderson's] religious professions in his last will and testament, contain something like prophetic matter in his mentioning his belief of the happy future state of our church in a conditional manner. Bp. Barlow, Rem, p. 638.

RELIGIONIST.† n. s. [from religion.] A bigot to any religious persuasion.

The boldest religionists, and mock-prophets, are very full of heat and spirits ; and have their imagination too often infected with the fumes of those lower parts, the full sense and pleasure whereof they prefer before all the subtle delights of reason and generous contemplation.

More, Conj. Cabb. (1653), p. 291.

The lawfulness of taking oaths may be revealed to the quakers, who then will stand upon as good a foot for preferment as any other subject ; under such a motley administration, what pullings and hawlings, what a zeal and bias there will be in each religionist to advance his own tribe, and depress the others !

Swift.

RELIGIOUS.† adj. [religios, old French ; religieux, modern ; religiosus, Lat.]

1. Pious ; disposed to the duties of religion.

It is a matter of sound consequence, that all duties are by so much the better performed, by how much the men are more religious, from whose habits the same proceed.

Hooker.

When holy and devout religious christians are at their beads, 'tis hard to draw them from thence ;

So sweet is zealous contemplation !

Shakespeare.

Their lives

Religious titled them the sons of God.

Milton, P. L.

2. Teaching religion.

He God doth late and early pray,
More of his grace than gifts to lend ;
And entertains the harmless day
With a religious book or friend.

Wotton.

3. Among the Romanists, bound by the vows of poverty, chastity, and obedience.

Certain fryars and religious men were moved with some zeal, to draw the people to the christian faith.

Abbot.

France has vast numbers of ecclesiasticks, secular and religious.

Addison, State of the War.

4. Exact ; strict.

5. Appropriated to strict observance of holy duties.

Her family has the same regulation as a religious house, and all its orders tend to the support of a constant regular devotion.

Lavo.

RELIGIOUS.* n. s. One, among the Romanists, bound by vows.

What the Protestants call a fanatic, is in the Roman church a religious of such an order.

Addison.

RELIGIOUSLY. adv. [from religious.]

1. Piously ; with obedience to the dictates of religion.

For, who will have his work his wished end to win,

Let him with hearty pray'r religiously begin.

Drayton.

2. According to the rites of religion.

These are their brethren, whom you Goths behold

Alive and dead, and for their brethren slain

Religiously they ask a sacrifice. Titus Andronicus.

3. Reverently ; with veneration.

Dost thou in all thy addresses to him, come into his presence with reverence, kneeling and religiously bowing thyself before him ?

Dryden, Rules to Devotion.

4. Exactly ; with strict observance.

The privileges, justly due to the members of the two houses and their attendants, are religiously to be maintained.

Bacon.

RELIGIOUSNESS.† n. s. [from religious.]

The quality or state of being religious.

As for princes and great persons, it is a rare thing, and surely an happy, wheresoever it falleth out of them, that any of them hath any extraordinary store of religiousness of any sort.

Sir E. Sandys, State of Rel. (ed. 1605), P. 4.

I have always looked upon this disputative religiousness, as no better than a new-fashioned knight-errantry. Goodman, Wint. Ev. Conf. P. I.

To RELINQUISH. v. a. [relinquo, Lat.]

1. To forsake ; to abandon ; to leave ; to desert.

The habitation there was utterly relinquished.

Abbot.

The English colonies grew poor and weak, though the English lords grew rich and mighty ; for they placed Irish tenants upon the lands relinquished by the English.

Davies.

2. To quit ; to release ; to give up.

The ground of God's sole property in any thing is, the return of it made by man to God ; by which act he relinquishes and delivers back to God all his right to the use of that thing, which before had been freely granted him by God. South, Serm.

3. To forbear ; to depart from.

In case it may be proved, that amongst the number of rites and orders common unto both, there are particulars, the use whereof is utterly unlawful, in regard of some special bad and noisome quality ; there is no doubt but we ought to relinquish such rites and orders, what freedom soever we have to retain the other still.

Hooker.

RELINQUISHER.* n. s. [from relinquish.]

One who relinquishes.

Sherwood.

RELINQUISHMENT. n. s. [from relinquish.]

The act of forsaking.

Government or ceremonies, or whatsoever it be, which is popish, away with it : this is the thing they require in us, the utter relinquishment of all things popish.

Hooker.

That natural tenderness of conscience, which must first create in the soul a sense of sin, and from thence produce a sorrow for it, and at length cause a relinquishment of it, is took away by a customary repeated course of sinning.

South.

RELINQUARY.* n. s. [reliqueire, Fr.] A casket in which relics are kept.

I stopped at St. Denis, saw all the beautiful monuments of the kings of France ; — rubies and emeralds, as big as small eggs ; crucifixes and vows, crowns and reliquaries, of inestimable value.

Gray, Lett. to West, (1739.)

RELISH. n. s. [from relecher, Fr. to lick again. Minsheu, and Skinner.]

1. Taste ; the effect of any thing on the palate : it is commonly used of a pleasing taste.

Under sharp, sweet and sour, are abundance of immediate peculiar relishes or tastes, which experienced palates can easily discern.

Boyle on Colours.

These two bodies, whose vapours are so pungent, spring from saltpetre, which betrays upon the tongue no heat nor corrosiveness, but coldness mixed with a somewhat languid relish retaining to bitterness.

Boyle.

Much pleasure we have lost, while we abstain'd From this delightful fruit, nor known till now True relish, tasting.

Milton, P. L.

Could we suppose their relishes as different there as here, yet the manna in heaven suits every palate.

Locke.

Sweet, bitter, sour, harsh, and salt are all the epithets we have to denominate that numberless variety of relishes to be found distinct in the different parts of the same plant.

Locke.

2. Taste ; small quantity just perceptible.

The king-becoming graces ;

As justice, verity, temp'rance, stableness, Devotion, patience, courage, fortitude ; I have no relish of them.

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

3. Liking ; delight in any thing.

We have such a relish for faction, as to have lost that of wit.

Addison, Freeholder.

Good men after death are distributed among these several islands with pleasures of different kinds, suitable to the relishes and perfections of those settled in them.

Addison, Spect.

4. Sense ; power of perceiving excellently ; taste. Addison uses it both with of and for before the thing.

A man, who has any relish for fine writing, discovers new beauties, or receives stronger impressions from the masterly strokes of a great author every time he peruses him.

Addison.

Some hidden seeds of goodness and knowledge give him a relish of such reflections, as improve the mind, and make the heart better.

Addison, Spect.

The pleasure of the proprietor, to whom things become familiar, depends, in a great measure, upon the relish of the spectator.

Seeds, Serm.

5. Delight given by any thing ; the power by which pleasure is given.

Expectation whirls me round ; The imaginary relish is so sweet, That it enchants my sense.

Shaks. Tr. and Cress.

When liberty is gone, Life grows insipid, and loses its relish.

Addison, Cato.

6. Cast ; manner.

It preserves some relish of old writing.

Pope.

To RELISH.† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To give a taste to any thing.

On smacking lard they dine ;

A savoury bit that serv'd to relish wine.

Dryden.

2. To taste ; to have a liking.

I love the people ;

Though it do well, I do not relish well

Their loud applause.

Shakespeare.

How will dissenting brethren relish it ?

What will malignants say ?

Hudibras.

Men of nice palates would not relish Aristotle, as drest up by the schoolmen.

Baker, Reft. on Learning.

He knows how to prize his advantages, and relish the honours which he enjoys.

Atterbury.

You are to nourish your spirit with pious readings, and holy meditations, with watchings, fastings, and prayers, that you may taste, and relish, and desire that eternal state, which is to begin when this life ends.

Lavo.

3. To taste of ; to give the cast or manner of.

'Tis order'd well, and relisheth the soldier.

Beaumont and Fl. Beggar's Bush.

Woodward.

RELISHABLE. adj. [from relish.] Gustable; having a taste.

To RELIVE.† v. n. [re and live.] To revive; to live anew.

In March the sunneth his finished course, and the seasonable spring refresheth the earth; and the pleasure thereof, being buried in the sadness of the dead winter now worse away, reliveth. Argum. to Spenser's Shepherd's Calendar.

Will you deliver

How this dead queen relives? Shaks. Pericles.

To RELIVE.† v. a. To bring back to life; to revive. Not in use, nor proper; though Spenser has often thus employed it.

Which whenas Una saw, through every vaine The crudled cold ran for her well of life, As in a sowne; but, soone reliv'd againe, Out of his hand she snatcht the cursed knife.

Spenser, F. Q.

To RELOVE. v. a. [re and love.] To love in return. Not used.

To own for him so familiar and levelling an affection as love, much more to expect to be relived by him, were not the least saucy presumption man could be guilty of, did not his own commandments make it a duty.

Boyle.

RELUCTANT.† adj. [reluctans, Lat.]

1. Shining; eminent.

That college wherein piety and beneficence were relucant in despite of jealousies.

Hackel's Life of Alp. Williams, (1693), p. 46.

The prisoner Samson here I seek.

— His manacles remark him, there he sits.

Milton, S. A.

REMARKABLE. adj. [remarquable, Fr.]
Observable; worthy of note.

So did Orpheus plainly teach, that the world had beginning in time, from the will of the most high God, whose remarkable words are thus converted. Raleigh.

'Tis remarkable, that they Talk most, who have the least to say. Prior.

What we obtain by conversation soon vanishes, unless we note down what remarkables we have found. Watts.

REMARKABLENESS. n. s. [from remarkable.] Observableness; worthiness of observation.

They signify the remarkableness of this punishment of the Jews, as signal revenge from the crucified Christ. Hammond.

REMARKABLY. adv. [from remarkable.]
Observably; in a manner worthy of observation.

Chiefly assur'd,

Remarkably so late, of thy so true,

So faithful love. Milton, P. L.

Such parts of these writings, as may be remarkably stupid, should become subjects of an occasional criticism. Watts.

REMARKER. n. s. [remarqueur, Fr.] Observer; one that remarks.

If the remarker would but once try to outshine the author by writing a better book on the same subject, he would soon be convinced of his own insufficiency. Watts.

To REMARRY.* v. a. [re and marry.] To marry again; to marry a second time.

Hoping that when divine goodness shall restore our land to her former peace and tranquillity, and when the king shall be remarried to the state, (to which there is a probable and promising forwardness, if our sins in this land forbid not the banes,) all things will be settled and modeled in an excellent method and polittique uniformity.

Standard of Equality, sect. 9.

That queen being remarried shortly after to the duke of Suffolk, and returning into England,
Anna Bullen was left in France.

Tindal, Rapin's Hist. of Eng.

To REMBLE.* v. a. [perhaps from pyman,

Sax.] To move or remove. Lincolnshire. Grose.

REMEDABLE.† adj. [from remedy.] Capable of remedy.

Not remediable by courts of equity.

Bacon to the King on Sutton's Estate.

REMEDIAL.* adj. [from remedy.] Affording remedy.

Every good political institution must have a preventive operation as well as a remedial.

Burke, Thoughts on the Disc. (1770.)

REMEDIAL. adj. [from remedy.] Medicinal; affording a remedy. Not in use.

All you, unpublish'd virtues of the earth,
Spring with my tears; be aidant and remediate
In the good man's distress. Shaks. K. Lear.

REMEDIBLES.† adj. [from remedy.] "On the authorities of Spenser and Milton Dr. Johnson has placed the accent on the second syllable, remédibles; but it is irregular; for every monosyllabic termination, added to a word accented on the antepenult, throws the accent to the fourth syllable from the end." Nares, Elem. of Orthoepey, pp. 187. 360.] Not admitting remedy; irreparable; cure-less; incurable.

Sad Æsculapius

Imprison'd was in chains remediless. Spenser.

The war, grounded upon this general remediless necessity, may be termed the general, the remediless, or the necessary war. Raleigh, Ess.

We, by rightful doom remediless,
Were lost in death, till he, that dwelt above
High-thron'd in secret bliss, for us frail dust Emptied his glory. Milton, Ode.

Flatter him it may, as those are good at flattering, who are good for nothing else; but in the mean time, the poor man is left under a remediless delusion. South.

REMEDILESSNESS. n. s. [from remediless.]
Incurableness.

REMEDY. n. s. [remedium, Lat. remede,
Fr.]

1. A medicine by which any illness is cured.

The difference between poisons and remedies is easily known by their effects; and common reason soon distinguishes between virtue and vice. Swift.

2. Cure of any uneasiness.

Here hope began to dawn; resolv'd to try,
She fix'd on this her utmost remedy. Dryden.
O how short my interval of woe!

Our griefs how swift, our remedies how slow! Prior.

3. That which counteracts any evil: with to, for, or against; for is most used.

What may be remedy or cure
To evils, which our own disdeeds have wrought.

Milton, P. L.

Civil government is the proper remedy for the inconveniences of the state of nature. Locke.

Attempts have been made for some remedy against this evil. Swift.

4. Reparation; means of repairing any hurt.

Things, without all remedy,
Should be without regard. Shaks. Macbeth.
In the death of a man there is no remedy.

Wisd. ii. 1.

To REMEDY. v. a. [remedier, Fr.]

1. To cure; to heal.

Sorry we are, that any good and godly mind should be grieved with that which is done; but to remedy their grief, lieth not so much in us as in themselves. Hooker.

2. To repair or remove mischief.

To REMEMBER. v. a. [remembrer, old
Fr. remembrare, Ital.]

1. To hear in mind any thing; not to forget.

Remember not against us former iniquities.

Ps. lxxix. 8.

Remember thee!

Ay, thou poor ghost, while memory holds a place
In this distracted brain. Remember thee! Shaks.

2. To recollect; to call to mind.

He having once seen and remembered me, even from the beginning began to be in the riward.

Sidney.

We are said to remember any thing, when the idea of it arises in the mind with a consciousness that we have had this idea before.

Watts on the Mind.

3. To keep in mind; to have present to the attention.

*Remember what I warn thee, shun to taste;
And shun the bitter consequence. Milton, P. L.*

This is to be remembered, that it is not possible now to keep a young gentleman from vice by a total ignorance of it; unless you will all his life mew him up. Locke.

4. To bear in mind, with intent of reward or punishment.

Cry unto God; for you shall be remembered of him. Barrow.

He brings them back,
Remembering mercy and his covenant sworn.

Milton, P. L.

5. To mention; not to omit.

A citation ought to be certain, in respect of the person cited; for, if such certainty be therein omitted, such citation is invalid, as in many cases hereafter to be remembered. Ayliffe.

6. To put in mind; to force to recollect; to remind.

His hand and leg commanding without threatning, and rather remembering than chastising.

Sidney.

Joy, being altogether wanting,
It doth remember me the more of sorrow. Shaks.

It grieves my heart to be remember'd thus
By any one, of one so glorious. Chapman.

These petitions, and the answer of the common council of London, were ample materials for a conference with the lords, who might be thereby remembered of their duty. Clarendon.

I would only remember them in love and prevention, with the doctrine of the Jews, and the example of the Grecians. Holyday.

7. To preserve from being forgotten.

Let them have their wages duly paid,
And something over, to remember me. Shaks.

- REMEMBERER. n. s. [from remember.]
One who remembers.

A brave master to servants, and a rememberer of the least good office; for his flock he transplanted most of them into plentiful soils. Wotton.

- REMEMBRANCE.† n. s. [remembrance, old Fr.]

1. Retention in memory; memory.

Though Cloten then but young, time has not wore him

From my remembrance. Shakspeare, Cymbeline.

Had memory been lost with innocence,
We had not known the sentence nor th' offence;
'Twas his chief punishment to keep in store
The sad remembrance what he was before. Denham.

Sharp remembrance on the English part,
And shame of being match'd by such a foe,
Rouse conscious virtue up in every heart.

Dryden.

This ever grateful in remembrance bear,
To me thou ow'st, to me the vital air.

Pope, Odys.

2. Recollection; revival of any idea; reminiscence.

I hate thy beams,

That bring to my remembrance from what state
I fell; how glorious once above thy sphere.

Milton, P. L.

Remembrance is when the same idea recurs, without the operation of the like object on the external sensory. Locke.

3. Honourable memory. Out of use.

Rosemary and rue keep
Seeming and savour all the winter long;
Grace and remembrance be unto you both. Shaks.

4. Transmission of a fact from one to another.

Titan,

Among the heavens, th' immortal fact display'd,
Lest the remembrance of his grief should fail,
And in the constellations wrote his tale. Addison.

5. Account preserved.

Those proceedings and remembrances are in the Tower, beginning with the twentieth year of Edward I. Hale.

6. Memorial.

But in remembrance of so brave a deed,
A tomb and funeral honours I decreed. Dryden.

7. A token by which any one is kept in the memory.

I have remembrances of yours,
That I have long'd to redeliver. Shaks. Hamlet.

Keep this remembrance for thy Julia's sake. Shakspeare.

8. Notice of something absent.

Let your remembrance still apply to Banquo;
Present him eminence, both with eye and tongue. Shakspeare.

9. Power of remembering.

Thence I have heard relating what was done,
Ere my remembrance. Milton, P. L.

10. Admonition.

You did commit me:
For which, I do commit unto your hand
The unstained sword that you have us'd to bear;
With this remembrance, — That you use the same
With the like bold, just, and impartial spirit,
As you have done 'gainst me. Shakspeare, Hen. IV. P. II.

11. Memorandum; a note to help memory.

Let the understanding reader take with him but three or four short remembrances: — the memorandaums I would commend to him are these.

Chillingworth, Rel. of Protest. ch. 5. § 29.

- REMEMBRANCER. n. s. [from remembrance.]

1. One that reminds; one that puts in mind.

A sly knave, the agent for his master,
And the remembrancer of her, to hold
The hand fast to her lord. Shaks. Cymbeline.

God is present in the consciences of good and bad; he is there a remembrancer to call our actions to mind, and a witness to bring them to judgement. Bp. Taylor.

Would I were in my grave;
For, living here, you're but my curs'd remem-brancers: Olway, Venice Preserved.

2. An officer of the exchequer.

All are digested into books, and sent to the remembrancer of the exchequer, that he make processes upon them. Bacon.

- TO REMEMORATE.* v. a. [rememoratus, Lat.] To call to remembrance;

to remember.
Let our knowledge come how it will, either by learning anew, or recording what the soul knew before; she having need, howsoever it be, of the ministry of the senses; and seeing it is almost necessary to pass through the same means from not knowing to knowledge; we shall ever find the like difficulties, whether we rememorate or learne anew. Bryskett, Disc. of Civil Life, (1606), p. 128.

- REMEMORATION.* n. s. [rememoratio, Lat.]
Remembrance.

Helps of memory, of affection, of rememoratio.
Mountagu, App. to Cas. (1625), p. 255.

How apt we are to forget those duties, wherewith we are only encharg'd in common, without the design of a particular rememoratio.

Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 298.

- TO REMERCY. v. a. [remercier, Fr.] To thank. Obsolete.

Off'ring his service and his dearest life
For her defence, against that carle to fight; —
She him remerci'd, as the patron of her life.

Spenser.

- TO REMIGRATE. v. n. [remigro, Lat.]
To remove back again.

Some other ways he proposes to divest some bodies of their borrowed shapes, and make them remigrate to their first simplicity. Boyle.

- REMIGRATION. n. s. [from remigrate.] Removal back again.

The Scots, transplanted hither, became acquainted with our customs, which, by occasional remigrations, became diffused in Scotland. Hale.

- TO REMIND. v. a. [re and mind.] To put in mind; to force to remember.

When age itself, which will not be defied, shall begin to arrest, seize, and remind us of our mortality by pains and dullness of senses; yet then the pleasure of the mind shall be in its full vigour.

South, Serm.

The brazen figure of the consul, with the ring on his finger, reminded me of Juvenal's majoris pondera gemmæ. Addison on Italy.

- REMINDER.* n. s. [from remind.] One who reminds; an admonisher. Johnson
in V. PROMPTER.

- REMINISCENCE.† n. s. [reminiscence,
REMINISCENCY. } Fr. Cotgrave; reminiscens, Lat.] Recollection; recovery of ideas.

I cast about for all circumstances that may revive my memory or reminiscence.

Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

They have much troubled themselves and confounded others, in finding out another receptacle of the intelligible species, which they call remi-niscency or recoordation. Smith on Old Age, p. 46.

For the other part of memory, called remnis-cence, which is the retrieving of a thing at present forgot, or but confusedly remembered, by setting the mind to ransack every little cell of the brain;
while it is thus busied, how accidentally does the thing sought for offer itself to the mind! South.

- REMINISCENTIAL. adj. [from reminiscence.] Relating to reminiscence.

Would truth dispense, we could be content with Plato, that knowledge were but remembrance, that intellectual acquisition were but reminiscential evocation. Brown.

- REMISSE. adj. [remis, Fr. remissus, Lat.]
1. Not vigorous; slack.

The water deserts the corpuscles, unless it flow with a precipitate motion; for then it hurries them out along with it, till its motion becomes more languid and remiss. Woodward.

2. Not careful; slothful.

Mad ire and wrathful fury makes me weep,
That thus we die, while remiss traitors sleep.

Shakspeare.

If when by God's grace we have conquered the first difficulties of religion, we grow careless and remiss, and neglect our guard, God's spirit will not always strive with us. Tillotson.

Your candour in pardoning my errors, may make me more remiss in correcting them. Dryden.

3. Not intense.

These nervous, bold, those languid and remiss;
Here cold salutes, but there a lover's kiss.

Roscommon.

REMISSIBLE.† adj. [remissible, Fr.] That may be forgiven or remitted.
Punishments remissible or expiable.

REMISSION.† n. s. [remission, Fr. remissio, Lat.]

1. Abatement; relaxation; moderation.

Error, misclaim, and forgetfulness do now and then become suitors for some remission of extreme rigour. Bacon.

2. Cessation of intenseness.

In September and October these diseases do not abate and remit in proportion to the remission of the sun's heat. Woodward.

This difference of intention and remission of the mind in thinking, every one has experimented in himself. Locke.

3. In physick, remission is when a distemper abates, but does not go off quite before it returns again.

4. Release; abatement of right or claim.
Not only an expedition, but the remission of a duty or tax, were transmitted to posterity after this manner. Addison.

Another ground of the bishop's fears is the remission of the first fruits and tithes. Swift.

5. Forgiveness; pardon.

My penance is to call Lucetta back,
And ask remission for my folly past. Shakespeare.
That plea
With God or man will gain thee no remission.
Milton, S. A.

Many believe the article of remission of sins, but they believe it without the condition of repentance or the fruits of holy life.
Bp. Taylor, Rule of Living Holy.

6. Act of sending back.

The fate of her [Lot's wife] for her looking back from behind him, her being thereupon changed into a statue of metallic salt, gave rise to the poets' fiction of the loss of Eurydice, and her remission into hell, for her husband's turning to look upon her. Stachhouse, Hist. of the Bib. B. 3. ch. 1.

REMISSIVE.* adj. [remissus, Lat.] Forgiving; pardoning.

O Lord, of Thy abounding love,
To my offence remissive be.

Wither, Transl. of the Psalms, (1632), p. 96.
I treat of a most merciful king, who was most remissive of wrongs.

Hacket's Life of Abp. Williams, p. 226.

REMISSLY. adv. [from remiss.]

1. Carelessly; negligently; without close attention.

How should it then be in our power to do it coldly or remissly? so that our desires being natural, is also in that degree of earnestness whereunto nothing can be added. Hooker.

2. Not vigorously; not with ardour or eagerness; slackly.

There was not an equal concurrence in the prosecution of this matter among the bishops; some of them proceeding more remissly in it. Clarendon.

REMISSNESS. n. s. [from remiss.] Carelessness; negligence; coldness; want of ardour; inattention.

Future evils,
Or new, or by remissness new conceiv'd,
Are now to have no successive degrees. Shaks.
No great offenders 'scape their dooms;
Small praise for lenity and remissness comes.

Denham.
Jack, through the remissness of constables, has always found means to escape. Arbutnot, J. Bull.
The great concern of God for our salvation, is so far from an argument of remissness in us, that it ought to excite our utmost care. Rogers, Sermon.

To REMIT. v. a. [remitto, Lat.]

1. To relax; to make less intense.

So willingly doth God remit his ire.

Milton, P. L.
Our supreme foe in time may much remit
His anger; and perhaps thus far remov'd,
Not mind us not offending, satisfy'd
With what is punish'd. Milton, P. L.

2. To forgive a punishment.

With suppliant prayers their powers appease;
The soft Napaean race will soon repent
Their anger, and remit the punishment. Dryden.
The magistrate can often, where the publick good demands not the execution of the law, remit the punishment of criminal offences by his own authority, but yet cannot remit the satisfaction due to any private man. Locke.

3. [Remettre, Fr.] To pardon a fault.

At my lovely Tamora's intreats,
I do remit these young men's heinous faults.
Titus And.
Whose soever sins ye remit, they are remitted unto them; and whose soever sins ye retain, they are retained. St. John, xx. 23.

4. To give up; to resign.

In grievous and inhuman crimes, offenders should be remitted to their prince to be punished in the place where they have offended. Hayward.
Th' Egyptian crown I to your hands remit.
And, with it, take his heart who offers it. Dryden.
Heaven thinks fit
Thee to thy former fury to remit.
Dryden, Tyr. Love.

5. [Remettre, Fr.] To defer; to refer.

The bishop had certain proud instructions in the front, though there were a piliat clause at the foot, that remitted all to the bishop's discretion.
Bacon, Hen. VII.
I remit me to themselves, and challenge their natural ingenuity to say, whether they have not sometimes such shiverings within them?
Gov. of the Tongue.

6. To put again in custody.

This bold return with seeming patience heard,
The pris'n'r was remitted to the guard. Dryden.

7. To send money to a distant place.

They obliged themselves to remit after the rate of twelve hundred thousand pounds sterling per annum, divided into so many monthly payments.
Addison on Italy.

2. Sum sent to a distant place.
A compact among private persons furnished out the several remittances. Addison on Italy.

REMITTER.† n. s. [remettre, Fr.]

1. One who forgives or pardons.
Not properly pardoners, forgivers, or remitters of sins, as though the sentence in heaven depended upon the sentence in earth.
Pulke against Allen, (1580), p. 143

2. One who remits, or procures the conveyance and payment of money.

3. [In common law.] A restitution of one that hath two titles to lands or tenements, and is seized of them by his latter title, under his title that is more ancient, in case where the latter is defective. Cowel.

You said, if I return'd next size in Lent,
I should be in remitt of your grace;
In th' interim my letters should take place
Of affidavits. Donne.

REMNANT.† n. s. [corrupted from remanent. Dr. Johnson.—Gower follows the old French form: "The remanent of folke about." Conf. Am. B. 3.] Residue; that which is left; that which remains.

Poor key-cold figure of a holy king!
Thou bloodless remnant of that royal blood,
Be't lawful that I invoke thy ghost?
Shakespeare, Rich. III.
Bear me hence
From forth the noise and rumour of the field,
Where I may think the remnant of my thoughts.
Shakespeare.

About his shelves
Remnants of packthread and old cakes of roses
Were thinly scatter'd. Shakespeare, Rom. and Jul.
I was entreated to get them some respite and breathing by a cessation, without which they saw no probability to preserve the remnant that had yet escaped. King Charles.

It seems that the remnants of the generation of men were in such a delicate saved. Bacon.
The remnant of my tale is of a length
To tire your patience. Dryden, Km. Tale.
A feeble army and an empty senate,
Remnants of mighty battles fought in vain.
Addison.

See the poor remnants of these slighted hairs!
My hands shall rend what e'en thy rapine spares.
Pope!

The frequent use of the latter was a remnant of popery, which never admitted scripture in the vulgar tongue. Swift.

REMNANT. adj. [corruptly formed from remanent.] Remaining; yet left.

It did her feel
No future pain for me; but instant wed
A lover more proportion'd to her bed;
And quiet dedicate her remnant life
To the just duties of an humble wife. Prior.

To REMODEL. v. a. [re and model.] To model anew.

There is perhaps nothing improbable in the supposition, that the lamentations, poured forth on the defeat and death of Josiah, may have been re-modelled and adapted by the author to the heavier state of distress and calamity, when Jerusalem was taken, and her kings and her princes were captive among the Gentiles. Lam. ii. 9.

Churton, Note to a Sermon, pref. to Dr. Townson's Works.
REMOULTEN. part. [from remelt.] Melted again.

It were good to try in glass works, whether the crude materials, mingled with glass already made and remoltten, do not facilitate the making of glass with less heat. Bacon.

REMONSTRANT.* n. s. [remonstrans, Lat.] One that joins in a remonstrance.

We had not thought that legion could have furnished the remonstrant with so many brethren.
Milton, Anim. Rem. Def. § 1.

REMONSTRANT.* adj. [remonstrans, Lat.] Expostulatory; containing strong reasons. Ash.

REMONSTRANCE. n. s. [remonstrance, Fr. from remonstrare.]

1. Show; discovery. Not in use.

'You may marvel, why I would not rather
Make rash remonstrance of my hidden power,
Than let him be so lost.

Shakespeare, Meas. for Meas.

2. Strong representation.

The same God, which revealeth it to them, would also give them power of confirming it unto others, either with miraculous operation, or with strong and invincible remonstrance of sound reason.

Hooker.

A large family of daughters have drawn up a remonstrance, in which they set forth, that their father, having refused to take in the Spectator, they offered to 'bate him the article of bread and butter in the tea-table.

Addison, Spect.

Importunate passions surround the man, and will not suffer him to attend to the remonstrances of justice.

Rogers.

To REMONSTRATE.† v. n. [remonstro,
Lat. remonstrer, Fr.] To make a strong representation; to show reasons on any side in strong terms.

I remember with pleasure, and remonstrate with gratitude, that your lordship made me known to him, [Bp. Sanderson.]

Walton, Ded. of Life of Sanderson.

To REMONSTRATE.† v. a. To shew by a
strong representation.

De L'Isle, alarmed at the cruel purport of this unexpected visit, remonstrated to his brother-officer the undesigning and good-natured warmth of his friend.

Hist. of Duelling, (1770), p. 145.

REMONSTRATION.† n. s. [remonstration, old Fr.] Act of remonstrating.

REMONSTRATOR.† n. s. [from remonstrare.]
One who remonstrates.

Orders were sent down for clapping up three of the remonstrators.

Burnet, Hist. of his Own Time, K. Ch. II.

RE'MORA.† n. s. [Latin.]

1. A let or obstacle.

Ambition, malice, adultery, covetousness, and the like, have been great remoras and impediments in matters of religion.

Bp. Andrews, Expos. of the Decalogue, Intr. ch. 1.

What mighty and invisible remora is this in matrimony!

Milton, Doct. and Disc. of Div. i. 8.

We had his promise to stay for us; but the remoras and disappointments we met with in the road, had so put us backward in our journey, that, fearing to be too late at Jerusalem, he set out from Sidon the day before our arrival there.

Maunderell, Trav. p. 46.

2. A fish or a kind of worm that sticks to ships, and retards their passage through the water. ["Remora ex natura tor-pedinis est; effundit e corpore suo mu-morem quandam viscosissimum et frigi-dissimum, qui eam aquam, quæ et circa gubernaculum navis vehit, congelat, ut ad motum reddatur inhabilis."] Fracastorius: Qualities I leave to better inquiry. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 385.]

Of fishes you shall find in arms the whale, herring, roach, and remora. Peacham on Blazoning.

The remora is about three quarters of a yard long; his body before three inches and a half over, thence tapering to the tail end; his mouth two inches and a half over; his chops ending angularly; the nether a little broader, and produced forward near an inch; his lips rough with a great number of little prickles.

Grew.

from that impious act by any remorse of conscience, or that they had not wickedness enough to design and execute it.

Clarendon.

2. Tenderness; pity; sympathetick sorrow.

Many little esteem of their own lives, yet, for remorse of their wives and children, would be withheld.

Spenser.

Shylock, thou lead'st this fashion of thy malice
To the last hour of act; and then 'tis thought,
Thou'lt shew thy mercy and remorse more strange,
Than is thy strange apparent cruelty.

Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

The rogues slighted me into the river, with as little remorse as they would have drowned a bitch's blind puppies.

Shakespeare.

Curse on th' unpard'ning prince, whom tears can draw

To no remorse; who rules by lion's law.

Dryden.

REMORSED.† adj. [from remorse.] Feeling the pain of guilt; struck with remorse.

grave.

Bp. Hall, Cases of Consc. D. 3. C. 9.

REMORSEFUL.† adj. [remorse and full.]
1. Full of a sense of guilt; denoting the pain of guilt; this primary meaning is overpassed by Dr. Johnson.

Never were thy feet, O Saviour, bedewed with more precious liquor than this of remorseful tears.

Bp. Hall, Contempl. B. 4.

How many remorseful souls have sent back,
with Jacob's sons, their money in their sacks' mouths!

Bp. Hall, Contempl. B. 4.

From a blacker cause
Springs this remorseful gloom? Is conscious guilt
The latent source of more than love's despair?

Shenstone, Econ. P. ii.

2. Tender; compassionate.

O Eglamour, think not I flatter,
Valiant and wise, remorseful, well accomplish'd.

Shakespeare.

Love, that comes too late,
Like a remorseful pardon slowly carried,
To the great sender turns a sour offence.

Shaks.

The gaudy, blabbing, and remorseful day
Is crept into the bosom of the sea.

Of this his fellows' most remorseful fate.

Chapman.

REMORSELESS. adj. [from remorse.] Un-pituiting; cruel; savage.

Where were ye, nymphs, when the remorseless deep

Clos'd o'er the head of your lov'd Lycidas?

Milton, Lycidas.

O the inexpressible horror that will seize upon a sinner, when he stands arraigned at the bar of divine justice! when he shall see his accuser, his judge, the witnesses, all his remorseless adversaries.

South, Serm.

REMORSELESSLY.† adv. [from remorseless.]
Without remorse.

This excused not the rigour of a merciless proceeding from him, who had but newly tasted of mercy; and, being pardoned a thousand talents, remorselessly and unworthily took his fellow by the throat for an hundred pence. South, Serm. x. 172.

REMORSELESSNESS.† n. s. [from remorseless.] Savageness; cruelty.

Famine, now releas'd to her own will,
Revenge her restraint with greedy spite; —
For never with such fell remorselessness
She rag'd in any breast, as now in his.

Beaumont, Psyche, (1651), p. 147.

REMOTÉ.† adj. [remot, old Fr. remotus,

RENCONTRE.† n. s. [rencontre, Fr.]

1. Clash; collision.

You may as well expect two bowls should grow sensible by rubbing, as that the rencontre of any bodies should awaken them into perception. Collier.

2. Personal opposition.

Virgil's friends thought fit to alter a line in Venus's speech, that has a relation to the rencontre.

Addison.

So when the trumpet sounding gives the sign,
The justling chiefs in rude rencontres join;
So meet, and so renew the dext'rous fight;
Their clattering arms with the fierce shock resound.

Granville.

3. Loose or casual engagement.

The confederates should turn to their advantage their apparent odds in men and horse; and by that means out-number the enemy in all rencontres and engagements.

Addison.

4. Sudden combat without premeditation.

He gan to feare

His toward peril, and untoward blame,
Which by that new rencontre he should reare.

Spenser, F. Q. iii. i. 9.

To RENCOU'NTER.* v. a. [from the noun.] To attack hand to hand.

He thought attence him to have swallowed quite,
And rush'd upon him with outrageous pryde;
Who him rencounting fierce as hauke in flight,
Perforce rebutted backe. Spenser, F. Q. i. xi. 53.
Which Scudamour perceiving, forth issewed
To have rencounted him in equal race.

2. To meet an enemy unexpectedly.

3. To skirmish with another.

4. To fight hand to hand.

To REND. v. a. pret. and part. pass. rent. [renban, Saxon.] To tear with violence; to lacerate.

Will you hence

Before the tag return, whose rage doth rend

Like interrupted waters, and o'erbeut
What they are used to bear? Shakespeare, Coriol.

He rent a lion as he would have rent a kid, and he had nothing in his hand.

I will not rend away all the kingdom, but give one tribe to thy son.

1 Kings, xl. 13.

By the thund'rer's stroke it from th' root is rent,
So sure the blows, which from high heaven are sent.

Cowley.

What you command me to relate,
Renews the sad remembrance of our fate,
An empire from its old foundations rent.

Dryden.

Look round to see

The lurking gold upon the fatal tree;
Then rend it off.

Dryden, Æn.

Is it not as much reason to say, when any monarchy was shattered to pieces, and divided among revolted subjects, that God was careful to preserve monarchical power, by rending a settled empire into a multitude of little governments.

Locke.

When its way the impetuous passion found,
I rend my tresses, and my breast I wound.

Pope.

To REND.* v. n. To separate; to be dis-united.

The rocks did rend, the veil of the temple divided of itself.

Bp. Taylor, Mor. Dem. of the Chr. Relig.

From cloud to cloud the rending lightnings rage.

Thomson.

RENDER.† n. s. [from rend.] One that rends; a tearer.

Our renders will needs be our reformers and repairers.

Bp. Gauden, Life of Bp. Brownrigg, p. 242.

To RENDRE.† v. a. [rendre, Fr.]

1. To return; to pay back.

They that render evil for good are adversaries.

Ps. xxxviii.

Will ye render me a recompense? Joel, iii. 4.

Let him look into the future state of bliss or misery, and see there God, the righteous judge, ready to render every man according to his deeds.

Locke.

2. To restore; to give back: commonly with the adverb back.

Hither the seas at stated times resort,
And shove the loaden vessels into port;
Then with a gentle ebb retire again,
And render back their cargo to the main.

Addison.

3. To give upon demand.

The sluggard is wiser in his own conceit, than seven men that can render a reason.

Prov. xxvi. 16.

Saint Augustine renders another reason, for which the apostles observed some legal rites and ceremonies for a time.

White.

4. To invest with qualities; to make.

My boon is, that this gentleman may render Of whom he had this ring.

Shakespeare, Cymb.

RENDER.† n. s. [from the verb.] Dr. Johnson defines this unusual substantive surrender, and cites the passage from Shakespeare's Cymbeline in illustration of it; but it there means, as elsewhere in Shakespeare, an account. Dr. Johnson mistook the meaning in Cymbeline, by stopping at the word render.

Newness

Of Cloten's death (we being not known, nor muster'd

Among the bands) may drive us to a render

Where we have liv'd.

Shakespeare, Cymbeline.

[They] send forth us to make their sorrow'd render.

Shakespeare, Timon.

RENDERABLE.* adj. [from render.] That may be rendered.

storcer; distributor.

Shew me a lawyer that turns sacred law

The equal renderer of each man his own.

Chapman's Bussy D'Ambois.

RENDEZVOU'S.† n. s. [rendez vous, Fr.

"I know not how this word came to make its fortune in our language. It is of an awkward and ill construction, even in the French." Bp. Hurd on Addison's Guardian, No. 167.—It is not often found in an English plural form; nor has Dr. Johnson cited such an instance. Sprat so uses it.]

1. Assembly; meeting appointed.

Their time is every Wednesday, after the lecture of the astronomy professor; perhaps in memory of the first occasions of their rendezvous.

Syrat, Hist. of the Royal Soc. p. 93.

2. A sign that draws men together.

The philosopher's stone and holy war are but the rendezvous of cracked brains, that wear their feather in their head instead of their hat.

Bacon.

3. Place appointed for assembly.

A commander of many ships should rather keep his fleet together, than have it severed far asunder; for the attendance of meeting them again at the next rendezvous would consume time and victual.

Raleigh, Apology.

The king appointed his whole army to be drawn together to a rendezvous at Marlborough.

Clarend. This was the general rendezvous which they all got to, and, mingled more and more with that oily liquor, they sucked it all up.

Burnet, Theory.

To RENDEZVOU'S.† v. n. [from the noun.]

To meet at a place appointed.

The next spring, he rendezvoused at Erzurum.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 287.

Sir T. Herbert, Mem. of K. Ch. I.

To RENDEZVOU'S.* v. a. To bring together; to bring to a place appointed.

He minces the text so small, that his parishioners, until he rendezvoused it again, can scarce tell what is become of it.

Echard, Cont. of the Clergy, (ed. 1696,) p. 42.

All men are to be rendezvoused in a general assembly.

Philips, Conf. of the Dan. Mission. (1719,) p. 310.

RENDIBLE.* adj. [rendable, Fr.] It has been suggested to me, that in the example from Howell rendible is perhaps a misprint for renderable. I think not. Cotgrave translates the Fr. rendable into rendible, renderable, making these two words synonymous.]

1. That may be yielded, given up, or restored. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.
2. That may be translated.

Touching translations, it is to be observed, that every language hath certain idioms, proverbs, and peculiar expressions of its own, which are not rendible in any other, but paraphrastically.

Howell, Lett. iii. 21.

RENDITION.† n. s. [from render.]

1. Surrendering; the act of yielding.

Articles granted upon the rendition of Pendennis. Fairfax, Lett. in 1650, Grey's Hudibr. i. ii.

They have assigned unto it [memory] three operations, viz. reception, retention, and rendition; that this faculty doth not only keep what is committed to it, (which indeed it doth most faithfully,) but that it doth also take into custody that which it keeps, and deliver it up again when called for.

Smith on Old Age, p. 46.

2. Translation.

The Jews, who at all hands lie upon the catch, charge Paul as a perverter of the prophet's meaning, in a false rendition of the sense of the place.

South, Sermon vii. 27.

RENEGA'DE.† n. s. [renegado, Spanish; RENEGA'DO. † renegat, Fr. Dr. Johnson. — So our word at first was renegate: "A false knight, and a renegate." Gower, Conf. Am. B. 2. The word is the low Lat. renegatus, "qui religionem suam ejuravit." See Du Cange.]

1. One that apostatises from the faith; an apostate.

O Piety! for this, thou renegade,
Did Jesus wash thy flying feet of late?

Sundays, Christ's Passion, (1640), p. 17.

He that is a renegade from charity, is as unpardonable as he that returns to solemn atheism or infidelity.

Bp. Taylor, Sermon, (1651), p. 223.

Who would suppose it, that one that was educated in the church of England, should become such a fierce and overdoing renegade?

Bp. Parker, Repr. of Reh. Transp. p. 474.

There lived a French renegade in the same place, where the Castilian and his wife were kept prisoners.

Addison.

2. One who deserts to the enemy, a revoler.

Some straggling soldiers might prove renegados, but they would not revolt in troops.

Decay of Chr. Piety.

If the Roman government subsisted now, they would have had renegade seamen and shipwrights enough.

Arbutnot.

TO RENE'GE.† v. a. [renego, Lat. renoiar, renier, old French; and so Chaucer uses reneyng, for disowning.] To disown; to renounce.

His captain's heart,

Which, in the scuffles of great fights, hath burst
The buckles on his breast, reneges all temper.

Shakespeare.

The design of this war is to make me renego my conscience and thy truth.

King Charles.

TO RENE'GE.* v. n. To deny.

Such smiling rogues as these south every passion,
Renego, affirm, and turn their halcyon beaks
With every gale and vary of their masters. Shaks.

TO RENE'W. v. a. [re and new; renovo, Lat.]

1. To renovate; to restore to the former state.

In such a night
Medea gather'd the enchanted herbs,
That did renew old Æson. Shaks. Merch. of Ven.

Let us go to Gilgal, and renew the kingdom there.

1 Sam.

The eagle casts its bill, but renews his age.

Holyday.

Renew'd to life, that she might daily die,
I daily doom'd to follow.

Dryden, Theo. and Hon.

2. To repeat; to put again in act.

Thy famous grandfather

Doth live again in thee; long may'st thou live,
To bear his image, and renew his glories! Shaks.

The body percuss'd hath, by reason of the percussion, a trepidation wrought in the minute parts, and so reneweth the percussion of the air.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The bearded corn ensued
From earth unask'd, nor was that earth renew'd.

Dryden.

3. To begin again.

The last great age, foretold by sacred rymes,

Renews its finish'd course, Saturnian times

Roll round again. Dryden, Virg. Past.

4. In theology, to make anew; to transform to new life.

It is impossible for those that were once enlightened — if they shall fall away, to renew them again unto repentance.

Heb. vi. 6.

Be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is that perfect will of God.

Rom. xii. 2.

RENEWABLE. adj. [from renew.] Capable to be renewed.

The old custom upon many estates is to let for leases of lives, renewable at pleasure. Swift, Miscell.

RENEWAL. n. s. [from renew.] The act of renewing; renovation.

It behoved the Deity, persisting in the purpose of mercy to mankind, to renew that revelation from time to time, and to rectify abuses, with such authority for the renewal and rectification, as was sufficient evidence of the truth of what was revealed.

Forbes.

RENEWEDNESS.* n. s. [from renew.] State of being made anew.

Inward sanctity and renewedness of heart.

Hammond, Works, iv. 663.

RENEW'ER.* n. s. [from renew.] One who renews.

Sherwood.

RENIT'ENCE.† n. s. [from renitent.]

1. The resistance in solid bodies, when they press upon, or are impelled one against another, or the resistance that a body makes on account of weight.

Quincy.

A burning fire — flameth out the more, the more men seek to smother it; being kindled more vehemently by that antiprestasis of a contrary renitency in those that endeavour to suppress it; and so, flashing out, like the lightning, when it is in danger to be choked.

Fotherby, Atheism. (1622), p. 147.

2. Disinclination; reluctance.

A certain renitency and regret of mind.

Bp. Hall, Chr. Mod. B. i. § 8.

Out of indignation, and an excessive renitence, not separating that which is true from that which is false.

Wollaston, Rel. of Nature.

RENITENT. adj. [renitens, Lat.] Acting against any impulse by elastic power.

By an inflation of the muscles, they become soft, and yet renitent, like so many pillows dissipating the force of the pressure, and so taking away the sense of pain.

Ray.

RENNET.† n. s. [rinnen, Germ. to flow; applied to milk, to curdle. Wachter.]

A putridous ferment coagulates all humours, as milk with rennet is turned.

Floyer on the Humours.

RENNET.† n. s. [properly rennette, a RENNETING. † little queen. Dr. Johnson. — Our forefathers seem to have considered it by their orthography, and their paraphrase on the word, as derived from the Latin renatus, reproduced. Thus Drayton, in his Polyolbion, Song 18.

"The renat, which though first it from the pippin came;

"Grown through his pureness nice, assumes that curious name."

And thus Fuller, in his worthies of Lancashire:

"Pippins grafted on a pippin stock are called renates; bettered in their generous nature by such double extraction." A kind of apple.

A golden rennet is a very pleasant and fair fruit, of a yellow flush, and the best of bearers for all sorts of soil; of which there are two sorts, the large sort and the small.

Mortimer.

Ripe pulpy apples, as pippins and rennetings, are of a syrupy tenacious nature.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

TO RENO'VATE. v. a. [renovo, Lat.] To renew; to restore to the first state.

All nature feels the renovating force
Of winter, only to the thoughtless eye
In ruin seen.

Thomson, Winter.

RENOVATION. n. s. [renovation, Fr. renovatio, Lat.] Renewal; the act of renewing; the state of being renewed.

Sound continueth some small time, which is a renovation, and not a continuance; for the body percuss'd hath a trepidation wrought in the minute parts, and so reneweth the percussion of the air.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The kings entered into speech of renewing the treaty; the king saying, that though king Philip's person were the same, yet his fortunes were raised; in which case a renovation of treaty was used.

Bacon, Hen. VII.

To second life,

Wak'd in the renovation of the just,

Resigns him up, with heaven and earth renew'd.

Milton, P. L.

TO RENOUN'CE. v. a. [renoncer, Fr. renuncio, Lat.]

1. To disown; to abnegate.

From Thebes my birth I own; and no disgrace
Can force me to renounce the honour of my race.

Dryden.

2. To quit upon oath.

This world I do renounce; and in your sights
Shake patiently my great affliction off.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

Pride and passion, and the opinions of the world, must not be our counsellors; for we renounced them at our baptism.

Kettlewell.

TO RENOUN'CE.† v. n.

1. To declare renunciation. The following passage is a mere Gallicism: renoncer à mon sang.

On this firm principle I ever stood;
He of my sons, who fails to make it good,
By one rebellious act renounces to my blood.

Dryden.

2. [At cards.] Not to follow the suit led, though the player has one of the suits in his hand.

RENOU'NCE.* n. s. Used only perhaps at cards; the act of not following the suit, when it might be done.

If with these cards you tricks intend to win,
Prevent renounces, and with trumps begin.

Whist, a Poem, p. 119.

RENOU'NCEMENT. n. s. [from renounce.] Act of renouncing; renunciation.

I hold you as a thing enskied and sainted ;
By your renoucement, an immortal spirit. Shaks.
RENOU'NCER.* n. s. [from renounce.] One who disowns or denies.

An apostate and renouncer or blasphemer of religion.
Wilkins, Nat. Rel. B. 1. ch. 14.
A timorous renouncer, as St. Peter, if he be disposed to repent, is capable of mercy.

Barrow, vol. iii. S. 16.

RENOU'NCING.* n. s. [from renounce.] The act of disowning or denying; apostasy.

Those desperate atheists, those Spanish renoucing, and Italian blasphemings, have now so prevailed in our Christian camps, that, if only restrain them, he shall be upbraided as no soldier.

Sir E. Sandys, State of Religion.

RENO'WN.† n. s. [renommé, Fr. And accordingly our word was at first renomme, or renown; and continued to be so written in the early part of the seventeenth century. "They may—come to worship and good renomme." Knight of the Toure, Prol. 1483. "A renowned advocate." Huloet. "Thou far renowned sonne of great Apollo." Spenser, F. Q. Renowned and renownedly, Sherwood's Dict. 1632.] Fame; celebrity; praise widely spread.

See

Is daughter to this famous duke of Milan,
Of whom so often I have heard renown. Shaks.

'Tis of more renown

To make a river, than to build a town. Waller.
Nor envy we

Thy great renown, nor grudge thy victory. Dryd.

To RENO'WN. v. n. [renommer, Fr. from the noun.] To make famous.

Let us satisfy our eyes

With the memorials and the things of fame,
That do renoun this city. Shakespeare, Tw. Night.

Soft elocution does thy style renoun,
Gentle or sharp according to thy choice,
To laugh at follies, or to lash at vice. Dryden.

In solemn silence stand

Stern tyrants, whom their cruelties renoun,
And emperors in Parian marble from. Addison.

A bard, whom pillar'd pastorals renoun. Pope.

RENO'WNED. particip. adj. [from renoun.]
Famous; celebrated; eminent; famed.
These were the renowned of the congregation, princes of the tribes, heads of thousands.

Num. i. 16.

That thrice renowned and learned French king, finding Petrarch's tomb without any inscription, wrote one himself; saying, shame it was, that he who sung his mistress's praise seven years before her death, should twelve years want an epitaph.

Peacham on Poetry.

The rest were long to tell, though far renoun'd.
Milton, P. L.

Of all the cities in Romanian lands,
The chief and most renoun'd Ravenna stands,
Adorn'd in ancient times with arms and arts.

Dryden.

Iva,

An isle renoun'd for steel and unexhausted mines.

Dryden.

RENO'WNEDLY.* adv. [from renoun.] With celebrity; with fame. In Sherwood, it is renownedly. See RENO'WN.

RENO'WNLESS.* adj. [renown and less.]
Inglorious; without renown. In Huloet, it is renowless. See RENO'WN.

RENT. n. s. [from rend.] A break; a laceration.

This council made a schism and rent from the most ancient and purest churches which lived before them. White.

Thou viper

Hast cancell'd kindred, made a rent in nature,
And through her holy bowels gnaw'd thy way,
Through thy own blood to empire. Dryden.

He who sees this vast rent in so high a rock, where the convex parts of one side exactly tally with the concave of the other, must be satisfied, that it was the effect of an earthquake. Addison on Italy.

To RENT.† v. a. [rather to rend. Dr. Johnson.—To rent is the constant language of our old writers; though Dr. Johnson cites only a solitary passage from the translation of Ecclesiasticus. The translation of the Bible indeed abounds with this word, which in many modern editions, through the desire of correctness, is altered to rend; on the ground, no doubt, that what is the preterit and participle passive of rend, ought not to be an active participle or the present tense of the indicative and infinitive moods. Our ancestors did not regard this distinction.] To tear; to lacerate.

To bescratchen all her face
And for to rent in many place
Her clothes. Chaucer, Rom. R. 324.

Four principal heresies there are which have in those things withstood the truth: Nestorians, by renting Christ asunder, and dividing him into two persons. Hooker, Ecccl. Pol. v. § 54.

Rent your heart, and not your garments.

Joel, ii. 13.

A time to rent, and a time to sew. Eccclus. iii. 7.
What griefs my heart did rent!

Donne, Poems, p. 318.

It was the custom of the Jews, when they heard the name of God blasphemed, to rent their clothes.
Lowth on Isaiah, (1714), p. 299.

To RENT. v. n. [now written rant.] To roar; to bluster: we still say, a tearing fellow, for a noisy bully.

He ventur'd to dismiss his fear,
That partings went to rent and tear,
And give the desperate attack
To danger still behind its back. Hudibras.

RENT. n. s. [pent, Sax. redditus; rente,
Fr.]

1. Revenue; annual payment.

Idol ceremony,

What are thy rents? what are thy comings in?
O ceremony, shew me but thy worth!

Shakespeare, Hen. V.

I bought an annual rent or two,
And live just as you see I do.

Pope, Ep. of Horace.

2. Money paid for any thing held of another.

Such is the mould, that the blest tenant feeds
On precious fruits, and pays his rent in weeds. Waller.

Folks in mudwall tenement,
Present a peppercorn for rent. Prior.

To RENT.† v. a. [renter, Fr.]

1. To hold by paying rent.

When a servant is called before his master, it is often to know, whether he passed by such a ground, if the old man who rents it is in good health.

Addison, Spect.

2. To set to a tenant.

On the other side there is no reason why an honourable society should rent their estate for a trifle.

Swift, Lett. (1736.)

RE'NTABLE. adj. [from rent.] That may be rented.

RENTAGE.* n. s. [rentage, old Fr.] Money paid for any thing held of another.

Fond man, that looks on earth for happiness,
And here long seeks what here is never found!

For all our good we hold from heaven by lease,
With many forfeits and conditions bound;
Nor can we pay the fine and rentage due.

P. Fletcher, Purp. Isl. vii. 2.

RE'NTAL. n. s. [from rent.] Schedule or account of rents.

RE'NTER. n. s. [from rent.] One that holds by paying rent.

The estate will not be let for one penny more or less to the renter, amongst whomsoever the rent he pays be divided. Locke.

RE'NTROLL.* n. s. [rent and roll.] List of rents, or revenues.

The whole review or expence of their house was set down in their calendar, rent-roll, or count-book.

Hakewill on Prov. p. 418.

It shall be allowed to all such, who think riches the chief distinction, to appear in the ring with a rentroll hanging out of each side of their coach!

Tatler, No. 66.

To RENVERSE.† v. a. [re and inverse; old Fr. renverse. Dr. Johnson barely notices renversed as an adjective used by Spenser for overturned. Spenser only uses it as a verb, and participle, in the ancient sense of degradation, by the custom of reversing or turning upside down the shield of the conquered person.] To reverse.

Whose shield he bears renverst.

Spenser, F. Q. i. iv. 41.

First he his beard did shave, and fowly shent;
Then from him reft his shield, and it renverst.

Spenser, F. Q. v. iii. 37.

RENVE'RSEMENT.* n. s. [from renverse.]
Act of reversing. Not in use.

'Tis a total renversement of the order of nature before 'tis begun, and every consideration opposes
it. Stukely, Palaeogr. Sacr. (1763.) p. 60.

RENUNCI'ATION. n. s. [renunciatio, from renuncio, Lat.] The act of renouncing.

He that loves riches, can hardly believe the doctrine of poverty and renunciation of the world.

Bp. Taylor.

To REOBTAIN. v. a. [re and obtain.] To obtain again.

I came to reobtain my dignity,
And in the throne to seat my sire againe.

Mir. for Mag. p. 752.

REOBTAIN'ABLE.* adj. [from reobtain.]
That may be obtained again. Sherwood.

To REORDAIN.† v. a. [reorderer, Fr. re and ordain.] To ordain again, on supposition of some defect in the commission granted to a minister.

They did not pretend to reordin those that had been ordained by the new book in king Edward's time.

Burnet's Hist. Ref. P. II. B. 2.

REORDINA'TION. n. s. [from reordain.] Repetition of ordination.

He proceeded in his ministry without expecting any new mission, and never thought himself obliged to a reordination.

Aterbury.

Fr.]

1. To restore after injury or dilapidation.
Let the priests repair the breaches of the house.

2 Kings.

The fines imposed were the more repined against,
because they were assigned to the rebuilding and repairing of St. Paul's church.

Clarendon.

Heaven soon repair'd her mural breach,

Milton, P. L.

2. To amend any injury by an equivalent.

He justly hath driv'n out his rebel foes
To deepest hell; and, to repair their loss,
Created this new happy race of men.

Milton, P. L.

3. To fill up anew, by something put in the place of what is lost.

To be reveng'd,

And to repair his numbers thus impair'd.

Milton, P. L.

4. To recover : a Latinism.

He, ere he could his weapon backe repaire,
His side all bare and naked overtooke,
And with his mortal steel quite through the body strooke.

Spenser, F. Q. v. xi. 13.

REPAIR' n. s. [from the verb.] Reparation; supply of loss; restoration after dilapidation.

Before the curing of a strong disease,
E'r'n in the instant of repair and health,
The fit is strongest.

He cast in his mind for the repair of the cathedral church.

Fell, Life of Hammond.

Temperance, in all methods of curing the gout, is a regular and simple diet, proportioning the daily repairs to the daily decays of our wasting bodies.

Temple, Miscell.

All automata need a frequent repair of new strength, the causes whence their motion does proceed being subject to fail.

Wilkins, Math. Magic.

To REPAIR' v. n. [repairer, Fr.] To go to; to betake himself.

May all to Athens back again repair.

Shaks.

Depart from hence in peace,

Search the wide world, and where you please repair.

Dryden.

'Tis fix'd; th' irrevocable doom of Jove:

Haste then, Cyllenius, through the liquid air,

Go mount the winds, and to the shades repair.

Pope.

REPAIR' † n. s. [repaire, Fr. from the verb.] 1. Resort; abode.

He saw Ulysses; at his ships repaire,
That had been brusht with the enraged aire.

Chapman.

The Lord will be the hope [in the margin, place of repair, or harbour.] of his people.

Joel, iii. 16.

So 'scapes the insulting fire his narrow jail,
And makes small outlets into open air;

There the fierce winds his tender force assail,
And beat him downward to his first repair.

Dryden.

2. Act of betaking himself any whither.

The king sent a proclamation for their repair to their houses, and for a preservation of the peace.

Clarendon.

REPAIR' ABLE adj.* [from repair.] That may be repaired: now, reparable.

Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

REPAIR' RER. n. s. [from repair.] Amender; restorer.

He that governs well, leads the blind, but he that teaches, gives him eyes; and it is a glorious thing to have been the repaire of a decayed intellect.

South, Serm.

O sacred rest!

O peace of mind! repaire of decay,
Whose balms renew the limbs to labours of the day.

Dryden.

REPA'NDOUS. adj. [repandus, Lat.] Bent upwards.

Though they be drawn repandous or convexly crooked in one piece, yet the dolphin that carrieth Arion is concavously inverted, and hath its spine depressed in another.

Brown.

REPARABLE. adj. [reparable, Fr. reparabilis, Latin.] Capable of being amended,

VOL. III.

retrieved, or supplied by something equivalent.

The parts in man's body easily reparable, as spirits, blood, and flesh, die in the embracement of the parts hardly reparable, as bones, nerves, and membranes.

Bacon.

When its spirit is drawn from wine, it will not,
by the reunion of its constituent liquors, be reduced to its pristine nature; because the workmanship of nature, in the disposition of the parts, was too elaborate to be imitable, or reparable by the bare apposition of those divided parts to each other.

Boyle.

An adulterous person is tied to restitution of the injury, so far as it is reparable, and can be made to the wronged person; to make provision for the children begotten in unlawful embraces.

Bp. Taylor, Rule of Living Holy.

REPARABLY. adv. [from reparable.] In a manner capable of remedy by restoration, amendment, or supply.REPARATION. n. s. [reparation, Fr. reparatio, from reparo, Lat.]

1. The act of repairing; instauration.

Antonius Philosophus took care of the reparation of the highways.

Arbutnot on Coins.

2. Supply of what is wasted.

When the organs of sense want their due repose and necessary reparations, the soul exerts herself in her several faculties.

Addison.

In this moveable body, the fluid and solid parts must be consumed; and both demand a constant reparation.

Arbutnot.

3. Recompense for any injury; amends.

The king should be able, when he had cleared himself, to make him reparation.

Bacon.

I am sensible of the scandal I have given by my loose writings, and make what reparation I am able.

Dryden.

REPARATIVE. n. s. [from repair.] Whatever makes amends for loss or injury.

New preparatives were in hand, and partly reparatives of the former beaten at sea.

Wotton, D. of Buckingham.

REPARATIVE* adj. Amending defect, loss, or injury.

Reparative inventions, by which art and ingenuity studies to help and repair defects or deformities.

Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 60.

Suits are naturally entered, when they are vindictive, not reparative; and begun only for revenge, not for reparation of damages.

Kettlewell.

REPARTEE' † [repartie, Fr. "an answering blow, or thrust, in fencing; and thence a return of or answer in speech."]

Cotgrave.] Smart reply.

The fools overflowed with smart repartees, and were only distinguished from the intended wit
by being called coxcombs.

Dryden, Dufresnoy.

Cupid was as bad as he;

Hear but the youngest's repartee.

Prior.

To REPARTEE' † v. n. To make smart replies.

If wise thou wilt appear, and knowing,

Repartee, repartee,

To what I'm doing,

Denham, Song.

And so her tongue lay seldom still;

For in all visits who she, but

To argue, or to repartee?

Prior.

To REPA'SS. v. a. [repasser, Fr.] To pass
again; to pass or travel back.

Well we have pass'd, and now repass'd the seas,
And brought desired help.

Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

We shall find small reason to think that Abraham passed and repassed those ways more often than he was enforced so to do, if we consider that he had no other comforter in this wearisome journey than the strength of his faith in God.

Rakegh.

If his soul hath wing'd the destin'd flight,
Homeward with pious speed repass the main,
To the pale shade funeral rites ordain.

Pope, Odys.

To REPA'SS. v. n. To go back in a road.
Five girdles bind the skies, the torrid zone
Glow with the passing and repassing sun.

Dryden.

REPA'ST. n. s. [repas, Fr.; re and pastus,
Lat.]

1. A meal; act of taking food.

From dance to sweet repast they turn

Desirous; all in circles as they stood,

Tables are set.

Milton, P. L.

What neat repast shall feast us, light and choice,
Of Attick taste, with wine.

Milton, Sonnet.

Sleep, that is thy best repast,

Yet of death it bears a taste,

And both are the same thing at last.

Denham.

The day

Had summon'd him to due repast at noon.

Dryden.

Keep regular hours for repast and sleep.

* Arbutnot.

2. Food; victuals.

Go, and get me some repast;

I care not what, so it be wholesome food.

Shaks.

To REPA'ST. v. a. [repaistre, Fr. from the noun.] To feed; to feast.

To his good friends I'll ope my arm,
And, like the kind life-rendering pelican,

Repast them with my blood.

Shakspeare.

REPA'STURE. n. s. [re and pasture.] Entertainment. Not in use.

He from forage will incline to play;
But if thou strive, poor soul, what art thou then?

Food for his rage, repasture for his den.

Shaks.

To REPA'TRIATE* v. a. [repatrier, Fr.
re and patria, Lat.] To restore to one's own home or country. This word, though now not used, is old in our language. Cotgrave and Sherwood give it.
Expatriate, which is modern, might owe its introduction into our language to this forgotten word.To REPAY. v. a. [repayer, Fr. re and pay.]1. To pay back in return, in requital, or in revenge.

According to their deeds he will repay recompense to his enemies, to the islands he will recompense.

Is. lix. 18.

2. To recompense.

He clad

Their nakedness with skins of beasts, or slain,
Or as the snake with youthful coat repaid.

Milton, P. L.

3. To compensate.

Favouring heaven repaid my glorious toils

With a sack'd palace, and barbaric spoils.

Pope.

I have fought well for Persia, and repaid

The benefit of birth with honest service.

Rowe.

5. To reimburse with what is owed.

If you repay me not on such a day,
Such sums as are express'd in the condition,
Let the forfeit be an equal pound of your fair flesh.

Shakspeare.

REPAYMENT. † n. s. [from repay.]

1. The act of repaying.

They sin against this commandment, [the eighth,] that are forward to run into debt knowingly beyond their power, without hopes or purposes of repayment.

Bp. Taylor, Holy Dying, ch. 4. § 8.

T T

2. The thing repaid.

The centesima usura it was not lawful to exceed; and what was paid over it, was reckoned as a repayment of part of the principal.

Arbutnot on Coins.

To REPEAL. v. a. [rappeller, Fr.]

1. To recall. Out of use.

I will repéal thee, or be well assur'd,
Adventure to be banished myself. Shaks. Hen. VI.
I here forget all former griefs;
Cancel all grudge, repéal thee home again. Shaks.

2. To abrogate; to revoke.

Laws that have been approved, may be again *repéal*ed, and disputed against by the authors themselves.

Hooker, Pref.

Adam soon repéal'd
The doubts that in his heart arose. Milton, P. L.

Statutes are silently *repéal*ed, when the reason ceases for which they were enacted.

Dryden, Pref. to Fab.

REPEAL. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Recall from exile. Not in use.

If the time thrust forth
A cause for thy repéal, we shall not send O'er the vast world to seek a single man. Shaks.

2. Revocation; abrogation.

The king being advertised, that the over-large grants of lands and liberties made the lords so insolent, did absolutely resume all such grants; but the earl of Desmond above all found himself grieved with this resumption or repéal of liberties, and declared his dislike.

Davies on Ireland.

If the presbyterians should obtain their ends, I could not be sorry to find them mistaken in the point which they have most at heart, by the repéal of the test; I mean the benefit of employments.

Swift, Presbyt. Plea.

REPEALER.* n. s. [from repéal.] One who revokes or abrogates.

If the repeal of American taxes destroys all our government in America, he is the man; and he is the worst of all the *repéal*ers, because he is the last.

Burke, Sp. on American Taxation, (1774.)

To REPEAT. v. a. [repeto, Lat. repeter, Fr.]

1. To iterate; to use again; to do again.

He, though his power
Creation could repéal, yet would be loth
Us to abolish. Milton, P. L.

Where sudden alterations are not necessary, the same effect may be obtained by the *repéal*ed force of diet with more safety to the body.

Arbutnot on Aliments.

2. To speak again.

The Psalms, for the excellency of their use, deserve to be oftener *repéal*ed; but that their multitude permitteth not any oftener repetition.

Hooker.

3. To try again.

Neglecting for Creusa's life his own,
Repeats the danger of the burning town. Waller.
Beyond this place you can have no retreat;

Shakespeare.
The fines imposed were the more repined against,
because they were assigned to the rebuilding of
St. Paul's church. Clarendon.

If you think how many diseases, and how much poverty there is in the world, you will fall down upon your knees, and instead of repining at one affliction, will admire so many blessings received at the hand of God. Temple.

2. To envy.

The ghosts repine at violated night;
And curse the invading sun, and sicken at the sight.
Dryden.

Just in the gate
Dwell pale diseases and repining age. Dryden.

REPIN'ER.† n. s. [from repine.] One that frets or murmurs.

What marvel if such repiners blow out the foggy vapourous blast of seditious words against our highest court of parliament?

Bp. Hall, Hon. of the Marr. Clergy, p. 208.

We are not to think every clamorous harangue, or every splenetic repiner against a court, is therefore a patriot. Bp. Berkeley, Max. § 23.

Let rash repiners stand appall'd,
In Thee who dare not trust. Young, Resign. P. ii.

REPIN'ING.* n. s. [from repine.] Act of murmuring or complaining.

He bore it decently without breaking out into repinings, or impatient complaints.

Burnet, Life of Ld. Rochester, p. 155.

Did we understand the reason of God's dealings, and see what he seeth, and know what he knoweth, we should praise him, on our bended knees, for those crosses which are now the innocent causes of our repinings against him.

Scott, Works, (ed. 1718), ii. 7.

REPIN'INGLY.* adv. [from repining.] With complaint; with murmuring.

[They] teach us how repiningly, how unjustly, they stooped under this yoke.

Bp. Hall, Epist. D. 2. E. 3.

To REPLA'CE. v. a. [replacer, Fr. re and
place.]

1. To put again in the former place.

The earl being apprehended, upon examination cleared himself so well, as he was replaced in his government. Bacon.

The bowls, remov'd for fear,
The youths replac'd; and soon restor'd the cheer.
Dryden.

The most replenished sweet work of nature,
That from the prime creation e'er she fram'd.

Shakespeare.

To REPLE'NISH. v. n. To recover the former fulness. Not in use.

The humours in men's bodies increase and decrease as the moon doth; and therefore purge some day after the full; for then the humours will not replenish so soon. Bacon.

REPLE'TE. adj. [replet, Fr. repletus, Lat.] Full; completely filled; filled to exuberance.

The world's large tongue
Proclaims you for a man replete with mocks;
Full of comparisons and wounding flouts. Shaks.

This mortification, if in over high a degree, is little better than the corrosion of poison; as repletions in antimony, if given to bodies not replete with humours; for where humours abound, the humours save the parts. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

His words, replete with guile,
Into her heart too easy entrance won.

Milton, P. L.

In a dog, out of whose eye being wounded the aqueous humour did copiously flow, yet in six hours the bulb of the eye was again replete with its humour, without the application of any medicines.

Ray on the Creation.

REPLE'TION. n. s. [repletion, Fr.] The state of being overfull.

The tree had too much repletion, and was oppressed with its own sap: for repletion is an enemy to generation. Bacon.

All dreams
Are from repletion and complexion bred;
From rising fumes of undigested food. Dryden.

Thirst and hunger may be satisfy'd;
But this repletion is to love deny'd. Dryden.

The action of the stomach is totally stopped by too great repletion. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

REPLE'TIVE.* adj. [repletif, Fr.] Replenishing; filling. Cotgrave.

plegir, to give a pledge; replegio, low
Lat.] To take back or set at liberty, upon security, any thing seized.

And yet not his, nor his in equite,
But yours the wait by high prerogative:
Therefore I humbly crave your majesty
It to replevie. Spenser, F. Q. iv. xii. 31.

Every plain countryman knows what belongs to distraining, impounding, replevying.

Bp. Hall, Sel. Thoughts, § 44.

That you're a beast, and turn'd to grass,

Is no strange news, nor ever was:

At least to me, who once, you know,

Did from the pound replevin you. Hudibras.

REPLICATION. n. s. [replico, Lat.]

1. Rebound; repercussion. Not in use.

Tyber trembled underneath his banks,
To hear the replication of your sounds,
Made in his concave shores. Shaks. Jul. Cæs.

To be demanded of a sponge, what replication should be made by the son of a king?

Shakspeare, Hamlet.

This is a replication to what Menelaus had before offered, concerning the transplantation of Ulysses to Sparta. Broome.

To REPLY. v. n. [reply, Fr.] To answer;
to make a return to an answer.

O man! who art thou that replieth against God?

Rom. ix.

Would we ascend higher to the rest of these few persons, we should find what reason Castalia's painter had to reply upon the cardinal, who blamed him for putting a little too much colour into St.
Peter and Paul's faces: that it was true in their life-time they were pale mortified men, but that since they were grown ruddy, by blushing at the sins of their successors. Aberbury, Serm.

To REPLY. v. a. To return for an answer.

Perplex'd

The tempter stood, nor had what to reply.

Milton, P. R.

His trembling tongue invok'd his bride;

With his last voice Eurydice he cry'd:

Eurydice the rocks and river banks reply'd. Dryd.

REPLY. n. s. [replique, Fr.] Answer; return to an answer.

But now return,

And with their faint reply this answer join. Shaks.
If I send him word, it was not well cut; he would send me word, he cut it to please himself: if again, it was not well cut, this is called the reply churlish.

Shakspeare.

* One rises up to make replies to establish or con-fute what has been offered on each side of the question. Watts.

To whom with sighs, Ulysses gave reply;
Ah, why ill-suiting pastime must I try? Pope.

REPLYER. n. s. [from reply.] He that answers; he that makes a return to an answer.

At an act of the commencement, the answerer gave for his question, that an aristocracy was better than a monarchy; the replyer did tax him, that, being a private bred man, he would give a question of state: the answerer said, that the replyer did much wrong the privilege of scholars, who would be much straighten'd if they should give questions of nothing, but such things wherein they are practised; and added, we have heard yourself dispute of virtue, which no man will say you put much in practice. Bacon, Aphor.

To REPOLISH. v. a. [repolir, Fr. re and polish.] To polish again.

A sundred clock is piecemeal laid

Not to be lost, but by the maker's hand

Repolish'd, without error; then to stand. Donne.

To REPORT.† v. a. [rapporter, Fr.]

1. To noise by popular rumour.

Is it upon record? or else reported successively from age to age? Shakspeare, Rich. III.

report of an ordnance, the voice. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The lashing billows make a long report,

And beat her sides. Dryden, Cæsar and Alc.

REPORTER.† n. s. [from report.]

1. Relater; one that gives an account.

There she appear'd; or my reporter devis'd well for her. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

Rumours were raised of great discord among the nobility; for this cause the lords assembled gave order to apprehend the reporters of these surmises.
Hayward.

If I had known a thing they concealed, I should never be the reporter of it. Pope.

2. [In law.] One who draws up reports of adjudged cases. Mason.

James the first, at the instance of lord Bacon, appointed two reporters with a handsome stipend.

Blackstone.

1. To lay to rest.

Rome's readiest champions, repose you here,
Secure from worldly chances and mishaps;
Here lurks no treason, here no envy swells.
Shakspeare.

Have ye chos'n this place,

After the toil of battle, to repose

Your wearied virtue? Milton, P. L.

2. To place as in confidence or trust: with on or in.

I repose upon your management, what is dearest to me, my fame. Dryden, Pref. to Ann. Mir.

That prince was conscious of his own integrity in the service of God, and relied on this as a foundation for that trust he reposed in him, to deliver him out of his distresses. Rogers.

3. To lodge; to lay up.

Pebbles, reposed in those cliffs amongst the earth, being not so dissoluble and more bulky, are left behind. Woodward.

To REPOSE. v. n. [reposer, Fr.]

1. To sleep; to be at rest.

Within a thicket I reposed; when round
I ruffled up fall'n leaves in heap; and found,
Let fall from heaven, asleep interminate. Chapman.

2. To rest in confidence: with on.

And, for the ways are dangerous to pass,

I do desire thy worthy company,

Upon whose faith and honour I repose. Shakspeare.

REPOSE.† n. s. [repos, Fr.]

1. Sleep; rest; quiet.

Merciful powers!

Restrain in me the curs'd thoughts, that nature

Gives way to in repose. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

The hour

Of night, and of all things now retir'd to rest,

Mind us of like repose. Milton, P. L.

I all the livelong day

Consume in meditation deep, recluse

From human converse; nor at shut of eve

Enjoy repose. Philips.

2. Cause of rest.

After great lights must be great shadows, which we call reposes; because in reality the sight would be tired, if attracted by a continuity of glittering objects. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

3. Repose, or quietness, is applied to a picture, when the whole is harmonious;
when nothing glares either in the shade,
light, or colouring. Gilpin.

REPOSEDNESS.† n. s. [from reposed.] State of being at rest.

With wondrous reposedness of mind, and gentle words, Reputation answered.

Tr. of Boccacini, (1626,) p. 104.

To REPOSIT. v. a. [repositus, Lat.] To lay up; to lodge as in a place of safety.

Others reposit their young in holes, and secure themselves also therein, because such security is wanting, their lives being sought.

Derham, Phys. Theol.

REPOSITION.† n. s. [from reposit.]

1. The act of laying up in a place of safety.

That age [youth] which is not capable of observation, careless of reposition.

Bp. Hall, Quo Vadis.

2. The act of replacing.

Being satisfied in the reposition of the bone, take care to keep it so by deligation. Wiseman, Surgery.

REPOSITORY. n. s. [repositoire, Fr. reposit-orium, Lat.] A place where any thing is safely laid up.

The mind of man, not being capable of having many ideas under view at once, it was necessary to have a repository to lay up those ideas. Locke.

He can take a body to pieces, and dispose of them, to us not without the appearance of irrefragable confusion, but with respect to his own knowledge, into the most regular and methodical repositories. Rogers, Serm.

TO REPOSSESS. v. a. [re and possess.] To possess again.

How comes it now, that almost all that realm is repossessed of them? Spenser on Ireland.

Her suit is now to repossess those lands, Which we in justice cannot well deny. Shakspeare.
Nor shall my father repossess the land,
The father's fortune never to return. Pope, Odys.

REPOSSESSION.* n. s. [re and possession.] Act of possessing again.

Whoso hath been robbed, or spoiled, of his lands or goods, may lawfully seek repossession by force; yet so, as before any force be used, he first civilly seek restitution.

We have met with some, whose realms made good their representments. Brown, Vulg. Err.

TO REPRESS. v. a. [repressus, Latin; reprimer, Fr.] To crush; to put down; to subdue.

Discontents and ill blood having used always to repress and appease in person, he was loth they should find him beyond sea. Bacon, Hen. VII.

Some, taking dangers to be the only remedy against dangers, endeavoured to set up the sedition again, but they were speedily repressed, and thereby the sedition suppressed wholly. Hayward.

Such kings
Favour the innocent, repress the bold,
And, while they flourish, make an age of gold. Walter.

How can I
Repress the horror of my thoughts, which fly
The sad remembrance? Denham.

Thus long succeeding critics justly reign'd,
Licence repress'd d, and useful laws ordain'd:
Learning and Rome alike in empire grew. Pope.

REPRESS.† n. s. [from the verb.] Repression; act of crushing. Not in use, Dr. Johnson says; and I may add, not in existence, perhaps, unless in some corrupt edition of the Government of the Tongue, from which Dr. Johnson cites his example, viz. "Loud outcries of injury, when they tend nothing to the repress of it, &c." where, in the original edition of this treatise, and in the folio edition of the author's works, [Whole Duty of Man, &c.] as Mr. Bagshaw also has observed, the true reading is redress.

REPRESSER.* n. s. [from repress; Fr. reprimeur.] One who represses.

Sherwood.

REPRESSION. n. s. [from repress.] Act of repressing.

REPROBATION. n. s. [reprobation, French, from reprobate.]

1. The act of abandoning or state of being abandoned to eternal destruction; the contrary to election.

This sight would make him do a desperate turn ;
Yea curse his better angel from his side,
And fall to reprobation. Shakespeare, Othello.

This is no foundation of discriminating grace,
or consequently fruit of election and reprobation.

Hammond.

Though some words may be accommodated to God's predestination, yet it is the scope of that text to treat of the reprobation of any man to hell-fire.

Bramhall against Hobbes.

God, upon a true repentance, is not so fatally tied to the spindle of absolute reprobation, as not to keep his promise, and seal merciful pardons.

Maine.

2. A condemnatory sentence.

You are empowered to give the final decision of wit, to put your stamp on all that ought to pass for current, and set a brand of reprobation on clipp'd poetry and false coin.

Dryden.

REPROBATIONER.  n. s.* [from reprobation.] One who hastily abandons others to eternal destruction.

Let them take heed, that they mistake not their own fierce temper for the mind of God.—But I never knew any of the Geneva or Scotch model, which sort of sanctified reprobationers we abound with, either use or like this way of preaching in my life; but generally whips and scorpions, wrath and vengeance, fire and brimstone, made both top and bottom, front and rear, first and last, of all their discourses.

South, Sermon, iii. 429.

TO REPRODUCE. v. a. [re and produce; reproduce, Fr.] To produce again; to produce anew.

If horse-dung reproduceth oats, it will not be easily determined where the power of generation ceaseth.

Brown.

Those colours are unchangeable, and whenever all those rays with those their colours are mixed again, they reproduce the same white light as before.

Newton, Opt.

REPRODUCER.  n. s.* [re and producer.] One who produces anew.

I speak of Charles Townshend, officially the reproducer of this fatal scheme; whom I cannot even now remember without some degree of sensibility. In truth, he was the delight and ornament of this house, and the charm of every private society which he honoured with his presence.

Burke, Sp. on American Taxation.

REPRODUCTION. n. s. [from reproduce.]

The act of producing anew.

I am about to attempt a reproduction in vitriol, in which it seems not unlikely to be performable.

Boyle.

REPROOF. n. s. [from reprove.]

1. Blame to the face; reprehension.

Good Sir John, as you have one eye upon my follies, turn another into the register of your own, that I may pass with a reproof the easier.

Shakespeare, M. W. of Windsor.

Fear not the anger of the wise to raise;

Those best can bear reproof who merit praise.

Pope.

2. Censure; slander. Out of use.

Why, for thy sake, have I suffered reproof? shame hath covered my face.

Ps. lxi. 7.

REPROVABLE. adj. [from reprove.] Culpable; blamable; worthy of reprehension.

If thou dost find thy faith as dead after the reception of the sacrament as before, it may be thy faith was not only little, but reprobable.

Bp. Taylor, Worthy Communion.

TO REPROVE.† v. a. [reprover, Fr. Dr. Johnson.—The French word is rendered by Cotgrave, among others applicable to the definitions which are here given, to disallow. And this appears to have been the ancient meaning of the word in our language: "The stoon which the bilerdis reproveden, this is made in to the head of the corner." Wicliffe, St. Matt. xxi. Our translators of the present authorized version of the N. Test. thus render 1 Pet. ii. 7. "The stone which the builders disallowed."] 1. To blame; to censure.

I will not reprove thee for thy sacrifices.

Psal. l. 8.

This is the sin of the minister, when men are called to reprove sin, and do not.

Perkins.

2. To charge to the face with a fault; to check; to chide; to reprehend.

What if they can better be content with one that can wink at their faults, than with him that will reprove them?

Whitgift.

There is no slander in an allow'd fool, though he do nothing but rail; nor no railing in a known discreet man, though he do nothing but reprove.

Shakespeare, Tw. Night.

What if thy son

Prove disobedient; and, reprov'd, retort,
Wherefore didst thou beget me?

If a great personage undertakes an action passionately, let it be acted with all the malice and impotency in the world, he shall have enough to flatter him, but not enough to reprove him.

Bp. Taylor, Rule of Living Holy.

He reproveth, exhorts, and preaches to those, for whom he first prays to God.

Law.

3. To refute; to disprove.

My lords,

Reprove my allegation if you can.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

To reprove one of laziness, they will say, doth thou make idle a coat? that is, a coat for idleness.

Carew.

REPROVER. n. s. [from reprove.] A reprehender; one that reproves.

Let the most potent sinner speak out, and tell us, whether he can command down the clamours and revilings of a guilty conscience, and impose silence upon that bold reprover?

South.

This shall have from every one, even the reprovers of vice, the title of living well.

Locke on Education.

TO REPRUNE. v. a. [re and prune.] To prune a second time.

Reprune apricots and peaches, saving as many of the young likeliest shoots as are well placed.

Evelyn, Kalendar.

REPTILE. adj. [reptile, Lat.] Creeping upon many feet. In the following lines reptile is confounded with serpent.

Cleanse baits from filth, to give a tempting gloss,
Cherish the sully'd reptile race with moss.

Gay.

REPTILE. n. s. An animal that creeps upon many feet.

Terrestrial animals may be divided into quadrupeds or reptiles, which have many feet, and serpents which have no feet.

Locke, Elem. of Nat. Philos.

Holy retreat! siithence no female hither,
Conscious of social love and nature's rites,
Must dare approach, from the inferior reptile,
To woman, form divine.

Prior.

REPUBLICAN.† adj. [from republic.] Placing the government in the people; approving this kind of government.

You can better ingraft any description of republic on a monarchy, than any thing of monarchy upon the republican forms.

Burke on the Fr. Revolution.

It has been a great point with republican divines to explain away the force of this text, Rom. xiii. 1. But for this purpose they have never been able to fall upon any happier expedient, than to say that the word powers, ἐξουσίαι, signifies not persons bearing power, but forms of government.—I will venture to add, that not a single instance is to be found in any writer, sacred or profane, of the use of the word ἐξουσία to signify form of government; nor is that sense to be extracted by any critical chymistry from the etymology and radical meaning of the word.

Bp. Horsley, Sermon, Jan. 30, (1793.)

REPUBLICAN. n. s. [from republic.] One who thinks a commonwealth without monarchy the best government.

These people are more happy in imagination than the rest of their neighbours, because they think themselves so; though such a chimerical happiness is not peculiar to republicans.

REPUBLICANISM.  n. s.* Attachment to a republican form of government.

He distinguishes it with the same care from the principles of regicide and republicanism.

Burke.

REPUBLIC.† n. s. [respublic, Lat. republicue, French.]

1. Commonwealth; state in which the power is lodged in more than one.

They are indebted many millions more than their whole republic is worth.

Addison, State of the War.

2. Common interest; the publick.

Those that by their deeds will make it known,

Whose dignity they do sustain;

And life, state, glory, all they gain,

Count the republic's not their own. B. Jonson.

REPUBLIC of Letters. The whole body of the people of study and learning.

Chambers.

REPUBLICATION.  n. s.* [re and publication.]

1. Reimpression of a printed work.

2. [In law.] A second publication; an renewed renewal.

The republication of a former will revokes one of a later date, and establishes the first again.

Blackstone.

TO REPUBLISH.  v. a.* [re and publish.] To publish anew.

The book is extant, published by warrant, and republished by command this present year.

Mountague, App. to Cæs. (1695,) p. 31.

REPUDIABLE. adj. [from repudiate.] Fit to be rejected.

TO REPUDIATE. v. a. [repudio, Lat. repudier, Fr.] To divorce; to reject; to put away.

Let not those, that have repudiated the more inviting sins, shew themselves philtred and bewitched by this.

Gov. of the Tongue.

Here is a notorious instance of the folly of the atheists, that while they repudiate all title to the kingdom of heaven, merely for the present pleasure of body, and their boasted tranquility of mind, besides the extreme madness in running such a desperate hazard after death, they unwittingly deprive themselves here of that very pleasure and tranquility they seek for.

Bentley, Sermon.

REPUDIATION.† n. s. [repudiation, Fr. from repudiate.] Divorce; rejection.

What repudiations, and new weddings upon divorcements!

Martin, Marr. of Priests, (1554,) L. iii.

The Jewish reputations never found favour in heaven.

By. Hall, Chr. Myst. § 8.
It was allowed by the Athenians, only in case of reputation of a wife.

Arbutnot on Coins.
To REPU'GN.* v. n. [repugno, Latin; repugner, Fr.] To oppose; to make resistance.

Nature repugning, they scarce taste any thing that may be profitable. Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 46. b.
Many things repugning quite both to God's law, and man's.

Spenser on Ireland.
As though this did repugne both unto their nature and grace.

Salkeld on Angels, (1613,) p. 326.
To REPU'GN.* v. a. To withstand; to resist.

When stubbornly he did repugn the truth
About a certain question of the law
Argued betwixt the duke of York and him.
Shakespeare, Hen. VI. P. I.

REPU'GNANCE. } n. s. [repugnance, Fr.
REPU'GNANCY. } from repugnant.]

1. Inconsistency; contrariety.

But where difference is without repugnancy, that which hath been can be no prejudice to that which is.

Hooker.
It is no affront to omnipotence, if, by reason of the formal incapacity and repugnancy of the thing, we aver that the world could not have been made from all eternity.

2. Reluctance; resistance.

Why do fond men expose themselves to battle,
And let the foes quietly cut their throats,
Without repugnancy?

Shakespeare, Timon.

3. Struggle of opposite passions.
Thus did the passions act without any of their present jars, combats, or repugnances, all moving with the beauty of uniformity and the stillness of composure.

South, Sermon.

4. Aversion; unwillingness.
That which causes us to lose most of our time, is the repugnance which we naturally have to labour.

Dryden.
REPU'GNANT.† adj. [repugnant, Fr. repugnans, Latin.]

1. Disobedient; not obsequious.

His antique sword,
Rebellious to his arm, lies where it falls,
Repugnant to command.

Shakespeare, Hamlet.
2. Contrary; opposite; inconsistent: generally with to, sometimes with.

All contrary and repugnant religions.
Stapleton, Fort. of the Faith, (1565,) fol. 152.
There is no breach of a divine law, but is more or less repugnant unto the will of the law-giver, God himself.

Perkins.
Why I reject the other conjectures is; because they have not due warrant from observation, but are clearly repugnant thereunto.

Woodward, Nat. Hist.
Your way is to wrest and strain some principles maintained both by them and me, to a sense repugnant with their other known doctrines.

Waterland.

Sherwood.
REPU'LSION. n. s. [repulsus, Lat.] The act or power of driving off from itself.

Air has some degree of tenacity, whereby the parts attract one another; at the same time, by their elasticity, the particles of air have a power of repulsion or flying off from one another.

Arbutnot.
REPU'LIVE. adj. [from repulse.] Driving off; having the power to beat back or drive off.

The parts of the salt or vitriol recede from one another, and endeavour to expand themselves, and get as far asunder as the quantity of water, in which they float, will allow; and does not this endeavour imply, that they have a repulsive force by which they fly from one another, or that they attract the water more strongly than one another?

Newton, Opt.
To REPU'RCHASE. v. a. [re and purchase.]
To buy again.

Once more we sit on England's royal throne,
Repurchase'd with the blood of enemies;
What valiant foe-men, like to autumn's corn,
Have we mow'd down in top of all their pride!

Shakespeare.
If the son alien those lands, and repurchase them again in fee, the rules of descents are to be observed, as if he were the original purchaser.

Hale, Law of England.
REPU'TABLE. adj. [from repute.] Honourable; not infamous.

If ever any vice shall become reputable, and be gloried in as a mark of greatness, what can we then expect from the man of honour, but to signalize himself.

Rogers, Sermon.
In the article of danger it is as reputable to elude an enemy as defeat one.

Broome.
REPU'TABLENESS. n. s. [from reputable.]

Knowledge and fame were in as great request as wealth among us now.

Temple.
To REQUE'ST. v. a. [requester, Fr.] To ask; to solicit; to entreat.

To-night we hold a solemn supper, sir,
And I'll request your presence.

Shakespeare, Macbeth.
It was to be requested of Almighty God by prayer, that those kings would seriously fulfil all that hope of peace.

Knolles.
The virgin quire for her request
The god that sits at marriage feast;
He at their invoking came,
But with a scarce well-lighted flame.

Milton, Ep. M. Winch.
In things not unlawful, great persons cannot be properly said to request, because all things considered, they must not be denied.

South, Sermon.
REQUE'STER.† n. s. [from request.] Petitioner; solicitor.

Too much importunity does but teach a wise man how to deny. The more we desire to gain, the more others desire that they may not lose.

The earnestness of the requester teacheth the pe-tioned to be suspicious; and suspicion teaches him how to hold, and fortify.

Junius, Sin Stigmat. (1639), p. 748.

TO REQUICKEN. v. a. [re and quicken.] To reanimate.

By and by the din of war 'gan pierce His ready sense, when straight his doubled spirit Requicken'd what in flesh was fatigued, And to the battle came he. Shakespeare, Coriol.

I spake against the test, but was not heard;
These to rescind, and peacage to restore. Dryden.

RESCISSON.† n. s. [rescission, Fr. rescissus, Lat.] The act of cutting off; abrogation.

If any infer rescission of their estate to have been for idolatry, that the governments of all idolatrous nations should be also dissolved, it followeth not.

Bacon.

No publick or imaginative disavowings, no ceremonial and pompous rescission of our fathers' crimes, can be sufficient to interrupt the succession of the curse, if the children do secretly practise or approve what they in pretence or ceremony disavow.

Bp. Taylor, Serm. (1651,) p. 43.

RESCISSORY.† adj. [rescisoire, Fr. rescissus, Lat.] Having the power to cut off, or abrogate.

St. Lewis and the rest were constrained to yield to the rescissory petitions of their subjects, who complained that the restraint of open combats occasioned multitudes of hidden murders.

Selden, Duello, ch. 4.

Primerose proposed, but half in jest as he assured me, that the better and shorter way would be to pass a general act rescissory (as it was called), annulling all the parliaments that had been held since the year 1633.

Burnet, Hist. of his own Time, K. Ch. II.

TO RESCRIBE. v. a. [rescribo, Lat. rescribere, Fr.]

Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

TO RESEIZE.* v. a. [re and seize.]

1. To seize, or lay hold on, again.

2. To reinstate. See TO RESIEGE.

In wretched prison long he did remaine, Till they outraged had their utmost date, And then therein rescized was againe, And ruled long with honorable state Till he surrendered realme and life to fate.

Spenser, F. Q. ii. x. 45.

RESEIZER. n. s. One that seizes again.

RESEIZURE. n. s. [re and seizure.] Repeated seizure; seizure a second time.

Here we have the charter of foundation; it is now the more easy to judge of the forfeiture or reseizure: deface the image, and you divest the right. Bacon.

RESEMBLABLE.* adj. [from resembler, Fr.] That may be compared. Obsolete.

Man, of soul reasonable,
Is to an angel resemblable.

Gower, Conf. Am. Prol.

RESEMBLANCE. n. s. [resemblance, Fr.]

1. Likeness; similitude; representation.

One main end of poetry and painting is to please; they bear a great resemblance to each other.

Dryden, Dufresnoy.

The quality produced hath commonly no resemblance with the thing producing it; wherefore we look on it as a bare effect of power. Locke.

So chymists boast they have a power,
From the dead ashes of a flower,
Some faint resemblance to produce,
But not the virtue. Swift, Miscell.

I cannot help remarking the resemblance betwixt him and our author in qualities, fame, and fortune.

Pope.

2. Something resembling.

These sensible things, which religion hath allowed, are resemblances formed according to things spiritual, whereunto they serve as a hand to lead, and a way to direct. Hooker.

Fairest resemblance of thy Maker fair,
Thee all things living gaze on. Milton, P. L.

They are but weak resemblances of our intentions, faint and imperfect copies that may acquaint us with the general design, but can never express the life of the original. Addison.

TO RESEMBLE. v. a. [resembler, Fr.]

1. To compare; to represent as like something else.

Most safely may we resemble ourselves to God, in respect of that pure faculty, which is never separate from the love of God.

Raleigh, Hist. of the World.

The torrid parts of Africa are resembled to a libbard's skin, the distance of whose spots represent the disperseness of habitations.

Brewer on Languages.

2. To be like; to have likeness to.

If we see a man of virtues, mixed with infirmities, fall into misfortune, we are afraid that the like misfortunes may happen to ourselves, who resemble the character. Addison.

TO RESEND. v. a. [re and send.] To send back; to send again. Not now in use.

I sent to her, by this same corcomb, Tokens and letters, which she did resend. Shaks.

TO RESENT. v. a. [ressentir, Fr.]

1. To take well or ill.

A serious consideration of the mineral treasures of his territories, and the practical discoveries of them by way of my philosophical theory, he then so well resented, that afterwards, upon a mature digestion of my whole design, he commanded me to let your lordships understand, how great an inclination he hath to further so hopeful a work. Bacon.

To be absent from any part of publick worship he thus deeply resented. Fell, Life of Hammond.

2. To take ill; to consider as an injury or affront. This is now the most usual sense.

Thou with scorn

And anger would'st resent the offer'd wrong. Milton, P. L.

Such proceedings have been always resented, and often punished in this kingdom. Davenant.

RESENTER.† n. s. [from resent.]

1. One who takes a thing well or ill.

Honour is not only the guardian and parent of other virtues, but is a virtue of itself, which renders man a grateful resenter and requiter of courtesies. Barron, vol. i. S. 4.

2. One who feels injuries deeply: the most usual sense.

The earl was the worst philosopher, being a great resenter, and a weak dissembler of the least disgrace. Wotton.

RESENTFUL.† adj. [resent and full.] Malignant; easily provoked to anger, and long retaining it; full of resentment.

Pope was as resentful of an imputation of the roundness of his back, as marshal Luxembourg is reported to have been on the sarcasm of king William. Tyers, Hist. Rhaps. on Pope, p. 6.

To soften the obdurate, to convince the mistaken, to mollify the resentful, are worthy of a statesman. Johnson, Journ. West. Islands.

RESENTINGLY. adv. [from resenting.]

RESENTMENT.† n. s. [ressentiment, Fr.]

1. Strong perception of good or ill.

He retains vivid resentments of the more solid morality.

This psalm begins with an hallelujah—in which the people of God express a just resentment and grateful acknowledgment of the chiefest merics received by their fathers.

Bp. Pearson, Sermon, 5 Nov. (1673.)
Some faces we admire and doat on; others, in our impartial apprehensions, no less deserving, we can behold without resentment; yea, with an invincible disregard.

What he hath of sensible evidence, the very groundwork of his demonstration, is but the knowledge of his own resentment; but how the same things appear to others, they only know that are conscious to them; and how they are in themselves, only he that made them.

2. Deep sense of injury; like sense often continued; sometimes simply anger.

Can heavenly minds such high resentment show, Or exercise their spite in human woe? Dryden.

I cannot, without some envy, and a just resentment against the opposite conduct of others, reflect upon that generosity, wherewith the heads of a struggling faction treat those who will undertake to hold a pen in their defence.

Though it is hard to judge of the hearts of people, yet where they declare their resentment and uneasiness at any thing, there they pass the judgment upon themselves.

RESERVATION. n. s. [reservation, Fr.]

1. Reserve; concealment of something in the mind.

Nor had I any reservations in my own soul, when I passed that bill, nor repentings after.

We swear with jesuitical equivocations and mental reservations.

2. Something kept back; something not given up.

With reservation of an hundred knights, By you to be sustain'd, shall our abode Make with you by due turns.

This is academical reservation in matters of easy truth, or rather sceptical infidelity against the evidence of reason.

These opinions Steele and his faction are endeavouring to propagate among the people concerning the present ministry; with what reservation to the honour of the queen, I cannot determine.

3. Custody; state of being treasured up.

In heedful'st reservation, to bestow them As notes, whose faculties inclusive were, More than they of note.

RESERVATIVE. adj. [reservatif, Fr.] Reserving. Not now in use.

TO RESERVE. v. a. [reserver, Fr. reservo, Lat.]

1. To keep in store; to save to some other purpose.

I could add many probabilities of the names of places; but they should be too long for this, and I reserve them for another.

Hast thou seen the treasures of the hail, which I have reserved against the day of trouble?

David houghed all the chariot horses, but reserved of them for an hundred chariots.

2. To retain; to keep; to hold.

Reserve thy state, with better judgment check This hideous rashness.

Will he reserve his anger for ever? Will he keep it to the end?

3. To lay up to a future time.

The Lord knoweth how to deliver the godly out of temptations, and to reserve the unjust unto the day of judgment to be punished.

Conceal your esteem and love in your own breast, and reserve your kind looks and language for private hours.

RESERVE. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Store kept untouched, or undiscovered.

The assent may be withheld upon this suggestion, that I know not yet all that may be said; and therefore, though I be beaten, it is not necessary I should yield, not knowing what forces there are in reserve behind.

2. Something kept for exigence.

The virgins, besides the oil in their lamps, carried likewise a reserve in some other vessel for a continual supply.

3. Something concealed in the mind.

However any one may concur in the general scheme, it is still with certain reserves and deviations, and with a salvo to his own private judgement.

4. Exception; prohibition.

'Tis enough to lose the legacy, or the residuary advantage of the estate left him by the deceased.

Ayliffe.

RESIDUE. n. s. [residu, Fr. residuum, Lat.] The remaining part; that which is left.

The causes are all such as expel the most volatile parts of the blood, and fix the residue.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

To RESEIZE.† v. a. [re and siege, Fr.] To seat again. Dr. Johnson has cited Spenser for his authority; but Spenser's word is not reseize: it is rescize. See the second sense of To RESEIZE, which Dr. Johnson overpassed.

To RESIGN. v. a. [resigner, Fr. resigno, Lat.]

1. To give up a claim or possession.

Resign

Your crown and kingdom, indirectly held. Shaks.
I'll to the king, and signify to him,
That thus I have resign'd to you my charge.

Shakspeare.

To her thou didst resign thy place. Milton, P. L.
Phœbus resigns his darts, and Jove
His thunder to the god of love. Denham.
Every Ismena would resign her breast;
And every dear Hippolytus be blest. Prior.

2. To yield up.

Whoever shall resign their reasons, either from the root of deceit in themselves, or inability to resist such trivial inganations from others, although their condition may place them above the multitude, yet are they still within the line of vulgarity.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

Desirous to resign and render back

All I receiv'd.

Those, who always resign their judgement to the last man they heard or read, truth never sinks into those men's minds; but, camelion-like, they take the colour of what is laid before them, and as soon lose and resign it to the next that comes in their way. Locke.

3. To give up in confidence: with up emphatical.

What more reasonable, than that we should in all things resign up ourselves to the will of God?

Tillotson.

4. To submit; particularly to submit to providence.

Happy the man, who studies nature's laws,
His mind possessing in a quiet state,
Fearless of fortune, and resign'd to fate. Dryden.

A firm, yet cautious, mind,

Sincere, though prudent; constant, yet resign'd.
Pope.

5. To submit without resistance or murmur.

What thou art, resign to death. Shaks. Hen. VI.

RESIGN.* n. s. [from the verb.] Resignation.

Than you could lose by your resign of Empire.

Beaumont and Fl. Coronation.

RESIGNATION. n. s. [resignation, Fr.]

1. The act of resigning or giving up a claim or possession.

Do that office of thine own good will;

The resignation of thy state and crown.

Shakspeare, Rich. II.

He intended to procure a resignation of the rights of the king's majesty's sisters and others, entitled to the possession of the crown. Hayward.

2. Submission; unresisting acquiescence.

We cannot expect that any one should readily quit his own opinion, and embrace ours, with a blind resignation to an authority, which the understanding acknowledges not. Locke.

There is a kind of sluggish resignation, as well as poorness and degeneracy of spirit in a state of slavery, that very few will recover themselves out of it. Addison.

3. Submission without murmur to the will of God.

RESIGNEDLY.* adv. [from resigned.] With resignation.

RESIGNER. n. s. [from resign.] One that resigns.

RESIGNMENT.† n. s. [from resign.] Act of resigning.

Having broken the business by three demands; the resignment of Breda and Guelder, the dismantling of Rheinberg, and the equality of free exercise of religion on either side.

Watson, Rem. p. 459.

Here I am, by his command, to cure ye,
Nay more, for ever, by his full resignment.

Beaumont and Fl. Mons. Thomas.

To RESILE.* v. n. [resilio, Lat.] To start back; to fly from a purpose.

Being overpowered against my own judgement, I was so weak as to resile, and recal what I had said.

Ellis's Retractions, &c. (1662.) p. 18.

RESILIENCE.† n. s. [from resilio, Lat.] RESILIENCY. } The act of starting or leaping back.

If you strike a ball sidelong, the rebound will be as much the contrary way; whether there be any such resilience in echoes, that is, whether a man shall hear better if he stand aside the body repressing, than if he stand where he speaketh, may be tried. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The common resiliency of the mind from one extreme to another. Johnson, Rambler, No. 110.

RESILIENT. adj. [resiliens, Lat.] Starting or springing back.

RESILI'TION. n. s. [resilio, Lat.] The act of springing back; resilience.

RESIN. n. s. [resine, Fr. resina, Lat.]

The fat sulphurous parts of some vegetable, which is natural or procured by art, and will incorporate with oil or spirit, not an aqueous menstruum. Those vegetable substances that will dissolve in water are gums, those that will not dissolve and mix but with spirits or oils are resins. Quincy.

RESINOUS. adj. [from resin; resineux, Fr.] Containing resin; consisting of resin.

Resinous gums dissolved in spirit of wine, are let fall again, if the spirit be copiously diluted.

Boyle on Colours.

RESINOUSNESS. n. s. [from resinous.] The quality of being resinous.

RESPISCENCE.† n. s. [respiciscence, Fr. respicencia, low Lat.] Wisdom after the fact; repentance.

So powerful is the impression of a Divinity in human nature, that the most erring beliefs are forced to discern the utility, and the most perverted lives the necessity, of such a sovereign; who abounds with such benignity even towards these irritations, that he provides motives respectively proper for the rectifying each of these errors; offering the ingenuous reason, and the sensual fear, towards their disabuse and respiciscence.

W. Mountague, Dev. Ess. P. ii. (1654.) p. 47.

To RESIST. v. a. [resisto, Lat. resister, Fr.]

1. To oppose; to act against.

Submit yourselves to God; resist the devil, and he will flee from you. Ja. iv. 7.

To do ill our sole delight,

As being the contrary to his high will
Whom we resist. Milton, P. L.

Not more almighty to resist our might
Than wise to frustrate all our plots and wiles.
Milton, P. L.
Some forms, though bright, no mortal man can bear,
Some, none resist, though not exceeding fair.

2. Not to admit impression or force.
Nor keen nor solid could resist that edge.

To RESIST. v. n. To make opposition.

All the regions
Do seemingly revolt; and, who resist,
Are mock'd for valiant ignorance,
And perish constant fools. Shakespeare, Coriol.
RESISTANCE. } n. s. [resistance, Fr. This RESISTENCE. } word, like many others, is differently written, as it is supposed to have come from the Latin or the French.]

1. The act of resisting; opposition.

Demetrius, seeing that the land was quiet, and that no resistance was made against him, sent away all his forces. 1 Mac.

2. The quality of not yielding to force or external impression.

The resistance of bone to cold is greater than of flesh; for that the flesh shrinketh, but the bone resisteth, whereby the cold becometh more eager.

Musick so softens and disarms the mind,
That not an arrow does resistance find. Waller.
The idea of solidity we receive by our touch, and it arises from the resistance which we find in body to the entrance of any other body into the place it possesses. Locke.

But that part of the resistance which arises from the vis inertiae, is proportional to the density of the matter, and cannot be diminished by dividing the matter into smaller parts, nor by any other means than by decreasing the density of the medium.
Newton, Opt.

RESISTANT.* n. s. [from resist.] Whoever ever of whatever opposes or resists.

According to the degrees of power in the agent and resistant, is an action performed or hindered.
Pearson on the Creed, Art. 6.

RESISTER.* n. s. [from resist.] One who makes opposition.

To the resistors, and violent contemners, it burns and consumes like lightning.

Such are all resistors of God's spirit, wicked in the highest degree. South, Sermon.

RESISTIBILITY. n. s. [from resistible.]

1. Quality of resisting.

Whether the resistibility of Adam's reason did not equivalence the facility of Eve's seduction, we refer unto schoolmen. Brown, Vulg. Err.

The name body, being the complex idea of extension and resistibility, together, in the same subject, these two ideas are not exactly one and the same. Locke.

2. Quality of being resistible.

It is from corruption, and liberty to do evil,
meeting with the resistibility of this sufficient grace,
that one resists it. Hammond.

RESISTIBLE. adj. [from resist.] That may be resisted.

That is irresistible; this, though potent, yet is in its own nature resistible by the will of man;
though it many times prevails by its efficacy.

Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

RESISTIVE.* adj. [from resist.] Having power to resist.

I have an excellent new fucus made,
Resistive 'gainst the sun, the rain, or wind,
Which you shall lay on with a breath or oil.

B. Jonson, Sejanus.

RESISTLESS.† adj. [from resist.]

1. Irresistible; that cannot be opposed.

Our own eyes do every where behold the sudden and resistless assaults of death.

Raleigh, Hist. of the World.
All at once to force resistless way. Milton, P. L.
Since you can love, and yet your error see,
The same resistless power may plead for me.

Dryden.

She chang'd her state;
Resistless in her love, as in her hate. Dryden.
Though thine eyes resistless glances dart,
A stronger charm is thine, a generous heart.

Logie.

2. That cannot resist; helpless.

Like a grim lion rushing with fierce might
Out of his den, he seized greedily
On the resistless prey. Spenser, Muirpotmos.

RESISTLESSLY.* adv. [from resistless.]

So as not to be opposed or denied.

'Tis resistlessly plain, that the divine writers do not always confine themselves to plain and common grammar, but often express their vigorous sentiments in the language of the figurative construction. Blackwall, Sac. Class. i. 61.

RESOLVABLE. adj. [from resolve.]

1. That may be referred or reduced.

Pride is of such intimate connection with ingratitude, that the actions of ingratitude seem directly resolvable into pride, as the principal reason of them. South.

2. Dissoluble; admitting separation of parts.

As the serum of the blood is resolvable by a small heat, a greater heat coagulates, so as to turn it horny, like parchment. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

3. Capable of solution or of being made less obscure.

The effect is wonderful in all, and the causes best resolvable from observations made in the countries themselves, the parts through which they pass.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

RESOLUBLE. adj. [resoluble, Fr. re and solubilis, Lat.] That may be melted or dissolved.

Three is not precisely the number of the distinct elements, whereinto mixt bodies are resolvable by fire. Boyle.

To RESOLVE.† v. a. [resolvo, Lat. resoudre, Fr.]

1. To inform; to free from a doubt or difficulty.

In all things then are our consciences best resolved, and in most agreeable sort unto God and nature resolved, when they are so far persuaded,
as those grounds of persuasion will bear. Hooker.

Give me some breath,

Before I positively speak in this;

I will resolve your grace immediately.

Shakespeare, Rich. III.

I cannot brook delay, resolve me now;

And what your pleasure is, shall satisfy me.

Shakespeare.

Resolve me, strangers, whence and what you are? Dryden.

2. To solve; to clear.

Examine, sift, and resolve their alleged proofs,
till you come to the very root whence they spring, and it shall clearly appear, that the most which can be inferred upon such plenty of divine testimonies, is only this, that some things, which they maintain do seem to have been out of Scripture not absurdly gathered. Hooker.

I resolve the riddle of their loyalty, and give them opportunity to let the world see, they mean not what they do, but what they say.

King Charles.

He always bent himself rather judiciously to resolve, than by doubts to perplex a business.

Hayward.

The graves, when they have attained to the knowledge of these repose, will easily resolve those difficulties which perplex them.

Dryden, Dryfrensy.
The man, who would resolve the work of fate,
May limit number.

Happiness, it was resolved by all, must be some one uniform end, proportioned to the capacities of human nature, attainable by every man, independent on fortune. Rogers.

3. To settle in an opinion.

Good or evil actions, commanded or prohibited by laws and precepts simply moral, may be resolved into some dictates and principles of the law of nature, imprinted on man's heart at the creation. White.

Long since we were resolved of your truth,
Your faithful service, and your toil in war. Shaks.

4. To fix in a determination. This sense is rather neutral, though in these examples the form be passive.

Good proof
This day affords, declaring thee resolv'd
To undergo with me one guilt. Milton, P. L.

I run to meet th' alarms,
Resolv'd on death, resolv'd to die in arms. Dryden.
Resolv'd for sea, the slaves thy baggage pack;
Nothing retards thy voyage, unless
Thy other lord forbids voluptuousness.

Dryden, Pers.

5. To fix in constancy; to confirm.

Quit presently the chapel, or resolve you
For more amazement:

I'll make the statue move. Shakespeare.

6. To melt; to dissolve; to disperse.

He commended his soul into the hands of God,
and so departed hence most christianly; his body
resolved into ashes.

Bale, Brief Chron. of Ld. Cobham.
The waters, having now received spirit and motion, resolved their thinner parts into air.

Raleigh, Hist. of the World, i. § 7.

O that this too solid flesh would melt,
Thaw, and resolve itself into a dew!

Shakespeare, Hamlet.
Resolving is bringing a fluid, which is new concreted, into the state of fluidity again.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.
Vegetable salts resolve the coagulated humours of a human body, and attenuate, by stimulating the solids, and dissolving the fluids.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

7. To relax; to lay at ease.

And how his limbs, resolv'd through idle leisure,
Unto sweet sleep he may securely lend.

Spenser, Virg. Gnat.

Loos'd whole

In pleasure and security — each house

Resolv'd in freedom. B. Jonson, Catiline.

8. To analyse; to reduce.

Into what can we resolve this strong inclination of mankind to this error? it is altogether unimaginable, but that the reason of so universal a consent should be constant.

Tillotson.

Ye immortal souls, who once were men,

And now resolv'd to elements agen. Dryden.

The decretals turn upon this point, and resolve all into a monarchical power at Rome.

Baker on Learning.

To RESOLVE. v. n.

1. To determine; to decree within one's self.

Confirm'd, then, I resolve
Adam shall share with me. Milton, P. L.

Covetousness is like the sea, that receives the tribute of all rivers, though far unlike it in lending any back; therefore those, who have resolved upon the thriving sort of piety, have seldom enbarked all their hopes in one bottom.

Dec. of Chr. Piety.

2. To melt; to be dissolved.

Have I not hideous death within my view?
Retaining but a quantity of life,

3. Worthy of reverence. Not in use.

What should it be, that he respects in her,
But I can make respective in myself? Shakespeare.

4. Careful; cautious; attentive to consequences. Obsolete.

Respective and wary men had rather seek quietly their own, and wish that the world may go well, so it be not long of them, than with pain and hazard make themselves advisers for the common good.

Hooker.

He was exceedingly respective and precise.

Raleigh.

RESPECTIVELY. adv. [from respective.]

1. Particularly; as each belongs to each.

The interruption of trade between the English and Flemish began to pinch the merchants of both nations, which moved them by all means to dispose their sovereigns respectively to open the intercourse again.

Bacon.

The impressions from the objects or the senses do mingle respectively every one with his kind.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Good and evil are in morality, as the east and west are in the frame of the world, founded in and divided by that fixed and unalterable situation, which they have respectively in the whole body of the universe.

South, Serm.

The principles of those governments are respectively disclaimed and abhorred by all the men of sense and virtue in both parties.

Addison, Freeholder.

2. Relatively; not absolutely.

If there had been no other choice, but that Adam had been left to the universal, Moses would not then have said, eastward in Eden, seeing the world had not east nor west, but respectively.

Raleigh, Hist. of the World.

3. Partially; with respect to private views. Obsolete.

Among the ministers themselves, one being so far in estimation above the rest, the voices of the rest were likely to be given for the most part respectively with a kind of secret dependency.

Hooker, Pref.

4. With great reverence. Not in use.

Honest Flaminus, you are very respectively welcome.

Shakespeare, Timon.

RESPECTLESS.* adj. [from respect and less.]

Having no respect; without regard; without consideration; without reverence.

The Cambrian part, respectless of their power.

Drayton, Polyolb. S. 12.

'Tis the common fortune of most scholars to be servile and poor, to complain pitifully, and lay open their wants to their respectless patrons.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 131.

He that is so respectless in his courses, Oft sells his reputation at cheap market.

B. Jonson, Every Man in his Humour.

The Hollander [is] more surly, and respectless of gentry and strangers. Hawell, Lett. i. li. 15.

In their conversation, austere and respectless.

Sandys, Christ's Pass. p. 94.

Prevent all inconvenience that might arise out of disdainful and respectless carriage.

Hales, Rem. p. 28.

RESPECTLESSNESS.* n. s. [from respectless.]

[State of being respectless; inattention; regardlessness.

That which he did, was to lay his elbow on the arm of his chair, and his hand on his cheek; desiring Camilla to bear with his respectlessness therein.

Shelton, Tr. of D. Quixote, iv. 6.

To RESPERSE.* v. a. [from resperus, Lat.]

To sprinkle; to disperse in small masses.

Take David's psalter, or the other hymns of holy Scripture, or any of the prayers which are respersed over the Bible.

Ep. Taylor, Disc. on Estemp. Prayer, § 31.

Love and consider the rare documents of Christianity, which certainly is the greatest treasure-house of those excellent, moral, and perfective discourses, which with much pains and greater pleasure we find respersed and thinly scattered in all the Greek and Roman poets, historians, and philosophers.

Ep. Taylor, Great Exempl. Pref.

RESPERSION. n. s. [from respersio, Lat.]

The act of sprinkling.

RESPIRATION.† n. s. [from respiration, Fr.

respiratio, from respiro, Lat.]

1. The act of breathing.

Apollonius of Tyana affirmed, that the ebbing and flowing of the sea was the respiration of the world, drawing in water as breath, and putting it forth again.

Bacon.

Syrups or other expectoratives do not advantage in coughs, by slipping down between the epiglottis; for, as I instance before, that must necessarily occasion a greater cough and difficulty of respiration.

Harvey on Consumptions.

The Author of nature foreknew the necessity of rains and dews to the present structure of plants, and the uses of respiration to animals; and therefore created those corresponding properties in the atmosphere.

Bentley, Serm.

2. Relief from toil.

Appear of respiration to the just,
And vengeance to the wicked.

Milton, P. L.

3. Interval.

Some meet respiration of a more full trial and inquiry into each other's condition.

By. Hall, Cases of Conscience.

To RESPIRE. v. n. [from respiro, Lat. respirer, French.]

1. To breathe.

The ladies gasp'd, and scarcely could respire;
The breath they drew, no longer air, but fire,
The faint knights were scor'd.

Dryden.

2. To catch breath.

Till breathless both themselves aside retire;
Where foaming wrath, their cruel tasks they whet,
And trample th' earth the whiles they may respire.

Spenser.

I, a prisoner chain'd, scarce freely draw
The air imprison'd also, close and damp,
Unwholesome draught; but here I feel amends,
The breath of heaven fresh blowing, pure, and sweet,

With day-spring born; here leave me to respire.

Milton, S. A.

3. To rest; to take rest from toil.

Hark! he strikes the golden lyre;
And see! the tortur'd ghosts respire,
See shady forms advance!

Pope, St. Cecilia.

To RESPIRE.* v. a. To breathe out; to send out in exhalations.

The air respires the pure Elysian sweets
In which she breathes, and from her looks descend
The glories of the summer.

B. Jonson, Poetaster.

RESPIRABLE.* adj. [from respire.] That can respire.RESPIRATORY.* adj. [from respire.] Having power to respire.

In the construction of the respiratory organs, a bird and a snake are not the same.

Hunter.

RESPITE. n. s. [from respit, Fr.]

1. Reprieve; suspension of a capital sentence.

I had hope to spend
Quiet, though sad, the respite of that day,
That must be mortal to us both.

Milton, P. L.

Wisdom and eloquence in vain would plead
One moment's respite for the learned head;
Judges of writings and of men have dy'd.

Prior.

2. Pause; interval.

The fox then counsel'd th' ape, for to require
Respite till morrow, to answer his desire. Spenser.
This customary war, which troubleth all the world, giveth little respite or breathing time of peace, doth usually borrow pretence from the necessary, to make itself appear more honest.

Raleigh, Ess.

Some pause and respite only I require,
Till with my tears I shall have quench'd my fire.

Denham.

To RESPITE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To relieve by a pause.

In what bower or shade
Thou find'st him, from the heat of noon retir'd,
To respite his day labour with repast,
Or with repose.

Milton, P. L.

2. [Respit, old Fr.] To suspend; to delay.

An act pass'd for the satisfaction of the officers of the king's army, by which they were promised payment, in November following; till which time they were to respite it, and be contented that the common soldiers and inferior officers should be satisfied upon their disbanding.

Clarendon.

RESPLENDENCE. } n. s. [from resplendens.]

RESPLENDENCY. } Lustre; brightness; splendour.

Son! thou in whom my glory I behold
In full resplendence, heir of all my might.

Milton, P. L.

To neglect that supreme resplendency, that shines in God, for those dim representations of it in the creature, is as absurd as it were for a Persian to offer his sacrifice to a parhelion instead of adoring the sun.

Boyle.

RESPLENDENT. adj. [from resplendens, Lat.]

Bright; shining; having a beautiful lustre.

Rich in commodities, beautiful in situation, resplendent in all glory.

Camden, Rem.

There all within full rich array'd he found,
With royal arras and resplendent gold.

Spenser.

The ancient electrum had in it a fifth of silver to the gold, and made a compound metal, as fit for most uses as gold, and more resplendent.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Every body looks more splendid and luminous in the light of its own colour: cinnabar in the homogenous light is most resplendent, in the green light it is manifestly less resplendent, in the blue light still less.

Newton, Opt.

Resplendent brass, and more resplendent dames.

Pope.

Empress of this fair world, resplendent Eve!

Milton, P. L.

RESPLENDENTLY. adv. [from resplendens.] With lustre; brightly; splendidly.To RESPOND.† v. n. [from respondeo, Lat. responde, French.]

Christian Antiq. vol. ii. p. 111.

RESP'NSE. n. s. [responsum, Lat.]

1. An answer; commonly an oracular answer.

More natural piety has taught men to receive the responses of the gods with all possible veneration.

Gov. of the Tongue.

The oracles, which had before flourished, began to droop, and from giving responses in verse, descended to prose, and within a while were utterly silenced.

Hammond.

2. [Respons, Fr.] Answer made by the congregation, speaking alternately with the priest in public worship.

To make his parishioners kneel and join in the responses, he gave every one of them a hassock and Common Prayer Book.

Addison, Spect.

3. Reply to an objection in a formal disputation.

Let the respondent not turn opponent; except in retorting the argument upon his adversary after a direct response; and even this is allowed only as a confirmation of his own response.

Watts on the Mind.

RESPONSIBILITY.* n. s. [from responsibile; Fr. responsibilit .] State of being accountable or answerable.

Where I speak of responsibility, I do not mean to exclude that species of it, which the legal powers of the country have a right finally to exact from those who abuse a public trust; but high as this is, there is a responsibility which attaches on them, from which the whole legitimate power of this kingdom cannot absolve them; there is a responsibility to conscience and to glory; a responsibility to the existing world, and to that posterity, which men of their eminence cannot avoid for glory or for shame; a responsibility to a tribunal, at which not only ministers, but kings and parliaments, but even nations themselves, must one day answer.

Burke on a Regicide Peace, Lett. 3.

RESP'NSIBLE. adj. [from responsus, Lat.]

1. Answerable; accountable.

Heathens, who have certainly the talent of natural knowledge, are responsible for it.

Hammond.

He as much satisfies the itch of telling news; he as much persuades his hearers; and all this while he has his retreat secure, and stands not responsible for the truth of his relations.

Gov. of the Tongue.

2. Capable of discharging an obligation.

The necessity of a proportion of money to trade depends on money as a pledge, which writing cannot supply the place of; since the bill, I receive from one man, will not be accepted as security by another, he not knowing that the bill is legal, or that the man bound is honest or responsible.

VOL. III.

Locke.

All things retir'd to rest,

Milton, P. L.

My tost limbs are wearied into rest.

Pope.

2. The final sleep; the quietness of death.

Oft with holy hymns he charm'd their ears;

For David left him, when he went to rest,

His lyre.

Dryden.

3. Stillness; cessation or absence of motion.

Putrefaction asketh rest; for the subtle motion, which putrefaction requireth, is disturbed by any agitation.

Bacon.

What cause mov'd the Creator, in his holy rest,

So late to build?

Milton, P. L.

All things past are equally and perfectly at rest; and to this way of consideration of them are all one, whether they were before the world, or but yesterday.

Locke.

4. Quiet; peace; cessation from disturbance.

Learn of me, for I am meek and lowly in heart; and ye shall find rest unto your souls.

St. Matt. xi. 29.

He giveth you rest from all your enemies.

Deut. xii. 10.

'Scap'd from such storms of power, holding it best

To be below herself to be at rest.

Daniel, Civil War.

The root cut off from whence these tumults rose, He should have rest, the commonwealth repose.

Daniel.

Thus fenc'd, but not at rest or ease of mind.

Milton, P. L.

Where can a frail man hide him? in what arms Shall a short life enjoy a little rest?

Fanshawe.

With what a load of vengeance am I prest,

Yet never, never, can I hope for rest:

For when my heavy burden I remove,

The weight falls down, and crushes her I love.

Dryden.

Like the sun, it had light and agility; it knew no rest but in motion, no quiet but in activity.

South, Serm.

Thither, where sinners may have rest, I go.

Pope.

The grave, where ev'n the great find rest.

Pope.

5. Cessation from bodily labour.

The weary be at rest.

Job, iii. 17.

The Christian chuseth for his day of rest, the first day of the week, that he might thereby profess himself a servant of God, who on the morning of that day vanquished Satan.

Nelson.

6. Support; that on which any thing leans or rests.

Forth prick'd Clorinda from the throng, And 'gainst Tancredie set her spear in rest.

Fairfax.

A man may think, that a musket may be shot off as well upon the arm as upon a rest; but when all is done, good counsel setteth business straight.

Bacon.

Their visors clos'd, their lances in the rest, Or at the helmet pointed, or the crest;

They speed the race.

Dryden, Kru. Tale.

Take the handle in your right hand, and clasp the blade of it in your left, lean it steady upon the rest, holding the edge a little aslant over the work, so as a corner of the thin side of the chisel may bear upon the rest, and the flat side of the chisel may make a small angle with the rest.

Moxon.

7. Place of repose.

Sustain'd by him with comforts, till we end

In dust, our final rest, and native home.

Milton, P. L.

8. Final hope.

Sea fights have been final to the war, but this is, when princes set up their rest upon the battle.

Bacon.

This answer would render their counsels of less reverence to the people, if upon those reasons they should recede from what they had, with that confidence and disdain of the house of peers, demanded of the king; they therefore resolved to set up their rest upon that stake, and to go through with it, or perish in the attempt.

Clarendon.

9. [Reste, Fr. quod restat, Lat.] Remainder; what remains.

Religion gives part of its reward in hand, the present comfort of having done our duty; and for the rest, it offers us the best security that heaven can give.

Tillotson.

The power in glory shone, By her bent bow and her keen arrows known, The rest a huntress.

Dryden, Kru. Tale.

10. [In music.] An interval, during which the sound or voice is intermitted.

If there are any rests succeeding the pause, the performer's attention to the leading instrument will direct him when these [all the parts] are to commence.

Avison on Musical Expression, p. 117.

In a musical movement we usually find various rests, as the strain proceeds, answering to commas in verbal punctuation.

Mason on Church Musick, p. 14.

11. [In poetry.] A pause or rest of the voice; a c sura.

REST. adj. [reste, Fr. quod restat, Latin.] Others; those not included in any proposition.

By description of their qualities, many things may be learned concerning the rest of the inhabitants.

Abbot.

They had no other consideration of the publick than that no disturbance might interrupt their quiet in their own days; and that the rest, who had larger hearts, and more publick spirits, would extend their labour, activity, and advice only to secure the empire at home by all peaceable arts.

Clarendon.

Plato, and the rest of the philosophers, acknowledged the unity, power, wisdom, goodness, and providence of the supreme God.

Stillingfleet.

Arm'd like the rest, the Trojan prince appears, And by his pious labour urges them.

Dryden.

Upon so equal terms did they all stand, that no one had fairer pretence of right than the rest.

Woodward.

TO REST.† v. n. [from the noun; Saxon, percan.]

1. To sleep; to be asleep; to slumber.

Fancy then retires

Into her private cell, when nature rests.

Milton, P. L.

2. To sleep the final sleep; to die.

Ἐπὶ δὲ τῷ δύνῳ

Καμψάρας ὁρίζονος πύλῃς τοὺς ἀγαθούς.

I should have lain still, and been quiet; I should have slept; then had I been at rest with kings, &c. There the prisoners rest together, they hear not the voice of the oppressor.

Job, lii. 13—18.

Glad I'd lay me down,

As in my mother's lap; there I should rest
And sleep secure.

Milton, P. L.

3. To be at quiet; to be at peace; to be without disturbance.

The wicked are like the troubled sea, when it cannot rest, whose waters cast up mire and dirt.

Isaiah, lvii. 20.

Thither let us tend

From off the tossing of these fiery waves,
There rest, if any rest can harbour there.

When you enter into the regions of death, you rest from all your labours and your fears.

Bp. Taylor, Rule of Living Holy.

7. To be satisfied; to acquiesce.

To urge the foe to battle,

Prompted by blind revenge and wild despair,

Were to refuse the awards of providence,
And not to rest in heaven's determination.

Addison.

8. To lean; to recline for support or quiet.

On him I rested,

And not without considering, fix'd my fate.

Dryden.

Sometimes it rests upon testimony, when testimony of right has nothing to do; because it is easier to believe, than to be scientifically instructed.

Locke.

The philosophical use of words conveys the precise notions of things, which the mind may rest upon, and be satisfied with, in its search after knowledge.

Locke.

9. [Resto, Lat. rester, Fr.] To be left; to remain.

Fall'n he is; and now

What rests, but that the mortal sentence pass

On his transgression?

Milton, P. L.

There rests the comparative; that is, its being granted, that it is either lawful or binding, yet whether other things be not preferred before it, as extirpation of heresies.

Bacon.

To REST. v. a.

1. To lay to rest.

Your piety has paid

All needful rites, to rest my wand'ring shade.

Dryden.

2. To place as on a support.

As the vex'd world, to find repose, at last

Itself into Augustus' arms did cast;

So England now doth, with like toil oppress,

Her weary head upon your bosom rest.

Waller.

The protestants having well studied the fathers, were now willing to rest their cause, not upon Scripture only, but fathers too; so far at least as the three first centuries.

Waterland.

Here rests his head upon the lap of earth,

A youth to fortune and to fame unknown.

Gray.

REST'AGNANT. adj. [restagnans, Lat.] Remaining without flow or motion.

Upon the tops of high mountains, the air, which bears against the restagnant quicksilver, is less pressed by the less ponderous incumbent air.

To every virtue lent his helping stores.

Dyer, Fleecie, B. 2.

RESTITUTION. n. s. [restitutio, Lat.]

1. The act of restoring what is lost or taken away.

To subdue an usurper, should be no unjust enterprise or wrongful war, but a restitution of ancient rights unto the crown of England, from whence they were most unjustly expelled and long kept out.

Spenser on Ireland.

He would pawn his fortunes

To hopeless restitution, so he might

Be call'd your vanquisher.

Shakspeare, Coriol.

He restitution to the value makes;

Nor joy in his extorted treasure takes.

Sandys.

Whosoever is an effective real cause of doing a neighbour wrong, by what instrument soever he does it, is bound to make restitution.

Bp. Taylor, Rule of Living Holy.

In case our offence against God hath been complicated with injury to men, it is but reasonable we should make restitution.

Tillotson, Serm.

A great man, who has never been known willingly to pay a just debt, ought not all of a sudden to be introduced, making restitution of thousands he has cheated: let it suffice to pay twenty pounds to a friend, who has lost his note.

Arbutnot.

2. The act of recovering its former state or posture.

In the woody parts of plants, which are their bones, the principles are so compounded, as to make them flexible without joints, and also elastic; that so their roots may yield to stones, and their trunks to the wind, with a power of restitution. Grew, Cosmol.

RESTITUTOR.* n. s. [restitutor, Lat.] A restorer.

Their rescuer, or restitutor, Quixote.

Till the fresh air proclaim'd the morning nigh:
And burning ships, the martyrs of the fight,
With paler fires beheld the eastern sky. Dryden.

2. Unquiet; without peace.

Ease to the body some, none to the mind
From restless thoughts, that like a deadly swarm
Of hornets arm'd, no sooner found alone,
But rush upon me thronging, and present
Times past, what once I was, and what am now.

Milton, S. A.

Could we not wake from that lethargic dream,
But to be restless in a worse extreme? Denham.

We find our souls disorder'd and restless, tossed and disquieted by passions, ever seeking happiness in the enjoyments of this world, and ever missing what they seek. Atterbury.

What tongue can speak the restless monarch's woes,

When God and Nathan were declar'd his foes? Prior.

3. Unconstant; unsettled.

He was stout of courage, strong of hand,
Bold was his heart, and restless was his spirit.

Fairfax.

He's proud, fantastick, apt to change,
Restless at home, and ever prone to range.

Dryden.

4. Not still; in continual motion.

How could nature on their orbs impose
Such restless revolution, day by day

Milton, P. L.

RE'STLESSLY. adv. [from restless.] Without rest; unquietly.

When the mind casts and turns itself restlessly from one thing to another, strains this power of the soul to apprehend, that to judge, another to divide, a fourth to remember: thus tracing out the nice and scarce observable difference of some things, and the real agreement of others; at length it brings all the ends of a long hypothesis together.

South.

RE'STLESSNESS. n. s. [from restless.]

1. Want of sleep.

Restlessness and intermission from sleep, grieved persons are molested with, whereby the blood is dried. Harvey.

2. Want of rest; unquietness.

Let him keep the rest,
But keep them with repining restlessness!
Let him be rich and weary, that at least,
If goodness lead him not, yet weariness

May toss him to my breast. Herbert.

I sought my bed, in hopes relief to find,
But restlessness was mistress of my mind. Harte.

3. Motion; agitation.

The trembling restlessness of the needle, in any but the north point of the compass, manifests its inclination to the pole; which its wavering and its rest bear equal witness to. Boyle.

RESTORABLE. adj. [from restore.] That may be restored.

By cutting turf without any regularity, great quantities of restorable land are made utterly deperate. Swift.

RESTORAL.* n. s. [from restore.] Restitution. Cotgrave, in V. Recreance.

One part of the Christian faith concerns the promises of pardon to our sins, and restoral into God's favour upon the terms, propounded in the Gospel, of sincere faith and repentance.

Barrow, vol. ii. S. 4.

RESTORATION. n. s. [from restore; re-stauratio, Fr.]

1. The act of replacing in a former state.

This is properly restoration.

Hail, royal Albion, hail to thee,

Thy longing people's expectation!

Sent from the gods to set us free

From bondage and from usurpation:

Behold the different climes agree,

Rejoicing in thy restoration. Dryden.

The Athenians, now deprived of the only person that was able to recover their losses, repent of their rashness, and endeavour in vain for his restoration. Swift.

2. Recovery.

The change is great in this restoration of the man, from a state of spiritual darkness, to a capacity of perceiving divine truth. Rogers.

RESTORATIVE. adj. [from restore.] That has the power to recruit life.

Their taste no knowledge works at least of evil;
But life preserves, destroys life's enemy,
Hunger, with sweet restorative delight.

Milton, P. R.

RESTORATIVE. n. s. [from restore.] A medicine that has the power of recruiting life.

I will kiss thy lips;
Haply some poison yet doth hang on them,
To make me die with a restorative.

Shakespeare, Rom. and Jul.

God saw it necessary by such mortifications to quench the boundless rage of an insatiable intemperance, to make the weakness of the flesh, the physick and restorative of the spirit. South, Serm.

Ass's milk is an excellent restorative in consumptions. Mortimer.

He prescribes an English gallon of ass's milk, especially as a restorative. Arbutnot.

RESTORER. n. s. [from restore.] One that restores; one that recovers the lost;
or repairs the decayed.

Next to the Son,
Destin'd restorer of mankind, by whom
New heaven and earth shall to the ages rise.

Milton, P. L.

I foretel you, as the restorer of poetry. Dryden.
Here are ten thousand persons reduced to the necessity of a low diet and moderate exercise, who are the only great restorers of our breed, without which, the nation would in an age become one great hospital. Swift.

TO RESTRAIN. v. a. [*restreindre, Fr.
restringo, Lat.*]

1. To withhold; to keep in.

If she restrain'd the riots of your followers,
'Tis to such wholesome end as clears her. Shaksp.

The gods will plague thee,
That thou restrain'st bel from me the duty, which
To a mother's part belongs. Shakespeare, Coriol.

2. To repress; to keep in awe.

The law of nature would be in vain, if there were no body that, in the state of nature, had a power to execute that law, and thereby preserve the innocent and restrain offenders. Locke.

That all men may be restrained from doing hurt to one another, the execution of the law of nature is in that state put into every man's hand, whereby every one has a right to punish the transgressors to such a degree as may hinder its violation. Locke.

3. To suppress; to hinder; to repress.

Merciful pow'r!
Restrain in me the curs'd thoughts, that nature
Gives way to in repose. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

Compassion gave him up to tears
A space, till firmer thoughts restrain'd excess.

Milton, P. L.

4. To abridge.

Me of my lawful pleasure she restrain'd,
And pray'd me oft forbearance. Shaks. Cymbeline.
Though they two were committed, at least restrain'd of their liberty, yet this discovered too much of the humour of the court. Clarendon.

5. To hold in.

His horse, with a half-checked bit, and a head-stall of sheep's leather, which being restrained to keep him from stumbling, hath been often burst, and now repaired with knots. Shakespeare.

6. To limit; to confine.

We restrain it to those only duties, which all men, by force of natural wit, understand to be such duties as concern all men. Hooker.

Upon what ground can a man promise himself a future repentance, who cannot promise himself a futurity; whose life depends upon his breath, and is so restrained to the present, that it cannot secure to itself the reversion of the very next minute?

South, Serm.

Not only a metaphysical or natural, but a moral universality also is to be restrained by a part of the predicate; as all the Italians are politicians; that is, those among the Italians, who are politicians, are subtle politicians; i. e. they are generally so.

Watts, Logic.

RESTRAINABLE. adj. [from restrain.]

Capable to be restrained.

Therein we must not deny a liberty; nor is the hand of the painter more restrainable, than the pen of the poet. Brown.

RESTRAIN'DLY. adv. [from restrained.]

With restraint; without latitude.

That Christ's dying for all is the express doctrine of the Scripture, is manifested by the world, which is a word of the widest extent, and although it is sometimes used more restrainedly, yet never doth signify a far smaller disproportionate part of the world. Hammond on Fundamentals.

RESTRAINER. n. s. [from restrain.] One that restrains; one that withholds.

If nothing can relieve us, we must with patience submit unto that restraint, and expect the will of the restrainer.
Brown, Vulg. Err.

RESTRÁINT. n. s. [from restrain; re- streint, Fr.]

1. Abridgement of liberty.

She will well excuse,
Why at this time the doors are barr'd against you:
Depart in patience,
And about evening come yourself alone,
To know the reason of this strange restraint.
Shakespeare.

I request

The enfranchisement of Arthur, whose restraint
Doth move the murr'ing lips of discontent.

It is to no purpose to lay restraints or give privileges to men, in such general terms, as the particular persons concerned cannot be known by.
Locke.

I think it a manifest disadvantage, and a great restraint upon us.
Felton on the Classics.

2. Prohibition.

What mov'd our parents to transgress his will
For one restraint, lords of the world besides?
Milton, P. L.

3. Limitation; restriction.

If all were granted, yet it must be maintained within any bold restraints, far otherwise than it is received.
Brown.

4. Repression; hinderance of will; act of withholding; state of being withheld.

There is no restraint to the Lord to save, by many or by few.
1 Sam. xiv. 6.

Thus it shall befall
Him who, to worth in woman overtrusting,
Lets her will rule; restraint she will not brook.
Milton, P. L.

Is there any thing, which reflects a greater lustre upon a man's person, than a severe temperance, and a restraint of himself from vicious pleasures?
South.

TO RESTRICT.† v. a. [restrictus, Lat.]
To limit; to confine. A word scarce English, Dr. Johnson says; yet it has generally obtained.

In the enumeration of constitutions in this chapter, there is not one that can be limited and restricted by such a distinction, nor can perhaps the same person, in different circumstances, be properly confined to one or the other. Arbuthnot.

We exhort all persons, who keep horses, to restrict the consumption of oats.

Royal Proclamation, Dec. 1800.
RESTRICT.* adj. [restrictus, Lat.] Confined; limited.

No speculative understanding, in that restrict sense above named, makes at pleasure the nature, &c. Annot. on Glanville, &c. (1682), p. 251.

RESTRICTION. n. s. [restriction, French.]
Confinement; limitation.

This is to have the same restriction with all other recreations, that it be made a diversionment, not a trade.
Gov. of the Tongue.

Iron manufacture, of all others, ought the least to be encouraged in Ireland; or, if it be, it requires the most restriction to certain places.
Temple, Miscell.

All duties are matter of conscience; with this restriction, that a superior obligation suspends the force of an inferior. L'Estrange.

Each other gift, which God on man bestows,
Its proper bounds and due restriction knows;
To one fix'd purpose dedicates its power. Prior.
Celsus's rule, with the proper restrictions, is good for people in health. Arbuthnot.

RESTRICTIVE. adj. [from restrict.]

1. Expressing limitation.

They, who would make the restrictive particle belong to the latter clause, and not to the first, do not attend to the reason.
Stillingfleet.

2. [Restrictif, Fr.] Styptick; astringent.

I applied a plaster over it, made up with my common restrictive powder. Wiseman, Surgery.

RESTRICTIVELY. adv. [from restrictive.]
With limitation.

All speech, tending to the glory of God or the good of man, is aright directed; which is not to be understood so restrictively, as if nothing but divinity, or necessary concerns of life, may lawfully be brought into discourse.
Gov. of the Tongue.

TO RESTRINGE. v. a. [restringo, Lat.]

To confine; to contract; to astringe.

RESTRINGENCY.* n. s. [restringens, Lat.]

The power of contracting.

The dyers use this water in reds, and in other colours wanting restringency, and in the dying of materials of the slacker textures.

Sir W. Petty, in Sprat's Hist. R. S. p. 293.

RESTRINGENT. n. s. [restringens, Latin;
restringent, Fr.] That which hath the power of contracting; styptick.

The two latter indicate phlebotomy for revulsion, restringents to staunch, and incrassatives to thicken
the blood. Harvey.

TO RESTRI'VE.* v. n. [re and strive.] To strive anew.

Restriving again afresh, with a kick and a wrench together, I freed my long captivated weapon. Sir E. Sackville, Guardian, No. 193.

RESTY.† adj. [restiff, Fr.] Obstinate in standing still; restiff; as, "a restie ox that will not go forward," Barret; "dull, heavy," Cockeram.

The master is too resty, or too rich, to say his own prayers, or to bless his own table.

Milton, Eiconoclast. § 24.
Have not other hands been tried and found resty? but we stick at nothing. Davenant.

Men of discretion, whom people in power may with little ceremony load as heavy as they please, find them neither resty nor vicious. Swift.

RESUBJECTION.* n. s. [re and subjection.]
A second subjection.

An overture of the likelihood of this liberal dispensation from his holy father of Rome, upon the conditions of our resubjection.

Ep. Hall, Hon. of the Marr. Clergy, p. 14.

TO RESUBLIME. v. a. [re and sublime.] To sublime another time.

When mercury sublimate is resublimed with fresh mercury, it becomes mercurius dulcis, which is a white tasteless earth scarce dissolvable in water, and mercurius dulcis resublimed with spirit of salt returns into mercury sublimate. Newton.

RESUDATION.* n. s. [resudation, Fr. resu- datus, Lat.] Act of sweating out again.

Cotgrave.
TO RESULT. v. n. [resultet, Fr. resulto,
Lat.]

1. To fly back.

With many a weary step, and many a groan,
Up the high hill he heaves a huge round stone;
The huge round stone, resulting with a bound,
Thunders impetuous down, and smokes along the ground. Pope, Odyssey.

2. [Resultet, Fr.] To rise as a consequence; to be produced as the effect of causes jointly concurring.

Rue prospers much, if set by a fig tree; which is caused, not by reason of friendship, but by extraction of a contrary juice; the one drawing juice fit to result sweet, the other bitter.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Such huge extremes, when nature doth unite,
Wonder from thence results, from thence delight.
Denham.

Upon the dissolution of the first earth, this very face of things would immediately result.

Burnet, Theory.
Pleasure and peace do naturally result from a holy and good life. Tillotson, Serm.

The horror of an object may overbear the pleasure resulting from its greatness. Addison.

Their effects are often very disproportionate to the principles and parts that result from the analysis. Baker.

3. To arise as a conclusion from premises.

RESULT. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Resilience; act of flying back.

Sound is produced between the string and the air, by the return or the result of the string, which was strained by the touch to his former place.
Bacon, Nat. Hist.

2. Consequence; effect produced by the concurrence of co-operating causes.

Did my judgment tell me, that the propositions sent to me were the results of the major part of their votes, I should then not suspect my own judgment for not speedily concurring with them.

King Charles.

As in perfumes, compos'd with art and cost,
'Tis hard to say what scent is uppermost,
Nor this part must or civet can we call,
Or amber, but a sweet result of all:
So she was all a sweet, whose ev'ry part,
In due proportion mix'd, proclaim'd the maker's
art. Dryden.

Buying of land is the result of a full and satu-ated gain: men in trade seldom lay out money upon land, till their profit has brought in more than trade can employ. Locke.

3. Inference from premises.

These things are a result or judgement upon fact.
South.

4. Resolve; decision. Improper.

Rude, passionate, and mistaken results have, at certain times, fallen from great assemblies. Swift.

RESULTANCE.† n. s. [resultance, Fr.] The act of resulting.

Neither of which marriages yet taking effect,
the resultance was only a peace and friendship established upon the first proposition of alliance betwixt them. Ld. Herbert, Hen. VIII. p. 11.

Chiefly in the resultance of the beautiful and admirable frame of the whole body.

Hakewill on Prov. p. 183.

He would —— thence infer,
That souls were but resultances from her.

Donne, Poems, p. 212.

RESUMABLE. adj. [from resume.] That may be taken back.

This was but an indulgence, and therefore resumable by the victor, unless there intervened any capitulation to the contrary. Hale.

TO RESUME.† v. a. [resumo, Lat.]

1. To take back what has been given.

The sun, like this, from which our sight we have,
Gaz'd on too long, resumes the light he gave.
Denham.

Sees not my love, how time resumes
The glory which he lent these flowers;
Though none should taste of their perfumes,
Yet must they live but some few hours:

Time, what we forbear, devours. Waller.

2. To take back what has been taken away.

That opportunity,
Which then they had to take from 's, to resume
We have again. Shakespeare, Cymbeline.

Their resume what has been obtained fraudulently, by surprise and upon wrong suggestions.
Davenant.

3. To take again.

Then enter into glory, and resume
His seat. Milton, P. L.

At this, with look serene, he rais'd his head;
Reason resum'd her place, and passion fled.
Dryden.

4. Dryden uses it with again, but improperly, unless the resumption be repeated.

To him our common grandsire of the main
Had giv'n to change his form, and chang'd re- sume again. Dryden.

5. To begin again what was broken off: as, to resume a discourse.

The vote from the house of commons was read; and, in regard it was late, for it was past eight of the clock, the house was resumed; and it was moved, that the committee might sit again to-morrow in the afternoon.

Henry, Ld. Clarendon's Diary, (1688-9.)

RESUMPTION. n. s. [resomption, Fr. resumptus, Lat.] The act of resuming.

If there be any fault, it is the resumption or the dwelling too long upon his arguments. Denham.

The universal voice of the people seeming to call for some kind of resumption, the writer of these papers thought it might not be unreasonable to publish a discourse upon grants. Davenant.

RESUMPTIVE. adj. [resumptus, Lat.] Taking back.

RESUPINATION.† n. s. [resupino, Lat.] The act of lying on the back.

A resupination of the figure.

To RESURVEY. v. a. [re and survey.] To review; to survey again.

I have, with cursory eye, o'erglanc'd the articles;
Appoint some of your counsel presently
To sit with us, once more with better heed
To resurvey them. Shakespeare, Hen. V.

RESURRECTION. n. s. [resurrection, Fr. resurrectionem, Lat.] Revival from the dead; return from the grave.

The Sadducees were grieved, that they taught and preached through Jesus the resurrection from the dead. Acts, iv. 2.

Nor after resurrection shall he stay
Longer on earth, than certain times to appear
To his disciples. Milton, P. L.

He triumphs in his agonies, whilst the soul springs forward to the great object which she has always had in view, and leaves the body with an expectation of being reunited to her in a glorious and joyful resurrection. Addison, Spect.

Perhaps there was nothing ever done in all past ages, and which was not a public fact, so well attested as the resurrection of Christ. Watts.

To RESUSCITATE.† v. a. [resuscito, Lat. resusciter, Fr.] To stir up anew; to revive.

We have beasts and birds for dissections, though divers parts, which you account vital, be perished and taken forth, resuscitating of some that seem dead in appearance. Bacon.

That after death we should be resuscitated.

To RESUSCITATE.† v. n. To awaken; to revive.

Those birds, that yearly sleep a winter's death,
Each spring to mighty love resuscitate.

Feltham, Lusoria, § 35.

RESUSCITATION.† n. s. [from resuscitate.] The act of stirring up anew; the act of reviving, or state of being revived.

The resuscitation of the body from its dust is a supernatural work, yet such as whereof God hath been pleased to give us many images and prefigurations even in nature itself.

Bp. Hall, Tempt. Repell. D. 1. § 5.

The resuscitation of all his saints into the eternal happiness, which they had fallen from.

More, Myst. of Godliness, (1660,) p. 277.

Resuscitation of the day,
Or resurrection of the spring.

Cowley, Ode Rest. K. Ch. II.

Your very obliging manner of enquiring after me, at your resuscitation, should have been sooner answered; I sincerely rejoice at your recovery. Pope.

RESUSCITATIVE.† adj. [resuscitativ, Fr.] Reviving; raising from death to life.

To RETAIL.† v. a. [from the old Fr. re-tailleur, to cut into little pieces, to separate.]

1. To sell in small quantities; in consequence of selling at second hand.

All encouragement should be given to artificers; and those, who make, should also vend and retail their commodities. Locke.

2. To sell at second hand.

The sage dame,
By names of toasts, retails each batter'd jade. Pope.

3. To tell in broken parts, or at second hand.

He is furnish'd with no certainties,
More than he haply may retail from me. Shaks.
Bound with triumphant garlands will I come,
And lead thy daughter to a conqueror's bed;
To whom I will retail my conquest won,
And she shall be sole victress, Caesar's Caesar. Shakespeare.

RETAIL.† n. s. [from the verb.] The accent on this substantive is now usually on the first syllable; but Dryden and Swift have placed it on the last.] Sale by small quantities, or at second hand.

Then mother church did mightily prevail,
She parcell'd out the Bible by retail. Dryden, Rel. Laici.

The author, to prevent such a monopoly of sense, is resolved to deal in it himself by retail. Addison.

We force a wretched trade by beating down the sale,

And selling basely by retail. Swift, Miscell.

RETAILER.† n. s. [from retail.]

1. One who sells by small quantities.
From these particulars we may guess at the rest, as retailers do of the whole piece, by taking a view of its ends. Hakewill.

2. One who tells in broken parts, or at second hand.

The admirable Sir Isaac Newton, a much better philosopher, I do not say merely, than Epicurus, or Lucretius, or any of the more modern retailers of their blunders; but even than any of the most celebrated ones, whether of ancient or modern times. Coventry, Phil. to Hyd. Conv. 1.

To RETAIN.† v. a. [retineo, Lat. retener, old Fr.]

1. To keep; not to lose.

Where is the patience now,
That you so oft have boasted to retain? Shakespeare, K. Lear.

Though the offending part felt mortal pain,
The immortal part its knowledge did retain. Denham.

The vigour of this arm was never vain;
And that my wonted prowess I retain,
Witness these heaps of slaughter. Dryden.

A tomb and funeral honours I decreed;
The place your armour and your name retains. Dryden.

Whatever ideas the mind can receive and contemplate without the help of the body, it is reasonable to conclude, it can retain without the help of the body too. Locke.

2. To keep; not to lay aside.

Let me retain
The name and all the addition to a king;
The sway, beloved sons, be yours. Shaks. K. Lear.

As they did not like to retain God in their knowledge, God gave them over to a reprobate mind. Rom. i. 28.

Be obedient, and retain Unalterably firm his love entire. Milton, P. L.

Although they retain the word mandrake in the text, yet they retract it in the margin. Brown, Vulg. Err.

They who have restored painting in Germany, not having seen any of those fair reliques of antiquity, have retained much of that barbarous method. Dryden.

3. To keep; not to dismiss.

Receive him that is mine own bowels; whom I would have retained with me. Philom. 13.

Hollow rocks retain
The sound of blustering winds. Milton.

4. To keep in pay; to hire. See the last sense of RETAINER.

A Benedictine convent has now retained the most learned father of their order to write in its defence. Addison.

Lazarus's case is to come on next, and this fee is to retain you on his side. Sherlock, Trial of the Witnesses.

5. To withhold; to keep back. [Fr. retenir.] Not in use.

He laid him bleeding on the ground, and had killed him if his brother Robert had not retained him, and made him sensible how much more it concerned him to make his escape than pursue his revenge. Temple, Intr. Hist. of Eng. p. 287.

To RETAIN. v. n.

1. To belong to; to depend on.
These betray upon the tongue no heat nor corrosiveness, but coldness mixed with a somewhat languid relish retaining to bitterness. Boyle.

In animals many actions depend upon their living form, as well as that of mixtion, and though they wholly seem to retain to the body, depart upon dissolution. Brown.

2. To keep; to continue. Not in use. Perhaps it should be remain.

No more can impure man retain and move
In the pure region of that worthy love,
Than earthly substance can unforc'd aspire,
And leave his nature to converse with fire. Donne.

RETAINER.† n. s. [from retain.]

1. An adherent; a dependant; a hanger-on.
You now are mounted,
Where pow'rs are your retainers. Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

One darling inclination of mankind affects to be a retainer to religion; the spirit of opposition, that lived long before christianity, and can easily subsist without it. Swift.

A combination of honest men would endeavour to extirpate all the prodigate immoral retainers to each side, that have nothing to recommend them but an implicit submission to their leaders. Addison, Spect.

2. In common law, retainer signifieth a servant not menial nor familiar, that is not dwelling in his house; but only using or bearing his name or livery. Cowel.

3. The act of keeping dependants, or being in dependance.

By another law, the king's officers and farmers were to forfeit their places and holds, in case of unlawful retainer, or partaking in unlawful assemblies. Bacon, Hen. VII.

4. One that retains, or loses not.

One that has forgot the common meaning of words, but an admirable retainer of the sound. Swift, Tale of a Tub, § 9.

5. A retaining fee; a fee advanced to counsel to retain his services in a trial.

You are men of too much sense, I am sure, to be found on the side of Jannes and Jambres, or to take a retainer from Simon Magus. Bp. Horne, Lett. on Infidelity, L. 14.

To RETAKE. v. a. [re and take.] To take again.

A day should be appointed, when the remonstrance should be retaken into consideration.

Clarendon.

TO RETALIATE.† v. a. [re and talio, Lat. retalio, Fr.] To return by giving like for like; to repay; to requite: it may be used of good or evil.

Our ambassador sent word to the duke's son, that his visit should be retaliated.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 132.

It is very unlucky, to be obliged to retaliate the injuries of authors, whose works are so soon forgotten, that we are in danger of appearing the first aggressors.

Swift.

If a first minister of state had used me as you have done, retaliating would be thought a mark of courage.

Swift.

RETALIATION. n. s. [from retaliare.] Requital; return of like for like.

They thought it no irreligion to prosecute the severest retaliation or revenge; so that at the same time their outward man might be a saint, and their inward man a devil.

South.

God, graciously becoming our debtor, takes what is done to others as done to himself, and by promise obliges himself to full retaliation.

Calamy, Serm.

TO RETARD. v. a. [retardo, Lat. retarder, French.]

1. To hinder; to obstruct in swiftness of course.

How Iphitus with me, and Pelias

Slowly retire; the one retarded was

By feeble age, the other by a wound. Denham.

2. To delay; to put off.

Nor kings nor nations

One moment can retard th' appointed hour.

Dryden.

It is as natural to delay a letter at such a season, as to retard a melancholy visit to a person one cannot relieve.

Pope.

TO RETARD. v. n. To stay back.

Some years it hath also retarded, and come far later, than usually it was expected.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

RETARDATION.† n. s. [retardation, Fr. from retard.] Hinderance; the act of delaying.

Out of this a man may devise the means of altering the colour of birds, and the retardation of hoary hairs.

Bacon.

The eighth is the retardation of our glory.

Bp. Hall, Of Contentation, § 18.

The acceleration or retardation of the motion.

More, Song of the Soul, Notes, p. 392.

RETARDER. n. s. [from retard.] Hinderer; obstructer.

This disputing way of enquiry, is so far from advancing science, that it is no inconsiderable retarder.

Glanville.

RETARDMENT.* n. s. [from retard.] Act of delaying or keeping back.

Which malice or which art no more could say, Than witches' charms can a retardment bring To the resuscitation of the day, Or resurrection of the spring.

Cowley, Ode Rest. K. Ch. II.

Very probable reasons were offered to justify every new retardment.

Burnet, Hist. of his Own Time, K. William.

TO RETCH.† v. n. [hpæcan, Saxon; recere, Ital. to vomit; hraekia, Icel. the same.] To force up something from the stomach.

It is commonly written reach, and so pronounced in many places.

RETCHESS. adj. [sometimes written wretchless, properly reckless. See RECKLESS.] Careless.

He struggles into breath, and cries for aid; Then helpless in his mother's lap is laid: He creeps, he walks, and issuing into man, Grudges their life, from whence his own began; Retichless of laws, affects to rule alone. Dryden.

RETENTION. n. s. [retectus, Lat.] The act of discovering to the view.

This is rather a restoration of a body to its own colour, or a retention of its native colour, than a change. Boyle.

TO RETELL.† v. a. See RETELD.

RETENTION. n. s. [retention, Fr. retentio, from retentus, Lat.]

1. The act of retaining; the power of retaining.

No woman's heart

So big to hold so much; it kept retention.

Shakespeare.

A froward retention of custom is as turbulent-a thing as an innovation; and they that reverence too much old things, are but a scorn to the new.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

2. Retention and retentive faculty is that state of contraction in their solid parts, which makes them hold fast their proper contents. Quincy.

3. Memory.

The backward learner makes amends another way, expiating his want of docility with a deeper and a more rooted retention.

South, Serm.

Retention is the keeping of those simple ideas, which from sensation or reflection the mind hath received.

Locke.

4. The act of withholding any thing.

His life I gave him, and did thereto add My love without retention or restraint; All his.

Shakespeare, Tw. Night.

5. Custody; confinement; restraint.

I sent the old and miserable king To some retention and appointed guard.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

RETENTIVE. adj. [retentus, Lat. retentif, French.]

1. Having the power of retention.

It keepeth sermons in memory, and doth in that respect, although not feed the soul of man, yet help the retentive force of that stomach of the mind.

Hooker.

Have I been ever free, and must my house Be my retention enemy, my goal?

Shakespeare.

From retentive cage

When sullen Philomel escapes, her notes

She varies, and of past imprisonment

Sweetly complains.

Philips.

In Totnam fields the brethren with amaze

Prick all their ears up, and forget to graze;

Long Chancery-lane retentive rolls the sound,

And courts to courts return it round and round.

Pope.

2. Having memory.

To remember a song or tune, our souls must be an harmony continually running over in a silent whisper those musical accents, which our retentive faculty is preserver of.

Glanville.

RETENTIVE.* n. s. [retentus, Lat.] Retraint.

Secret checks readily conspire with outward retentives.

Bp. Hall, Contempl.

RETENTIVENESS. n. s. [from retentive.] Having the quality of retention.

TO RETEX.* v. a. [retexo, Lat.] To unweave; to undo; to annul any action.

Neither king James, king Charles, nor any parliament, did ever appoint that any of his orders should be retexed.

Hackett's Life of Abp. Williams, p. 57.

RETICENCE. n. s. [reticence, Fr. reticencia, from reticeo, Latin.] Concealment by silence.

Dict.

Shakespeare.

I will thence retire me to my Milan.

Shakespeare, Tempest.

There may be as great a variety in retiring and withdrawing men's conceits in the world, as in obtruding them.

Bacon.

As when the sun is present all the year,
And never doth retire his golden ray,
Needs must the spring be everlasting there,
And every season like the month of May. Davies.
These actions in her closet, all alone,
Retir'd within herself, she doth fulfil.
After some slight skirmishes, he retired himself into the castle of Farnham. Clarendon.

Hydra-like, the fire
Lifts up his hundred heads to aim his way;
And scarce the wealthy can one half retire,
Before he rushes in to share the prey. Dryden.

RETIRE. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Retreat; recession. Not in use.

I heard his praises in pursuit,
But ne'er, till now, his scandal of retire. Shaks.
Thou hast talk'd

You find the mind in sleep retired from the senses, and out of these motions made on the organs of sense. Locke.

RETIRELY.  adv.* [from retired.] In solitude; in privacy. Sherwood.

RETIRENESS. † n. s. [from retired.] Solitude; privacy; secrecy.

How many have we known, that have been innocent in their retirements, miserably debauched with lewd conversation! Next to being good, is to consort with the virtuous.

Bp. Hall, Sel. Thoughts, § 19.
Casting one eye back at the least to his former retiredness. Wotton, Rem. p. 166.

If retiredness be not more delicious than affluence or popularity, how comes it that men of great employment do so often lock up themselves from the crowd and flux of affairs? As the happiest part of their lives, they steal themselves into a calm.

Feltham, Res. ii. 44.
Like one, who in her third widowhood doth profess

Herself a nun, ty'd to retiredness,
So affects my muse now a chaste fallowness.

Donne.
How could he have the leisure and retiredness of the cloister, to perform all those acts of devotion in, when the burden of the reformation lay upon his shoulders? Atterbury.

RETIREMENT. n. s. [from retire.]

told again.

Whatever Harry Percy then had said
At such a time, with all the rest retold,
May reasonably die. Shakspeare.
Upon his dead corpse there was such misuse
By those Welch women done, as may not be Without much shame retold or spoken of. Shakspeare.

TO RETORT. † v. a. [retort, Fr. retortus,
Latin.]

1. To throw back; to rebound.

His virtues, shining upon others,
Heat them, and they retort that heat again
To the first giver. Shakspeare, Tr. and Cress.
The loadstone, which the wary mariner
Doth as director of his travels bear
Now to the rising sun, now to the set,
Doth never lose that hidden virtue yet,
Which makes it to the north retort its look. Fanshew, Tr. of Past. Fido.

When the body is distempred, it retorts and shoots backward its indispositions to the mind.
Sir R. Tempest, Ent. of Solitariness, (1649), p. 4.

2. To return any argument, censure, or incivility.

His proof will easily be retorted, and the contrary proved, by interrogating; shall the adulterer inherit the kingdom of God? if he shall, what need I, that am now exhorted to reform my life, reform it? if he shall not, then certainly I, that am such, am none of the elect; for all, that are elect, shall certainly inherit the kingdom of God.
Hammond.

He pass'd through hostile scorn;
And with retorted scorn his back he turn'd.
Milton, P. L.

The respondent may shew, how the opponent's argument may be retorted against himself. Watts.

3. To curve back.

It would be tried how the voice will be carried in an horn, which is a line arched; or in a trumpet, which is a line retorted; or in some pipe that was sinuous. Bacon.

RETORT. n. s. [retorte, Fr. retortum, Lat.]

1. A censure or incivility returned.

I said his beard was not cut well, he was in the mind it was: this is called the retort courteous.
Shakspeare.

2. A chymical glass vessel with a bent neck to which the receiver is fitted.

In a laboratory, where the quicksilver is separated by fire, I saw an heap of sixteen thousand retorts of iron, every one of which costs a crown at the best hand from the iron furnaces in Corinthia. Brown, Trav.

Recent urine distilled yields a limpid water;
and what remains at the bottom of the retort is not acid nor alkaline. Arbuthnot.

RETORTER. n. s. [from retort.] One that retorts.

RETORTING.  n. s.* [from retort.] Act of casting back, in the way of censure or incivility.

As for those little retortings of my own expressions, "of being dull by design, witty in October, shining, excelling," and so forth; they are the common cavils of every witling, who has no other methods of shewing his parts, but by little variations and repetitions of the man's word whom he attacks. Tailler, No. 259.

RETORTION. † n. s. [from retort.] The act of retorting.

As for the seeming reasons which this opinion leads unto, they will appear, like the staff of Egypt, either to break under, or by an easy retortion to pierce and wound, itself. Spencer on Prod. (1665), p. 253.

Complaints and retortions are the common refuge of causes that want better arguments.

Lively Oracles, &c. (1678), p. 24.
TO RETO'SS. v. a. [re and toss.] To toss
back.

Tost and retost the ball incessant flies.

TO RETOUCH. v. a. [retoucher, Fr.] To improve by new touches.

He furnished me with all the passages in Aristotle and Horace, used to explain the art of poetry
by painting; which, if ever I retouch this essay, shall be inserted. Dryden.

Lintot, dull rogue, will think your price too much:

"Not, sir, if you revise it and retouch." Pope.

TO RETRACE. v. a. [retracer, Fr.] To trace back; to trace again.

Then if the line of Turnus you retrace,
He springs from Inachus of Argive race. Dryden.

TO RETRACT. v. a. [retractus, Lat. retracter, Fr.]

1. To recall; to recant.

Were I alone to pass the difficulties,
Paris should ne'er retract what he hath done,
Nor faint in the pursuit. Shaks. Tr. and Cress.
If his subtilties could have satisfied me, I would as freely have retracted this charge of idleness, as I ever made it. Stillingfleet.

2. To take back; to resume.

A great part of that time, which the inhabitants of the former earth had to spare, and whereof they made so ill use, was employed in making provision for bread; and the excess of fertility which contributed so much to their miscarriages, was retracted and cut off. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

TO RETRACT. v. n. To unsay; to withdraw concession.

She will, and she will not, she grants, denies,
Consents, retracts, advances, and then flies.

Granville.

TO RETRACTATE.  v. a.* [retractatus, Lat.]
To recant; to unsay.

St. Augustine was not ashamed to retractate, we might say revoke, many things that had passed him; and doth even glory that he seeth his infirmities. Translators of the Bible to the Reader.

RETRACTATION. † n. s. [retraction, Fr.
retractatio, Lat.] Recantation; change of opinion declared.

Saint Austen, in the ix. chapter of his first book of retractions sayth, he had diligently searched from whence evil might spring.

Crowley, Def. of Eng. Writers, (1566), fol. 31, b.

They make bold with the Deity when they make him do and undo, go forward and backwards by such countermarches and retractions, as we do not impute to the Almighty. Woodward.

2. Recantation; declaration of change of opinion.

There came into her head certain verses, which if she had had present commodity, she would have joined as a retraction to the other. Sidney.

These words (1 Sam. xxv. 32, 33.) are David's retraction, or laying down of a bloody and revengeful resolution. South, Sermon. ii. 355.

3. Act of withdrawing a claim.

Other men's insatiable desire of revenge hath wholly beguiled both church and state, of the benefit of all my either retractions or concessions.

King Charles.

RETRA'CTIVE.* n. s. [from retract.] That which withdraws or takes from.

We could make this use of it, to be a strong retractive from any, even our dearest and gainfullest, sins.

By Hall, Rem. p. 139.

The retractions of baseness — might have hindered his progression.

Naughton, Fragm. Reg. of Ld. Mountjoy.

RETRA'CT.† n. s. [retraicte, Fr.] Retreat: Obsolete. It was formerly retrait, as in Spenser, and so rendered from the French by Cotgrave.

The earl of Lincoln, deceived of the country's concourse unto him, and seeing the business past retrait, resolved to make on where the king was, and give him battle.

Bacon.

RETRA'IT.† n. s. [ritratto, Italian.] A cast of the countenance; a picture; Obsolete,

Upon her eyelids many graces sat,
Under the shadow of her even brows,
Working bellgards, and amorous retraite,
And every one her with a grace endows. Spenser.
She is the mighty Queen of Faery,
Whose faire retraite I in my shield doe beare.

Spenser.

Here in the calm still mirror of retreat,
I studied Shrewsbury the wise and great.

Pope.

3. Place of privacy; retirement.
He built his son a house of pleasure, and spared
no cost to make a delicious retreat. L'Estrange.
Holy retreat, sithence no female thither
Must dare approach, from the inferiour reptile
To woman, form divine.

Prior.

4. Place of security.
This place our dungeon, not our safe retreat,
Beyond his potent arm. Milton, P. L.
That pleasing shade they sought, a soft retreat,
From sudden April's showers, a shelter from the heat.

Dryden.

There is no such way to give defence to absurd doctrines, as to guard them round with legions of obscure and undefined words; which yet make these retreats more like the dens of robbers, than the fortresses of fair warriors.

Locke.

5. Act of retiring before a superiour force. Retreat is less than flight.

Honourable retreats are no ways inferior to brave charges; as having less of fortune, more of discipline, and as much of valour.

Bacon.

Unmov'd
With dread of death to flight or foul retreat.

Milton, P. L.

None thought of flight,
None of retreat.

Milton, P. L.

Dryden.

We ought to retrench those superfluous expences to qualify ourselves for the exercise of charity.

Atterbury.

2. To confine. Improper.
In some reigns, they are for a power and obedience that is unlimited; and in others, are for retrenching, within the narrowest bounds, the authority of the princes and the allegiance of the subject.

Addison, Freeholder.

To RETRE'NCH. v. n. To live with less magnificence or expence.

Can I retrench? yes, mighty well,
Shrink back to my paternal cell,
A little house, with trees a-row,
And like its master very low.

Pope, Epist. of Hor.

RETRE'NCHING.* n. s. [from retrench.] A curtailing; a cutting out; a purposed omission.

All ancient books, having been preserved by transcription, were liable through ignorance, negligence, or fraud, to be corrupted in three different ways, that is to say, by retrenchings, additions, and alterations.

Harris, Philol. Inquiries.

RETRE'NCHMENT. n. s. [retranchement, Fr. from retrench.]

1. The act of lopping away.
I had studied Virgil's design, his judicious management of the figures, the sober retrenchments of his sense, which always leaves somewhat to gratify our imagination, on which it may enlarge at pleasure.

Dryden, Ded. to Virg.

The want of vowels in our language has been the general complaint of our politest authors, who nevertheless have made these retrenchments, and consequently increased our former scarcity.

Addison.

I would rather be an advocate for the retrenchment, than the increase of this charity.

Atterbury.

2. Fortification.

To RETRIBUTE.† v. a. [retribuio, Lat. retribuere, Fr.] To pay back; to make repayment of.

Here is no want of pleasure neither, abounding in gardens, fruit, and corn; which, being cultivated, retribute a gainful acknowledgment.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 223.

I come to tender you the man you have made, And like a thankful stream to retribute All you my ocean have enrich'd me with.

Beaumont and Fl. Q. of Corinth.

Both the will and power to serve him are his upon so many scores, that we are unable to retribute, unless we do restore; and all the duties we can pay our Maker are less properly requitals than restitutions.

Boyle.

In the state of nature, a man comes by no arbitrary power to use a criminal, but only to retribute to him, so far as calm reason and conscience dictate, what is proportionate to his transgression.

Locke.

RETRIBUTER. n. s. [from retribute.] One that makes retribution.

RETRIBUTION. n. s. [retribution, Fr. from retribute.] Repayment; return accommodated to the action.

The king thought he had not remunerated his people sufficiently with good laws, which evermore was his retribution for treasure.

Bacon, Hen. VII. In good offices and due retributions, we may not be pinching and niggardly; it argues an ignoble mind, where we have wronged, to higgled and dodge in the amends.

By Hall.

All who have their reward on earth, the fruits Of painful superstition, and blind zeal, Nought seeking but the praise of men, here find Fit retribution, empty as their deeds.

Milton, P. L. There is no nation, though plunged into never such gross idolatry, but has some awful sense of a Deity, and a persuasion of a state of retribution to men after this life.

South.

It is a strong argument for a state of retribution hereafter, that in this world virtuous persons are very often unfortunate, and vicious persons prosperous.

Addison, Spect.

RETRIBUTIVE.† adj. [from retribute.] RETRIBUTORY. } Repaying; making repayment.

Neither is it the pleasure of the Almighty to defer the retributory comforts of his mourners till another world: even here He is ready to supply them with abundant consolations.

By Hall, Rem. p. 183.

Something strangely retributive is working.

Richardson, Clarissa.

RETRIE'VABLE.† adj. [from retrieve.] That may be retrieved.

I interest myself a little in the history of it, [office of poet laureate,] and rather wish somebody may accept it that will retrieve the credit of the thing, if it be retrievable, or ever had any credit.

Gray, Lett. to Mason, (1757).

To RETRIEVE.† v. a. [retrovolver, Fr. rirovare, Ital. "iterum invenire; quod, nī fallor, a Teut. treffen, tangere, attingere, ortum ducit; quod eò verisimilius fit, quòd antiqui semper treuver scripserunt." Skinner.]

For retrogradation, the shadow went back ten degrees in the dial of Ahaz.

Bp. Hall, Sermon on Ps. cvii. 34.

Planets—have their stations and retrogradations, as well as their direct motion.

Cudworth, Sermon. p. 58.

As for the revolutions, stations, and retrogradations of the planets, observed constantly in most certain periods of time, it sufficiently demonstrates, that their motions are governed by counsel.

Ray on the Creation.

RETROGRADE. adj. [retrograde, Fr. retro and gradior, Lat.]

1. Going backward.

Princes, if they use ambitious men, should handle it so, as they be still progressive, and not retrograde.

Bacon.

2. Contrary; opposite.

Your intent

In going back to school to Wittenberg,

It is most retrograde to our desire. Shaks. Hamlet.

3. In astronomy, planets are retrograde, when by their proper motion in the zodiack, they move backward, and contrary to the succession of the signs; as from the second degree of Aries to the first: but this retrogradation is only apparent and occasioned by the observer's eye being placed on the earth; for to an eye at the sun, the planet will appear always direct, and never either stationary or retrograde.

Harris.

Their wand'ring course, now high, now low, then hid,

Progressive, retrograde, or standing still,

In six thou see'st.

Two geomantick figures were display'd;

One when direct, and one when retrograde.

Dryden.

RETROGRADE. v. n. [retrograder, Fr. retro and gradior, Lat.] To go backward.

Milton, P. L.

7. To retort; to recriminate.

If you are a malicious reader, you return upon me, that I affect to be thought more impartial than I am.

Dryden.

TO RETU'RN. v. a.

1. To repay; to give in requital.

Return him a trespass offering. 1 Sam. vi. 3.

Thy Lord shall return thy wickedness upon thine own head. 1 Kings, ii. 44.

What peace can we return,

But to our power, hostility, and hate? Milton, P. L.

When, answer none return'd, I set me down.

Milton, P. L.

2. To give back.

What counsel give ye to return answer to this people? 2 Chron.

3. To send back.

Reject not then what offer'd means; who knows

But God hath set before us, to return thee

Home to thy country and his sacred house?

Milton, S. A.

4. To give account of.

Probably one fourth part more died of the plague than are returned.

Graunt, Bills of Mortality.

5. To transmit.

Instead of a ship, he should levy money, and return the same to the treasurer for his majesty's use. Clarendon.

RETU'RN.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Act of coming back to the same place.

The king of France so suddenly gone back!

Something since his coming forth is thought of,

That his return was now most necessary. Shaks.

When forc'd from hence to view our parts he mourns;

Takes little journeys, and makes quick returns.

Dryden.

2. Retrogression.

3. Act of coming back to the same state.

At the return of the year, the king of Syria will come up.

1 Kings, xx. 22.

4. Revolution; vicissitude.

Weapons hardly fall under rule; yet even they have returns and vicissitudes; for ordnance was known in the city of the Oxidraes in India, and is what the Macedonians called thunder and lightning.

Bacon, Ess.

5. Repayment of money laid out in commodities for sale.

As for any merchandize you have bought, ye shall have your return in merchandize or gold.

Bacon.

As to roots accelerated in their ripening, there is the high price that those things bear, and the swiftness of their returns; for, in some grounds, a radish comes in a month, that in others will not come in two, and so make double returns.

Bacon.

6. Profit; advantage.

The fruit, from many days of recreation, is very little; but from these few hours we spend in prayer, the return is great.

Bp. Taylor, Rule of Living Holy.

7. Remittance; payment from a distant place.

Within these two months, I do expect return Of thrice three times the value of this bond.

Shakspeare.

Brokers cannot have less money by them, than one twentieth part of their yearly returns.

Locke.

8. Repayment; retribution; requital.

You made my liberty your late request:

Is no return due from a grateful breast?

I grow impatient, till I find some way,

Great offices, with greater to repay. Dryden.

Y Y

Since these are some of the returns which we made to God after obtaining our successes, can we reasonably presume, that we are in the favour of God?

Atterbury.

Nothing better becomes a person in a publick character, than such a publick spirit; nor is there any thing likely to procure him larger returns of esteem.

Atterbury.

Returns, like these, our mistress bids us make, When from a foreign prince a gift her Britons take.

Prior.

Ungrateful lord!

Would'st thou invade my life, as a return—
For proffer'd love?

Rove.

9. Act of restoring or giving back; restitution.

The other ground of God's sole property in any thing, is the gift, or rather the return of it made by man to God.

South.

10. Relapse.

This is breaking into a constitution to serve a present expedient; the remedy of an empirick, to stifle the present pain, but with certain prospect of sudden returns.

Swift.

11. [Rétour, Fr.]

Either of the adjoining sides of the front of an house, or ground-plot, is called a return side.

Mason, Mech. Ex.

Both these sides are not only returns, but parts of the front, and a stately tower in the midst of the front.

Bacon.

12. Report; account; as, the sheriff's return. To this sense also perhaps may be referred the return of members of parliament.

Mason.

The members returned are the sitting members, until the house of commons upon petition shall adjudge the return to be false and illegal.

Blackstone.

13. [In law.] Certain days in every term are called return-days, or days in bank; and so Hilary term hath four returns.

Covel.

On some one of these days in bank all original writs are returnable, and therefore they are generally called the returns of that term.

Blackstone.

RETURABLE. adj. Allowed to be reported back. A law term.

It may be decided in that court, where the verdict is returnable.

Hale.

He shall have an attachment against the sheriff, directed to the coroner, and returnable into the king's bench.

Ayliffe.

RETURNER. n. s. [from return.] One who pays or remits money.

The chapmen, that give highest for this, can make most profit by it, and those are the returners of our money.

Locke.

RETURNESS. adj. Admitting no return; irremiable.

But well knew the troth
Of this thine owne returne, though all my friends,
I knew as well should make returnlesse ends.

Chapman.

REVALUATION. n. s. [re and valuation.] A fresh valuation.

Sherwood.

REVEL. n. s. The bailiff of a franchise or manour. See REEVE.

The reve was a slender colerike man:—
Wel coude he kepe a garner and a binn;—
There was none auditor coude on him winne:
Wel wiste he by the drought, and by the raine,
The yielding of his seed, and of his grain.

Chaucer, C. T. Prol.

To REVEAL. v. a. [revelo, Lat. reveler, Fr.]

1. To show; to discover; to lay open; to disclose a secret.

Be ashamed; speaking again that which thou hast heard, and revealing of secrets. Eccles. xli. 23.

Light was the wound, the prince's care unknown,

She might not, would not yet reveal her own.

Waller.

The answer to one who asked what time was, si non rogas intelligo; that is, the more I think of time, the less I understand it; might persuade one, that time, which reveals all other things, is itself not to be discovered.

Locke.

Thy throne is darkness in the abyss of light,
A blaze of glory that forbids the sight;
O teach me to believe thee thus conceal'd,
And search no further than thyself reveal'd.

Dryden.

2. To impart from heaven.

The sufferings of this life are not to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us.

Rom. viii. 18.

REVEALER. n. s. [from reveal.]

1. Discoverer; one that shows or makes known.

The habit of faith in divinity is an argument of things unseen, as a stable assent unto things inevident, upon authority of the divine revealer.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

The lives of the revealers may be justly set over against the revelation, to find whether they agree.

Atterbury.

2. One that discovers to view.

He brought a taper; the revealer light
Expos'd both crime and criminal to sight.

Dryden.

REVEALMENT. n. s. [from reveal.] The act of revealing.

This is one reason why God permits so many heinous impieties to be concealed here on earth, because he intends to dignify that day with the revelation of them.

South, Serm. vii. 270.

REVEILLE. n. s. [French; from reveiller, to awake.] The military notice by beat of drum, about day-break, that it is time to rise. It is vulgarly pronounced revell'y, with the accent on the last syllable: our poets, old and modern, place it on the second.

Sound the trumpet, beat the drum;
Through all the world around;
Sound a revellie, sound, sound,
The warrior god is come. Dryden, Secular Masque.

Save where the life its shrill revellie screams.

Campbell, Gertrude.

To REVEL. v. n. [Skinner derives it from reveiller, Fr. to awake; Lyre from ravelen, raveelen, Dutch, to rove loosely about, which is much countenanced by the old phrase, revel-rout. Dr. Johnson. — Tyrwhitt illustrates the word, in the Canterbury Tales of Chaucer, as "entertainment, properly during the night," thus evidently alluding to the Fr. reveiller, to awake, or to keep awake. "And made revel all the longe night." Kn. Tale. And this is most probably the origin of our word. The revells of old were dances, masks, and the like, appropriated chiefly to the night-season. See also WAKE.] To feast with loose and clamorous merriment.

My honey love,
Will we return unto thy father's bouse,
And revel it as bravely as the best.

Shakespeare.

We'll keep no great ado—a friend or two.
Tybalt being slain so late,
It may be thought we held him carelessly,
Being our kinsman, if we revel much.

Shaks.

Antony, that revells long o' nights,
Is up.

Shakespeare.

We shall have revelling to-night;
I will assume thy part in some disguise.

Shaks.

He can report you more odd tales

Of our outlaw, Robin Hood,
That revell'd here in Sherwood,
Though he ne'er shot in his bow.

B. Jonson.

Were the doctrine new,
That the earth mov'd, this day would make it true;
For every part to dance and revel goes,
They tread the air, and fall not where they rose.

Donne.

When'er I revell'd in the women's bows;
For first I sought her but at looser hours:
The apples she had gather'd smelt most sweet.

Prior.

REVEL. n. s. [from the verb.] A feast with loose and noisy jollity.

Let them pinch the unclean knight,
And ask him, why, that hour of fairy revel,
In their so sacred paths he dares to tread?

Shakespeare.

They could do no less but, under your fair conduct,
Crave leave to view these ladies, and intreat

Shakespeare.

An hour of revells with them.

What makes the studious man prefer a book before a revel, the rigours of contemplation and retirement before merry-meeting and jolly company?—Because a nobler pleasure has rendered those inferior ones tasteless and contemptible.

South, Serm. viii. 408.

REVEL-ROUT. n. s.

1. A mob; an unlawful assembly of a rabble.

Ainsworth.

2. Tumultuous festivity.

For this his minion, the revel-rout is done.

Rove, Jane Shore.

To REVEL. v. a. [revello, Lat.] To retract; to draw back.

Those, who miscarry, escape by their flood, revelling the humours from their lungs.

Harvey.

Venesection in the left arm does more immediate relief, yet the difference is minute.

Friend, Hist. of Physick.

REVELATION. n. s. [from revelation, Fr.]

1. Discovery; communication; communication of sacred and mysterious truths by a teacher from heaven.

When the divine revelations were committed to writing, the Jews were such scrupulous reverers of them, that they numbered even the letters of the Old Testament.

Dec. of Chr. Piety.

As the gospel appears in respect of the law to be a clearer revelation of the mystical part, so it is a far more benign dispensation of the practical part.

Syrat.

2. The apocalypse; the prophecy of St. John, revealing future things.

REVELER. n. s. [from revel.] One who feasts with noisy jollity.

Fairies black, grey, green, and white,
You moonshine revellers, attend your office.

Shakespeare.

Unwelcome revellers, whose lawless joy
Pains the sage ear, and hurts the sober eye.

Page.

REVELLING. n. s. [from revel.] Loose jollity; revelry.

They—used secret ceremonies, or made revellings of strange rites.

Wisd. xiv. 23.

The time past of our life may suffice us to have wrought the will of the Gentiles, when we walked in lasciviousness, lusts, excess of wine, revellings, banquetings, and abominable idolatries.

1 Pet. iv. 3.

REVELRY. n. s. [from revel.] Loose jollity; festive mirth.

Forget this new-fall'n dignity,
And fall into our rustic revellry.

Shakespeare.

There let Hymen oft appear
In saffron robe, with taper clear,
And pomp, and feast, and revelry,
With masque and antique pageantry.

Milton, E. All.

TO REVENGE. v. a. [revancher, revancher, Fr.]

1. To return an injury.

Not unappeas'd, he pass'd the Stygian gate,
Who leaves a brother to revenge his fate. Pope.

2. To vindicate by punishment of an enemy.

If our hard fortune no compassion draws,
The gods are just, and will revenge our cause.

3. To wreak one's wrongs on him that inflicted them. With the reciprocal pronoun, or in a passive sense.

Come, Antony and young Octavius,
Revenge yourselves alone on Cassius.

It is a quarrel most unnatural,
To be reveng'd on him that loveth thee.

Northumberland slew thy father;
And thine lord Clifford; and you vow'd revenge:
If I be not, heavens be reveng'd on me! Shaks.
Edom hath revenged himself upon Judah.

O Lord, visit me, and revenge me of my persecutors.

Who shall come to stand against thee, to be revenged for the unrighteous men? Wisd. xii. 12.

Your fury of a wife,
Not yet content to be reveng'd on you,
The agents of your passion will pursue. Dryden.

REVENGE. n. s. [revanche, revanche, Fr.]

1. Return of an injury.

May we, with the witness of a good conscience, pursue him with further revenge?

I will make mine arrows drunk with blood;
from the beginning of revenges upon the enemy.

Deformed persons are commonly even with nature;
for as nature has done ill by them, so nature;
by for nature; being void of natural affection,
they have their revenge of nature.

But what will not ambition and revenge
Descend to?

The satyr in a rage
Forgets his bus'ness is to laugh and bite,
And will of death and death revenges write. Dryd.
Draco, the Athenian lawgiver, granted an immunity to any person that took revenge upon an adulterer.

2. The passion of vengeance; desire of hurting one from whom hurt has been received.

Revenues burn in them: for their dear causes
Would, to the bleeding and the grim alarm,
Excite the mortified man. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

3. Revenge is an act of passion; vengeance, of justice. Injuries are revenged; crimes are avenged. This distinction is perhaps not always preserved.

REVENGEFUL. adj. [from revenge.] Vindictive; full of revenge; full of vengeance.

May my hands
Never brandish more revengeful steel
Over the glittering helmet of my foe.

If thy revengeful heart cannot forgive,
Lo! here I lend thee this sharp-pointed sword,
Which hide in this true breast. Shaks. Rich. III.
Into my borders now Jarbas falls,
And my revengeful brother scales the walls.

Repenting England, this revengeful day,
To Philip's manes did an off'ring bring. Dryden.

REVENGEFULLY. adv. [from revengeful.] Vindictively.

He smil'd revengefully, and leap'd
Upon the floor; thence gazing at the skies,
His eye-balls fiery red, and glowing vengeance;
Gods, I accuse you not. Dryden and Lee, Edipus.

REVENGEFULNESS. n. s. [from revengeful.] Vindictiveness; state or quality of being revengeful.

Boisterous wrath, and stormy revengefulness;
fool-hardy confidence, and indefatigable contention about vain objects.

REVENGELESS. adj. [revenge and less.] Unrevenged.

We, full of hearty tears
For our good father's loss,
Cannot so lightly overjump his death
As leave his woes revengeless.

REVENGER. n. s. [from revenge.] 1. One who revenges; one who wreaks his own or another's injuries.

May be, that better reason will assuage
The rash revenger's heat; words, well dispos'd,
Have secret power to appease enflamed rage.

I do not know,
Wherefore my father should revengers want,
Having a son and friends. Shaks. Ant. and Cleop.
So shall the great revenger ruin
Him and his issue, by a dreadful fate.

Had come in person, to have seen and known
The injur'd world's revenger and his own. Waller.

2. One who punishes crimes.
What government can be imagined, without judicial proceedings? and what methods of judicature, without a religious oath, which supposes an omniscient Being, as conscious to its falsehood or truth, and a revenger of perjury?

REVENGEMENT. n. s. [from revenge.] Vengeance; return of an injury.

In her son's flesh to mind revengement,
And be for all chaste dames an endless monument.

By the percolse of the same verse, vagabond is understood for such a one as travelleth in fear of revengement.

REVENGINGLY. adv. [from revenging.] With vengeance; vindictively.

I've bely'd a lady,
The princess of this country; and the air on't
Revengingly enfeebles me. Shaks. Cymbeline.

REVENUE. n. s. [revenu, Fr. Its accent is uncertain.] Income; annual profits received from lands or other funds.

They privily send over unto them the revenues, wherewith they are there maintained.

She bears a duke's revenues on her back,
And in her heart, scorns our poverty.

Only I retain
The name and all the addition to a king;
The sway, revenue, beloved sons, be yours. Shaks.

Many officers are of so small revenue, as not to furnish a man with what is sufficient for the support of his life.

If the woman could have been contented with golden eggs, she might have kept that revenue on still.

His vassals easy, and the owner blest,
They pay a trifle, and enjoy the rest;
Not so a nation's revenues are paid;

The servant's faults are on the master laid. Swift.
When men grow great from their revenue spent,
And fly from bailiffs into parliament. Young.

TO REVERBERATE. v. a. [reverbero, Lat.] To resound; to reverberate. Not in use.

Thy youngest daughter does not love thee least;
Nor are those empty hearted, whose loud sound
Reverbs no hollowness. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

REVERBERANT. adj. [reverberans, Lat.] Resounding; beating back. The reading in the following passage of Shakspeare should be, I think, reverberant. Dr. Johnson.—The true word of Shakspeare is reverberate. Theobald altered it to reverberant, Mr. Holt White observes, and at the same time confirms the old reading by a passage from Heywood; to which he might have added another from Ben Jonson; so common was the use of the adjective in a passive form with an active sense.

Hollow your name to the reverberate hills,
And make the babbling gossip of the air
Cry out, Olivia!

Give shrill reverberat echoes and rebounds.

Which skill Pythagoras
First taught to men by a reverberate glass.

TO REVERBERATE. v. a. [reverbero, Lat. reverberer, Fr.]

1. To beat back.
Nor doth he know them for aught,
Till he behold them form'd in the applause
Where they're extended; which, like an arch, re-verbates

The sound again.

As the sight of this eye is like a glass, so is the ear a sinuous cave, with a hard bone, to stop and reverberate the sound.

As we, to improve the nobler kinds of fruits, are at the expence of walls to receive and reverberate the faint rays of the sun, so we, by the help of a good soil, equal the production of warmer countries.

2. To heat in an intense furnace, where the flame is reverberated upon the matter to be melted or cleaned.

Crocus martis, that is, steel corroded with vinegar or sulphur, and after reverberated with fire, the loadstone will not attract.

TO REVERBERATE. v. n.

1. To be driven back; to bound back.
The rays of royal majesty reverberated so strongly upon Villerio, that they dispelled all clouds.

2. To resound.
An echo with the clamour of thy drum,
And ev'n at hand a drum is ready brac'd,
That shall reverberate all as well as thine.

REVERBERATION. n. s. [reverberation, Fr. from reverberate.] The act of beating or driving back.

To the reflection of visibles, small glasses suffice; but to the reverberation of audibles, are required greater spaces.

The first repetitions follow very thick; for two parallel walls beat the sound back on each other, like the several reverberations of the same image from two opposite looking-glasses.

REVERBERATORY. adj. [reverberatoire, Fr.] Returning; beating back.

Good lime may be made of all kinds of flints, but they are hard to burn, except in a reverberatory kiln.

REVERBERATORY. n. s. [reverberatoire, Fr.] A reverberating furnace.

TO REVERE. v. a. [revere, Fr. revereor, Lat.] To reverence; to honour; to venerate; to regard with awe.

An emperor often stamped on his coins the face or ornaments of his colleague, and we may suppose Lucius Verus would omit no opportunity of doing honour to Marcus Aurelius, whom he rather revered as his father, than treated as his partner in the empire.

Jove shall again revere your pow'r,
And rise a swan, or fall a show'r. Prior.
Taught 'em how clemency made pow'r rever'd.
And that the prince below'd was truly fear'd. Prior.

REVERENCE. n. s. [reverence, Fr. reverentia, Lat.]

1. Veneration; respect; awful regard.

When quarrels and factions are carried openly,
it is a sign the reverence of government is lost.

Bacon, Ess.

Higher of the genial bed, —
And with mysterious reverence, I deem.

Milton, P. L.

In your prayers, use reverent postures, and the lowest gestures of humility, remembering that we speak to God, in our reverence to whom we cannot exceed. Bp. Taylor.

A poet cannot have too great a reverence for readers. Dryden.

The fear, acceptable to God, is a filial fear; an awful reverence of the divine nature, proceeding from a just esteem of his perfections, which produces in us an inclination to his service, and an unwillingness to offend him. Rogers.

2. Act of obeisance; bow; courtesy.

Now lies he there,
And none so poor to do him reverence.

Shakespeare, Jul. Cæs.

He led her easily forth,
Where Godfrey sat among his lords and peers,
She re'vence did, then blush'd as one dismay'd.
Fairfax.

Had not men the hoary heads rever'd,
Or boys paid reverence, when a man appear'd,
Both must have dy'd. Dryden, Juv.

Upstarts the beldam, —
And, reverence made, accosted thus the queen. Dryden.

The monarch
Commands into the court the beautiful Emily:
So call'd, she came; the senate rose and paid
Reverent reverence to the royal maid. Dryden.

3. Title of the clergy.

Many now in health
Shall drop their blood, in approbation
Of what your reverence shall incite us to.

Shakespeare, Hen. V.

4. Poetical title of a father.

O my dear father! let this kiss
Repair those violent harms, that my two sisters
Have in thy reverence made. Shaks. K. Lear.

To REVERENCE. v. a. [from the noun.]
To regard with reverence; to regard with awful respect.

Those that I reverence, those I fear, the wise;
At fools I laugh, nor fear them. Shaks. Cymb.

While they pervert pure nature's healthful rules
To loathsome sickness, worthily since they God's image did not reverence in themselves.

Milton, P. L.

He slew Aetion, but despoil'd him not;
Nor in his hate the funeral rights forgot;
Arm'd as he was, he sent him whole below,
And reverenc'd thus the manes of his foe. Dryden.

As his goodness will forbid us to dread him as slaves, so his majesty will command us to reverence him as sons. Rogers.

He presents every one so often before God in his prayers, that he never thinks he can esteem reverence, or serve those enough, for whom he implores so many mercies from God. Law.

REVERENCER. n. s. [from reverence.] One who regards with reverence.

The Athenians, quite sunk in their affairs, had little commerce with the rest of Greece, and were become great reverencers of crowned heads.

Swift.

REVEREND. adj. [reverend, Fr. reverendus,
Lat.]

1. Venerable; deserving reverence; exacting respect by his appearance.

Let his lack of years be no impediment, to let him lack a reverend estimation.

Shakespeare, Merchant of Venice.

Reverend and gracious senators. Shakespeare.
Onias, who had been high priest, — reverend in conversation, gentle in condition. 2 Mac. xv. 12.

A parish priest was of the pilgrim train,
An awful, reverend, and religious man,
His eyes diffus'd a venerable grace,
And charity itself was in his face. Dryden.

A reverend sire among them came,
Who preach'd conversion and repentance.

Milton, P. L.

Reverend old man! lo here confest he stands.

Pope.

2. The honorary epithet of the clergy.
We style a clergyman, reverend; a bishop, right reverend; an archbishop, most reverend.

REVERENT. adj. [reverens, Lat.] Humble; expressing submission; testifying veneration.

They forthwith to the place
Repairing where he judg'd them, prostrate fell
Before him reverent. Milton, P. L.

Meet then the senior, far renown'd for sense,
With reverent awe, but decent confidence. Pope.

REVERENTIAL. adj. [reverentielle, Fr. from reverent.] Expressing reverence; proceeding from awe and veneration.

That oaths made in reverential fear
Of love and his wrath may any forswear.

Donne.

The least degree of contempt weakens religion;
it properly consisting in a reverential esteem of things sacred. South.

The reason of the institution being forgot, the after-ages perverted it, supposing only a re-verential gratitude paid to the earth as the common parent. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

All look up with reverential awe,
At crimes that 'scape or triumph o'er the law.

Pope.

REVERENTIALLY. adv. [from reverential.]
With show of reverence.

The Jews, reverentially declining the situation of their temple, place their beds from north to south. Brown.

REVERENTLY. adv. [from reverent.] Respectfully; with awe; with reverence.

Chide him for faults, and do it reverently.

Shakespeare.

His disciples here,
By their great Master sent to preach him every where,

Most reverently received. Drayton.

To nearest ports their shatter'd ships repair,
Where by our dreadful cannon they lay aw'd;
So reverently men quit the open air,
When thunder shakes the angry gods abroad.

Dryden.

Then down with all thy boasted volumes, down;
Only reserve the sacred one:

Low, reverently low,
Make thy stubborn knowledge bow:

To look to heav'n be blind to all below. Prior.

REVERER. n. s. [from revere.] One who venerates; one who reveres.

When the divine revelations were committed to writing, the Jews were such scrupulous reverers of them, that it was the business of the Masorites, to number not only the sections and lines, but even the words and letters of the Old Testament.

Gov. of the Tongue.

REVERIE.* See REVERY.

REVERŒAL. n. s. [from reverse.] Change of sentence.

The king, in the reversal of the attainders of his partakers, had his will. Bacon, Hen. VII.

REVERŒAL.* adj. [from reverse.] Impliying reverse; intended to reverse.

After his death there were reversal letters found among his papers.

Burnet, Hist. of his Own Time, Ch. II.

To REVERSE.† v. a. [reverser, old Fr.
reversus, Latin.]

1. To turn upside down.

A pyramid reversed may stand upon his point,
if balanced by admirable skill. Temple, Miscell.

2. To overturn; to subvert.

These now control a wretched people's fate,
These can divide, and these reverse the state. Pope.

3. To turn back.

Michael's sword stay'd not;
But with swift wheel reverse, deep entering shar'd

4. To contradict; to repeal.

Better it was in the eye of his understanding, that sometime an erroneous sentence definitive should prevail, till the same authority, perceiving such oversight, might afterwards correct or reverse
it, than that strifes should have respite to grow, and not come speedily unto some end.

Hooker, Pref.

A decree was made, that they had forfeited their liberties; and albeit they made great moans, yet could they not procure this sentence to be reversed.

Hayward.

Death, his doom which I

To mitigate thus plead, not to reverse,
To better life shall yield him. Milton, P. L.

Though grace may have reversed the condemning sentence, and sealed the sinner's pardon before God, yet it may have left no transcript of that pardon in the sinner's breast. South.

Those seem to do best, who, taking useful hints from facts, carry them in their minds to be judg'd of by what they shall find in history to confirm or reverse these imperfect observations. Locke.

5. To turn to the contrary.

These plain characters we rarely find,
Though strong the bent, yet quick the turns of mind;

Or puzzling contraries confound the whole,
Or affectations quite reverse the soul. Pope.

6. To put each in the place of the other.

With what tyranny custom governs men! it makes that reputable in one age, which was a vice in another, and reverses even the distinctions of good and evil. Rogers.

7. To recall; to renew. Obsolete.

Well knowing true all he did rehearse,
And to his fresh remembrance did reverse
The ugly view of his deformed crimes. Spenser.

To REVERSE.† v. n. [revertere, reversus,
Lat.] To return.

Beene they all dead, and laid in doleful hearse?
Or don they only sleepe, and shall again reverse?
Spenser, F. Q. iii. iv. 1.

REVERSE. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Change; vicissitude.

The strange reverse of fate you see;
I pity'd you, now you may pity me.

sense rather colloquial than analogous.

Count Tariff appeared the reverse of Goodman Fact. Addison.

The performances, to which God has annexed the promises of eternity, are just the reverse of all the pursuits of sense. Rogers.

3. [Revers, Fr.] The side of the coin on which the head is not impressed.

As the Romans set down the image and inscription of the consul, afterward of the emperor on the one side, so they changed the reverse, always upon new events. C Camden.

Our guard upon the royal side;
On the reverse our beauty's pride. Waller.

Several reverses are owned to be the representations of antique figures. Addison, on Anc. Medals.

REVERSEDLY.* adv. [from reversed.] In a reversed manner.

He took out of his pocket this letter, for want of a better supply of paper at hand; and on the cover of it, over the direction, which now stands among the notes, intermixed reversedly with them, noted from Dr. London's mouth the account which we had to communicate.

Louth, Life of Wykeham, § 9.

REVERSELESS.* adj. [reverse and less.] Not to be reversed; irreversible.

Even now thy lot shakes in the urn, whence fate Throws her pale edicts in reverseless doom.

Seward, Sonnet.

REVERSIBLE.† adj. [reversible, Fr. from reverse.] Capable of being reversed.

If the judgement be given by him that hath authority, and it be erroneous, it was at common law reversible by writ of error.

Hale, H. P. C. c. 36.

REVERSELY.* adj. [from reverse.] On the other hand; on the opposite.

That is properly credible, which is not apparent of itself, nor certainly to be collected, either antecedently by its cause, or reversely by its effect, and yet, though by none of these ways, hath the attestation of a truth. Pearson on the Creed, Art. 1.

REVERSION. n. s. [reversion, Fr. from reverser.]

1. The state of being to be possessed after the death of the present possessor.

As were our England in reversion his, And he our subjects next degree in hope.

Shakespeare, Rich. II.

A life in reversion is not half so valuable, as that which may at present be entered on.

Hammond on Fundamentals.

2. Succession; right of succession.

He was very old, and had out-lived most of his friends; many persons of quality being dead, who had, for recompence of services, procured the reversion of his office.

Clarendon.

Upon what ground can a man promise himself a future repentance, who cannot promise himself a futurity; whose life depends upon his breath, and is so restrained to the present, that it cannot secure to itself the reversion of the very next minute?

South, Sermon.

So many candidates there stand for wit, A place at court is scarce so hard to get;

In vain they crowd each other at the door;

For e'en reversions are all begg'd before. Dryden.

Fame's a reversion in which men take place,

O late reversion! at their own decease. Young.

REVERSIONARY. adj. [from reversion.]

To be enjoyed in succession.

There are multitudes of reversionary patents and reversionary promises of preferments.

Arbutnot.

REVERSIONER.* n. s. [from reversion.]

One who has a reversion.

A scire facias brought against Mr. Ware would presently vacate his patent; but then there will be a clamour, in regard the office will not fall to the king, but to the reversioner.

Henry, Ed. Clarendon's Lett. (1686.)

TO REVERT. v. a. [revert, Lat.]

1. To change; to turn to the contrary.

Peachment on Musick.

REVERTIBLE. adj. [from revert.] Returnable.

REVERTIVE.* adj. [from revert.] Changing; turning to the contrary.

He taught

Why now the mighty mass of water swells
Resistless, heaving on the broken rocks,
And the full river turning, till again
The tide revertive, unattracted, leaves
A yellow waste of idle sands behind.

Thomson on Sir Isaac Newton.

TO REVEST. v. a. [revestir, revêtir, Fr. revestio, Lat.]

1. To clothe again.

Her, nathtëless,

The enchanter finding fit for his intents,
Did thus revest, and deckt with due habiliments.

Spenser.

When thou of life renewest the seeds,
The withered fields revest their cheerful weeds.

Wotton.

2. To reinvest; to vest again in a possession or office.

REVESTIARY. n. s. [revestiaire, Fr. from revestio, Lat.] Place where dresses are repositied.

The effectual power of words the Pythagoreans extolled; the impious Jews ascribed all miracles to a name, which was engraved in the revestiary of the temple.

Camden, Rem.

REVERY.† n. s. [resverie, Fr. from reverser, "to dote, to speak idly, to talk like an ass" Cotgrave. And so resverie at first signified raving, or idle talking; then vain fancy, or fond imagination.] Loose musing; irregular thought.

Revery is when ideas float in our mind, without any reflection or regard of the understanding.

Locke.

If the minds of men were laid open, we should see but little difference between that of the wise man and that of the fool; there are infinite reveries and numberless extravagancies pass through both.

Addison.

I am really so far gone, as to take pleasure in reveries of this kind.

Pope.

REVICITION.† n. s. [revictum, Lat.] Return to life.

Do we live to see a reviction of the old Sadducism, so long since dead and forgotten?

Bp. Hall, Gr. Myst. of Godliness, § 9.

If the Rabins' prophecy succeed, we shall conclude the days of the phenix, not in its own, but in the last and general flames, without all hope of reviction.

Brown.

TO REVICTUAL. v. a. [re and victual.] To stock with victuals again.

Neville, Misc. of Juv. (1769.) p. 70.

REVIE'W.* n. s. [from review.]

1. One who re-examines.

This rubrick, being the same that we have in king Edward's second Common Prayer Book, may perhaps have slipped into the present book through the inadvertency of the reviewers, who might not probably just then consider, that custom had shifted the place for the performance of the daily service into another part of the church.

Wheatly on the Com. Pr. ch. 2.

2. One who writes in a periodical publication called a review.

The Critical reviewers, I believe, often review without reading the books through; but lay hold of a topic, and write chiefly from their own minds. The Monthly reviewers are duller men, and are glad to read the books through.

Johnson in 1776, Boswell's Life of him.

To REVIGORATE.* v. a. [revigourer, Fr.] To reinforce; to add new vigour; to give new strength.

reviles; one who treats another with contumelious terms.

Diagoras, a known reviler of all their other gods.
Fotherby, Atheom, p. 117.

We all know, that in private or personal injuries,
yea in public sufferings for the cause of Christ, his rule and example teaches us to be so far from a readiness to speak evil, as not to answer the reviler in his language, though never so much provoked.

Milton, Apol. for Smectymn. Pref.

The bitterest revilers are often half-witted people.
Gov. of the Tongue.

REVILING.* n. s. [from revile.] Act of re-proaching; act of using contumelious language.

The strife of the proud is blood-shedding; and their revilings are grievous to the ear.

Eccles. xxvii. 15.

He will have thee ready to endure persecutions, revilings, and all manner of slanders, not only patiently, but also cheerfully, for the truth's sake.
South, Serm. iii. 165.

REVILINGLY. adv. [from revile.] In an opprobrious manner; with contumely.

The love I bear to the civility of expression will not suffer me to be revilingly broad. Maine.

REVISAL. n. s. [from revise.] Review; re-examination.

The revival of these letters has been a kind of examination of conscience to me; so fairly and faithfully have I set down in them the undisguised state of the mind. Pope.

To REVISE. v. a. [revisus, Lat.] To review; to overlook.

Lintot will think your price too much;
Not, sir, if you revise it, and retouch. Pope.

rent, so long are these medicines of revivification preparing. Spectator.

To REVIVIFY.* v. a. [re and vivify.] To recall to life.

That the gross matter which they saw, laid in the grave and turn to corruption, or burnt into ashes and blown away by the air, should ever be raised, or collected again, and revivified; of this the most speculative among them had no conception.

Stackhouse, Appar. to his Hist. of the Bible, p. xii.

REVIVISCENCE.† n. s. [revivisco, revivis- centia, Lat. Of this useful expression Dr. Johnson has brought only a solitary instance from Burnet. Reviviscence was as common as reviviscency.] Renewal of life; renewal of existence.

The same articles of religion, with some alterations, in the reviviscency of the Reformation, in the days of queen Elizabeth, were again ratified by the authority of the church, and of the clergy.

Bp. Pearson, No Necess. of Ref. the Ch. of Eng. (1660,) p. 20.

Neither will the life of the soul alone continuing amount to the reviviscency of the whole man.

Pearson on the Creed, Art. 11.

To terms of this height he revolved; and of the same complexion are his letters to your majesty.

Wotton, Rem. p. 251.

On the desertion of an appeal, the jurisdiction does, ipso jure, revolve to the judge a quo. Ayliffe, Pargenon.

To REVOL'VE. v. a. [revolvolo, Lat.]

1. To roll any thing round.

Then in the East her turn she shines, Revolv'd on heaven's great axis. Milton, P. L.

2. To consider; to meditate on.

You may revolve what tales I told you Of courts, of princes, of the tricks of war. Shaks.

REVOL'VENCY.* n. s. [from revolve.] Constant revolution.

Its own revolvency upholds the world. Couper, Task.

REVOL'UTION.† n. s. [revolution, Fr. revolutus, Lat.] Dr. Johnson's earliest example of this word is from the Paradise Lost of Milton. The word indeed is placed in Bagwell's Mystery of Astronomy, in 1655, among others requiring explanation, as not being in familiar use.]

1. Course of any thing which returns to the point at which it began to move.

On their orbs impose Such restless revolution, day by day

Repeated. Milton, P. L.
They will be taught the diurnal revolution of the heavens. Watts.

2. Space measured by some revolution.

At certain revolutions are they brought, And feel by turns the bitter change. Milton, P. L.
Meteors have no more time allowed them for their mounting, than the short revolution of a day. Dryden.

The Persian wept over his army, that within the revolution of a single age, not a man would be left alive. Watts.

3. Change in the state of a government or country. It is used among us ναί ἐξουχί, for the change produced by the admission of king William and queen Mary.

The late revolution, justified by its necessity and the good it had produced, will be a lasting answer. Duvenant.

4. Rotation; circular motion.

Comes thundering back with dreadful revolution On my defenceless head. Milton, P. L.

REVOL'UTIONARY.* adj. Originating in a revolution: a word which the French democratical revolution formed, and usually coupled with the most execrable actions.

The form of that monster in politics, of which, as the very notion involves a contradiction of ideas, the name cannot be expressed without a contradiction in terms, "a revolutionary government!"

Ld. Mornington, Sp. in the H. of Com. (1794.)
Every thing we hear from them [the French] is new, and, to use a phrase of their own, revolutionary; every thing supposes a total revolution in all the principles of reason, prudence, and moral feeling.

Burke, on a Regicide Peace.

REVOLUTIONIST.* n. s. A favourer of revolutions; of the same origin and character as revolutionary.

If all revolutionists were not proof against all caution, I should recommend it to their consideration, that no persons were ever known in history, either sacred or profane, to vex the sepulchre.

Burke.

TO REVOMIT. v. a. [revomir, Fr. re and vomit.] To vomit; to vomit again.

They might cast it up, and take more vomiting and revomiting what they drink.

Hakewill on Providence.

REVULSION.† n. s. [revulsion, Fr. revulsus, Lat.]

1. The act of revelling or drawing humours from a remote part of the body.

Derivation differs from revulsion only in the measure of the distance, and the force of the medicines used: if we draw it to some very remote or contrary part, we call it revulsion; if only to some neighbouring place, and by gentle means, we call it derivation.

Wiseman of Tumours.

There is a way of revulsion to let blood in an adverse part.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

I had heard of some strange cures of frenzies, by casual applications of fire to the lower parts, which seems reasonable enough, by the violent revulsion it may make of humours from the head.

Temple, Miscell.

2. The act of withholding or drawing back.

There is no excuse to forget what every thing prompts unto us.—To run on in despite of the revulsions and pullbacks of such remoras, aggravates our transgressions.

Brown, Chr. Mor. iii. 10.

REVULSIVE.* n. s. [from revulsion.]

1. Revulsion, in its medical sense.

His flux of blood breaking forth again with greater violence than it had done before, was not to be stopped by outward applications, nor the revulsives of any kind, not of its own, the opening of a vein, first in the arm, and after in the foot.

Fell, Life of Hammond, § 3.

2. That which has the power of subducing or withdrawing.

The most powerful revulsive of his danger.

Dec. of Chr. Piety, p. 263.

In his sickness, he never intermitted study, but rather reinforced it then as the most appropriate revulsive and diversion of pain.

Fell, Life of Hammond, § 2.

REVULSIVE. adj. Having the power of revulsion.

REW.* n. s. [pæpa, Sax. reihe, German, rank, order, series. Mr. Mason, who did not look to etymology, has, in his Supplement to Dr. Johnson's dictionary, introduced rew merely as "an old poetical word for row." The fact is, that rew is the genuine word for row; and is not only in our oldest authors, but in our lexicography: as "a rew of trees." Barret; "a rew, or rank," Sherwood, Rew is also the Cornish word. Wicliffe, Gower, and Chaucer use it.] A row.

The goddess with her crew,—

Sitting beside a fountain in a rew. Spenser, F. Q.

TO REWARD.† v. a. [re and award, to give in return. Skinner. Dr. Johnson.—Rather from the ancient French "reuerdon, i. e. reguerdon; reuerdone-ment, recompense," Roquefort.]

1. To give in return.

Thou hast rewarded me good, whereas I have rewarded thee evil. 1 Sam. xxiv. 17.

They rewarded me evil for good. Ps. xxxv. 12.

2. To repay; to recompense for something good.

God rewards those that have made use of the single talent, that lowest proportion of grace, which he is pleased to give; and the method of his rewarding is by giving them more grace.

Hammond.

To judge the unfaithful dead, but to reward

His faithful, and receive them into bliss.

Milton, P. L.

There is no more reason to reward a man for believing that four is more than three, than for being hungry or sleepy; because these things do not proceed from choice, but from natural necessity. A man must do so, nor can he do otherwise.

Wilkins.

The Supreme Being rewards the just, and punishes the unjust. Broom on the Odyssey.

REWARD.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Recompense given for good performed.

Rewards and punishments do always presuppose something willingly done well or ill; without which respect, though we may sometimes receive good, yet then it is only a benefit, and not a reward.

Hooker.

To myself I owe this due regard,
Not to make love my gift, but my reward.

Dryden.

Men have consented to the immortality of the soul and the recompenses of another world, promising to themselves some rewards of virtue after this life.

Tillotson.

2. It is sometimes used with a mixture of irony, for punishment or recompense of evil.

What reward shall be given or done unto thee, thou false tongue? even mighty and sharp arrows, with hot burning coals. Ps. cxx. 3.

REWARDABLE. adj. [from reward.] Worthy of reward.

Men's actions are judged, whether in their own nature rewardable or punishable.

Hooker.

The action that is but indifferent, and without reward, if done only upon our own choice, is an act of religion, and rewardable by God, if done in obedience to our superiors.

Bp. Taylor, Rule of Living Holy.

REWARDABLENESS.* n. s. [from rewardable.] Worthiness of reward.

What can be the praise or rewardableness of doing that which a man cannot chuse but do?

Goodman, Wint. Ev. Conf. P. ii.

REWARDER. n. s. [from reward.] One that rewards; one that recompenses.

A liberal rewarder of his friends.

Shakespeare, Rich. III.

As the Supreme Being is the only proper judge of our perfections, so is he the only fit rewarder of them.

Addison.

Ill judges, as well as rewarders, have popular assemblies been, of those who best deserved from them.

Swift.

TO REWARD. v. a. [re and word.] To repeat in the same words.

Bring me to the test,

And I the matter will reward; which madness
Would gambol from. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

RHABARBARATE. adj. [from rhabarbara, Lat.] Impregnated or tinctured with rhubarb.

The salt humours must be evacuated by the sennate, rhabarbarate, and sweet manna purgers, with acids added, or the purging waters.

Floyer on the Humours.

RHABDOMANCY. n. s. [ῥαβδομαντῖα and μαντῖα.] Divination by a wand.

Of peculiar rhabdomancy is that which is used in mineral discoveries with a forked hazel, commonly called Moses's rod, which, freely held forth, will stir and play if any mine be under it.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

RHAPSODICAL.* adj. [from rhapsody.] Unconnected.

See Dr. Heylin's confutation of Fuller's rhapsodical stories of the church of England.

Dean Martin's Lett. (1662.) p. 17.

RHAPSODIST.† n. s. [from rhapsody.]

1. One who recites or sings rhapsodies, or compositions, for a livelihood; one who makes and repeats extempore verses. See the first sense of RHAPSODY.

Select ballads in the old Scottish dialect are also interspersed among those of our ancient English minstrels; and the artless productions of these old rhapsodists are occasionally confronted with specimens of the composition of contemporary poets of a higher class.

Bp. Percy, Rel. of Anc. Poet. Pref.

Ossian and Homer, though both of the profession of rhapsodists, are thought to be very unlike.

Tyers, Hist. Rhaps. on Pope, p. 38.

A few seasons ago, there was an Italian rhapsodist in London; who, as I am told, made excellent extempore verses on every subject that was proposed to him.

Tyers, ut sup. p. 55.

2. One who writes without regular dependence of one part upon another.

Ask our rhapsodist, if you have nothing but the excellence and loveliness of virtue to preach, and no future rewards or punishments, how many vicious wretches will you ever reclaim?

Watts, Impr. of the Mind.

RHAPSODY.† n. s. [ῥαψωδία, Gr. ῥάψω, to sew, or join together; and ὀδή, a song.]

1. A collection of songs, or verses; dispersed pieces joined together. Of this primary meaning Dr. Johnson has taken no notice; and yet our old lexicography has rightly distinguished it, "a joining of divers verses together." Bullokar's Expos. 1656, in V. RHAPSODY.

Homer wrote a sequel of songs and rhapsodies, to be sung by himself for small earnings, and good cheer, at festivals and other days of merriment; the Ilias he made for the men, and the Odysseis for the other sex. These loose songs were not collected together in the Epic form till Pisistratus's time, above 500 years after.

Bentley, Phil. Lips. § 7.

2. Any number of parts joined together, without necessary dependence or natural connection.

Such a deed, as sweet religion makes

A rhapsody of words. Shaks. Hamlet.

This confusion and rhapsody of difficulties was not to be supposed in each single sinner.

Hammond.

He, that makes no reflections on what he reads, only loads his mind with a rhapsody of tales fit for the entertainment of others.

Locke.

The words slide over the ears, and vanish like a rhapsody of evening tales. Watts on the Mind.

RHEIN-BERRY. n. s. [spina cervina, Latin.] Buckthorn, a plant.

RHE'NISH.* n. s. [from the river Rhine.]
A kind of German wine.

A pestilence on him for a mad rogue! he poured a flagon of Rhenish on my head once.

RHE'TOR.* n. s. [Latin; ῥήτωρ, Gr.] A rhetorician.

Your hearing, what is it but as of a rhetor at a desk, to commend or dislike?

Hammond, Works, iv. 514.

Senators and pretors,
With great dictators, us'd to apply to rhetors.

RHE'TORICAL. adj. [rhetoricus, Lat. from rhetorick.] Pertaining to rhetorick;
oratorial; figurative.

The apprehension is so deeply riveted into my mind, that rhetorical flourishes cannot at all loosen
it.

Because Brutus and Cassius met a blackmore,
and Pompey had on a dark garment at Pharsalia, these were presages of their overthrow, which notwithstanding are scarce rhetorical sequels; concluding metaphors from realities, and from conceptions metaphorical inferring realities again.

The subject may be moral, logical, or rhetorical,
which does not come under our senses.

RHE'TORICALLY.† adv. [from rhetorical.]
Like an orator; figuratively; with intent to move the passions.

My lorde hath rhetorically begunne his proposicion to winne his auditory.

Bale, Yet a Course, (1543,) fol. 44. b.
You shall see how rhetorically he expostulates.

He who obtains what he has been rhetorically, or unfortunately, begging for, goes away really a conqueror.

To RHE'TORICATE.† v. n. [rhetorico, low
Lat. from rhetorick.] To play the orator;
to attack the passions.

'Twill be much more seasonable to reform, than apologize or rhetoricate; — not to suffer themselves to perish in the midst of such solicitations to be saved.

When some Corinthians were puffed up by reason of a faculty which they had of rhetoricating religiously, St. Paul, like an apostle, tells them, that he would come amongst them, and know, not the speech of them that were puffed up, but the power.

RHE'TORICA'TION.* n. s. [from rhetoricate.]
Rhetorical amplification.

"When I consider your wealth, I doe admire your wisdom; and when I consider your wis-dome, I doe admire your wealth." It was a two-handed rhetorication, but the citizens took it in the best sense.

Take but away their rhetorications and equivocal expressions, their misrepresentations and misreports, their ostentation and their scurrilities;
and their cause will be left in a manner destitute.

RHE'TORICIAN.* n. s. [rhetoricien, French;
rhetor, Lat.]

1. One who teaches the science of rhe-torick.

The ancient sophists and rhetoricians, which ever had young auditors, lived till they were an hundred years old.

'Tis the business of rhetoricians to treat the characters of the passions.

A man may be a very good rhetorician, and yet at the same time a mean orator.

2. An orator; less proper.

He play'd at Lions a declaiming prize,
At which the vanquish'd rhetorician dies.

RHE'TORICIAN. adj. Suiting a master of rhetorick.

Boldly presum'd with rhetorician pride,
To hold of any question either side.

RHE'TORICK. n. s. [ῥητορικὴ; rhetorique, Fr.]

1. The act of speaking not merely with propriety, but with art and elegance.

We could not allow him an orator who had the best thoughts, and who knew all the rules of rhetorique, if he had not acquired the art of using them.

Of the passions, and how they are moved,
Aristotle, in his second book of rhetorick, hath admirably discoursed in a little compass.

Grammar teacheth us to speak properly, rhetorick
instructs to speak elegantly.

2. The power of persuasion; oratory.

The heart's still rhetorick, disclos'd with eyes.

His sober lips then did he softly part,
Whence of pure rhetorick whole streams outflow.

Enjoy your dear wit and gay rhetorick,
That bath so well been taught her dazzling fence.

To RHE'TORIZE.* v. n. [from rhetor.] To play the orator.

To RHE'TORIZE.* v. a. To represent by a figure of oratory.

A certain rhetorized woman, whom he calls mother.

RHEUM. n. s. [ῥεύμα; rheume, Fr.] A thin watery matter oozing through the glands, chiefly about the mouth.

Trust not these cunning waters of his eyes;
For villany is not without such a rheum;

And he, long traded in it, makes it seem
Like rivers of remorse.

You did void your rheum upon my beard.

Each changing season does its poison bring,
Rheums chill the winter, agues blast the spring.

RHEU'MATICK.† adj. [ῥευματικὸς; from rheum.]

1. Proceeding from rheum or a peccant watery humour.

The moon, the governess of floods,
Pale in her anger, washes all the air,
That rheumatick diseases do abound.

The blood taken away looked very sizz or rheumatick.

2. Denoting the pain which attacks the joints, and the muscles and membranes between the joints.

RHEU'MATISM. n. s. [ῥευματισμὸς; rheuma-tisme, Fr. rheumatismus, Lat.] A painful distemper supposed to proceed from acrid humours.

Rheumatism is a distemper affecting chiefly the membrana communis musculorum, which it makes rigid and unfit for motion; and it seems to be occasioned almost by the same causes, as the mucilaginous glands in the joints are rendered stiff and gritty in the gout.

The throttling quinsy, 'tis my star appoints,
And rheumatisms I send to rack the joints.

RHEU'MY. adj. [from rheum.] Full of sharp moisture.

Is Brutus sick?

And will he steal out of his wholesome bed,
To dare the vile contagion of the night?

And tempt the rheumy and unpurged air,
To add unto his sickness?

RHEU'RY. adj. [from rheum.] Full of sharp
moisture.

Is Brutus sick?

And will he steal out of his wholesome bed,
To dare the vile contagion of the night?

And tempt the rheumy and unpurged air,
To add unto his sickness?

RHEU'RY. adj. [from rheum.] Full of sharp
moisture.

Is Brutus sick?

And will he steal out of his wholesome bed,
To dare the vile contagion of the night?

And tempt the rheumy and unpurged air,
To add unto his sickness?

The South he loos'd, who night and horror brings,
And fogs are shaken from his flaggy wings:

From his divided beard two streams he pours;
His head and rheumy eyes distil in show'rs.

RHIME.* See RHYME.

RHI'NO.* n. s. A cant word for money.

Fools lose places for ready rhino.

RHINO'CEROS. n. s. [ῥίς and κέρας; rhinocerot, Fr.] A vast beast in the East Indies armed with a horn on his nose.

Approach thou like the rugged Russian bear,
The arm'd rhinoceros, or Hyrcanian tyger;

Take any shape but that, and my firm nerves
Shall never tremble.

If you draw your beast in an emblem, shew a landscape of the country natural to the beast; as to the rhinoceros an East Indian landscape, the crocodile, an Egyptian.

RHODO'DENDRON.* n. s. [ῥόδον, Gr. a rose,
and δένδρον, tree.] Dwarf rose bay.

The rhododendron [will make] posts and rafters.

RHODOMONTA'DE.* See RHODOMONTADE.

Some write it, improperly, rhodomontade.

RHOMB. n. s. [rhombe, Fr. rhombus, Lat.
ῥόμβος.] In geometry, a parallelogram or quadrangular figure, having its four sides equal, and consisting of parallel lines, with two opposite angles acute, and two obtuse: it is formed by two equal and right cones joined together at their base.

Save the sun his labour, and that swift
Nocturnal and diurnal rhomb suppos'd
Invisible else above all stars, the wheel
Of day and night.

See how in warlike muster they appear,
In rhombs and wedges, and half-moons and wings.

RHO'MBICK. adj. [from rhomb.] Shaped like a rhomb.

Many other sorts of stones are regularly figured;
the asteria in form of a star, and they are of a rhombick figure.

RHO'MBOID.† } n. s. [ῥομβοειδής; rhomboides, RHOMBO'IDES. } Fr.] A figure approaching to a rhomb.

See them under sail, in all their lawn and sarcenet, with a geometrical rhomboides upon their heads.

Let A C B D be a rhomboides.

Many other sorts of stones are regularly figured;
and they are of a rhomboidick figure; talk, of such as are rhomboides.

RHOMBO'IDAL. adj. [from rhomboid.] Approaching in shape to a rhomb.

Another rhomboidal selenities of a compressed form, had many others infixed round the middle of it.

RHUBARB.† n. s. [rhubar, Persian. Sir T.
Herbert's Trav. p. 316. rhabarbarum,
Latin; which Morin derives from the
Gr. ῥίζα, in its medical sense of root, and ῥάβδαρος, strange, foreign.] A medicinal root slightly purgative, referred by botanists to the dock.

What rhubarb, senna, or what purgative drug
Would scour these English hence?

Having fixed the fontanel, I purged him with an infusion of rhubarb in small ale.

RHYME.† n. s. [Rimen is a verb in the
VOL. III.

Franco-Theotisc, signifying congruere, obvenire, contingere, that is, to agree together, to meet. This very neatly describes rime, in which sounds are made to agree together and to meet. I therefore think, that the word rime has come to us from the ancient languages of Europe, rather than from the Latin rhythmus; and that the Frankish rimen shews to us the rationale of its use. Inq. respecting the early use of Rhime by Sharon Turner, Esq. F. A. S. Archæol. vol. 14. p. 175. The learned author of the preceding remark then notices the Saxon pim, number, or completion of numbers: whence "forsan nostra rime, rhythmus, metrum, i. e. certus numerus pedum in carmine." Lye, edit. Manning. Mr. Turner has also noticed the Sax. þrýme, or þream, signifying harmony. Serenius produces the Su. Goth. rim, ryma, scriptum metricum, à hrem, resonantia canora; hreimer, (verb. imp.) resonat." We have thus the clue to the formation of our word, and to its application in several senses. And the manner of writing it rime, rhyme, or rhime, must depend upon the use of it by our best writers rather perhaps than upon the derivation. Yet some contend earnestly for a distinction of rime and rhyme, because Milton, in the Preface to his Paradise Lost, wrote rime, they assert, to signify the jingling sound of like endings; and rhime, at the beginning of the poem, to signify verse in general. Some also have blamed the editor of this dictionary for having printed, in his editions of Milton's Poetical Works, the latter of these words with the h; pretending that the best editions are not followed by him, whereas the poet's own edition has been his guide, (and no fastidious refiner's,) which reads, "Things unattempted yet in prose or rhime;" and corresponds with his use of rhyme in Lycidas.]

1. An harmonical succession of sounds.

The youths with songs and rhimes:
Some dance, some hale the rope. Denham.

2. The consonance of verses; the correspondence of the last sound of one verse to the last sound or syllable of another.

The measure is English heroic verse without rime, as that of Homer in Greek, and of Virgil in Latin; rime being no necessary adjunct or true ornament, of poem or good verse, in longer works especially, but the invention of a barbarous age to set off wretched matter and lame metre.

Milton, P. L. Pref.

For rhyme the rudder is of verses,
With which like ships they steer their courses.

Hudibras.
Such was the news, indeed, but songs and rhymes

Prevail as much in these hard iron times;
As would a plump of trembling fowl, that rise
Against an eagle sousing from the skies. Dryden.

If Cupid throws a single dart,
We make him wound the lover's heart;
But if he takes his bow and quiver,
'Tis sure he must transfix the liver;
For rhime with reason may dispense,
And sound has right to govern sense.

Prior.

3. Poetry; a poem.

Thou ken'st not, Percie, how the rime should rage:

O if my temples were distain'd with wine,
And 'girt in girlonds of wilde yvie twine,
How could I reare the muse on lofty stage!

Spenser, Shep. Cal. Oct.

All his manly power it did disperse,
As he were warned with enchanted rhimes,
That oftentimes he quak'd. Spenser, F. Q.

Who would not sing for Lycidas? he knew
Himself to sing, and build the lofty rhyme.
Milton, Lycidas.

Things unattempted yet in prose or rhime.
Milton, P. L.

4. A word of sound to answer to another word.

What wise means to gain it hast thou chose?
Know fame and fortune both are made of prose.
Is thy ambition sweating for a rhyme,
Thou unambitious fool, at this late time? Young.

RHYME or reason. Number or sense.

I was promis'd to on a time,
To have reason for my rhime,
But from that time unto this season,
I receiv'd nor rhime nor reason.

Verses ascribed (unjustly) to Spenser.

The guiltiness of my mind drove the grossness of the foppery into a received belief, in despite of the teeth of all rhime and reason, that they were fairies. Shakespeare.

To RHYME.† v. n. [rimen, Fr. Theotisc.
See RHYME. Dan. rimen; Germ. reimen.]

1. To agree in sound.

He was too warm on picking word to dwell,
But fagot his notions as they fell,
And, if they rhym'd and rattled, all was well.
Dryden.

2. To make verses.

These fellows of infinite tongue, that can rhyme themselves into ladies' favours, they do always reason themselves out again. Shakespeare, Hen. V.

There march'd the bard and blockhead, side by side,
Who rhym'd for hire, and patroniz'd for pride.

Pope.

To RHYME.* v. a. To put into rhyme.

There was not a dosen sentences in his whole sermon but they ended all in rime for the most part: Some, not well disposed, wished the preacher a lute, that with his rimed sermon he might use some pleasaunte melodie, and so the people might take pleasure divers waies, and daunce if thei liste!

Wilson, Arte of Rhetorique, (1553.)

The first [translation of the Psalms] too elegant for the vulgar use; the other as flat and poor, as lamely worded, and unhandsomely rhimed, as the old.

Bp. King to Atq. Usher, (1651.) Lett. ed. Parr, p. 567.

RHYMELESS.* adj. [rhyme and less.] Not having consonance of verses.

Too popular is tragick poesie,
Straining his tiptoes for a farthing fee:
And doth beside on rhymeless numbers tread.

Bp. Hall, Sat. i. 4.

RHYMER.† } n. s. [from rhyme.] One RHYMESTER. } who makes rhymes; a versifier; a poet in contempt.

Saucy lictors
Will catch at us like strumpets; and scald rhymers
Ballad us out o' tune. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

Such wond'rous rabblements of rhymesters new.
Bp. Hall, Sat. i. 2.

When a rimen reads his poem to him, he [the hypocrite] begs a copy, and persuades the press!

Bp. Hall, Charact. p. 65.
It was made penal to the English, to permit the Irish to graze upon their lands, to entertain any of their minstrels, rhymers, or news-tellers.

Davies on Ireland.

Rhymer, come on, and do the worst you can;
I fear not you, nor yet a better man. Dryden.

Milton's rhime is constrained at an age, when the passion of love makes every man a rhimer, though not a poet.

I speak of those who are only rhimsters.
Dennis.

RHYTHM.* n. s. [rhythmus, Lat. ῥυθμός, Gr.]
1. Metre; verse; numbers.

The old Italian tunes and rhymes, both in concet and cadency, have much affinity with the Welsh. Howell, Instr. for Trav. (1642.) p. 123.

You may find Scaliger refuted for denying poetick rhithme or meeter, (and so not poesie in a strict sense), to be in Scripture: for St. Hierome is of another mind; and the impossibility of a rhithme in that language [Hebrew], like our δμοιοελεον, like cadency of words, which we strictly call rhyme, is by Alsted's instances refuted in Psal. 118. 25.

Whitlock, Mann. of the English, (1654.) p. 47.

Now sportive youth

Carol incondite rhythms with suiting notes,
And quaver unharmonious. Phillips, Cider, B. 2.

2. Proportion applied to any motion whatsoever.
Harris.

RHYTHMICAL.† adj. [ῥυθμικός; rhythmique, Fr. from rhythm.] Harmonical;
having one sound proportioned to another.

Several sorts of music; harmonical, rhimical, and organical. Fotherby, Atheom. (1622.) p. 343.

The term figure which we now employ to distinguish florid from more simple melody, was used to denote that which was simply rhythmical or accental. Mason on Ch. Music, p. 28.

RIAL.* n. s. A piece of money. See REAL.

RIANT.* adj. [French; from rire, to laugh.] Laughing; exciting laughter.
Scott.

In such cases the sublimity must be drawn from the other sources; with a strict caution however against any thing light and riant.

Burke on the Subl. and Beautiful, P. ii. § 16.

RIB.† n. s. [pubbe, Saxon.]

1. A bone in the body.

Of these there are twenty-four in number, viz. twelve on each side the twelve vertebrae of the back; they are segments of a circle; they grow flat and broad, as they approach the sternum;
but the nearer they are to the vertebrae, the rounder and thicker they are; at which end they have a round head, which being covered with a cartilage, is received into the sinus in the bodies of the vertebrae: the ribs thus articulated, make an acute angle with the lower vertebrae: the ribs have each a small canal or sinus, which runs along their under sides, in which lies a nerve, vein, and artery: their extremities, which are fastened to the sternum, are cartilaginous, and the cartilages make an obtuse angle with the bony part of the ribs; this angle respects the head:
the cartilages are harder in women than in men, that they may better bear the weight of their breasts: the ribs are of two sorts; the seven upper are called true ribs, because their cartilaginous ends are received into the sinus of the sternum: the five lower are called false ribs, because they are softer and shorter, of which only the first is joined to the extremity of the sternum, the cartilaginous extremities of the rest being tied to one another, and thereby leaving a greater space for the dilatation of the stomach and entrails: the last of these short ribs is shorter than all the rest: it is not tied to them, but sometimes to the musculus obliquus descendens.

Why do I yield to that suggestion?
Whose horrid image doth upfix my hair,
And make my seated heart knock at my ribs,
Against the use of nature! Shakespeare, Macbeth.

He open'd my left side, and took
From thence a rib, with cordial spirits warm
And life-blood streaming fresh. Milton, P. L.

Sure he, who first the passage try'd,
In harden'd oak his heart did hide,
And ribs of iron arm'd his side. Dryden, Hor.

2. Any piece of timber or other matter which strengthens the side.

I should not see the sandy hour-glass run,
But I should think of shallows and of flats;
And see my wealthy Andrew dock'd in sand,
Vailing her high top lower than her ribs,
To kiss her burial. Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

The ships with shatter'd ribs scarce creeping
From the seas. Dryden.

3. Any prominence running in lines; as, the stalks of a leaf.

4. Any thing slight, thin, or narrow; a strip.
Fetch up his single melancholy cow from a small rib of land, that is scarce to be found without a guide.

TO RIB.* v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To furnish with ribs.

Was I by rocks engender'd, ribb'd with steel,
Such tortures to resist, or not to feel? Smdys.

2. To enclose as the body by ribs.

It were too gross

To rib her cerecloth in the obscure grave.

Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

Remember

The natural bravery of your isle, which stands

As Neptune's park, ribb'd and pale'd in,

With rocks unscalable and roaring waters,

Shakespeare, Cymbeline.

RYBALD.† n. s. [ribauld, Fr. ribaldo, Italian; ribald, Su.-Goth. nebulu, which here derives from hrid, pugna, and balldr, audaux; meaning licentious, ungovernable soldiers. Roquefort thus illustrates the Fr. ribauld, anciently ribau, or ribaud: "Nom donné à tout homme fort, robuste, et de peine, comme crocheteur, porteur, &c. C'étoit aussi le nom qui portoit celui qui, chez le roi, avoit soin de faire le soir la visite du palais, pour voir si tout étoit dans l'ordre. On appeloit aussi ribauds, sous Philippe-le-bel et Philippe-Auguste, des soldats d'élite, choisis pour leur garde particulière, et roi des ribauds celui qui commandoit cette garde. Enfin ribaud signifioit encore bandit, voleur, scélérat, méchant, libertin, excommunié; homme qui procure des femmes de mauvais vie, qui les soutient." A loose, rough, mean, brutal wretch.

That lewd ribald with vile lust advaunt,
Laid first his filthy hands on virgin clean,
To spoil her dainty corps, so fair and sheen.

Spenser, F. Q.

Ne'er one sprig of laurel grac'd these ribalds,
From slashing Bentley down to piddling Tibbalds.

Pope.

RYBALD.* adj. Base; mean.

The busy day,

Wak'd by the lark, has rous'd the ribald crows.

Shakespeare, Tr. and Cress.

Which ribald art their church to Luther owes.

Dryden, Hind and Panther.

RYBALDISH.* adj. [from ribald.] Disposed to ribaldry.

They have a ribaldish tongue.

Ep. Hall, Estate of a Christian.

RYBALDRY.† n. s. [from ribald; ribaudie, old Fr. ribalderia, old Ital. Our elder word was ribaudry. "Ditties of wanton love or ribaudrye." Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 63. "Rymes of ribaudrie." Spenser, Shep. Cal. Oct.] Mean, lewd, brutal language.

Were it not for quaffing, ribaldry, dalliance, scurrile profaneness, these men would be dull, and (as we say) dead on the nest!

Ep. Hall, Rem. p. 7.

Mr. Cowley asserts, that obscenity has no place in wit; Buckingham says, 'tis an ill sort of wit, which has nothing more to support it than bare-faced ribaldry.

Dryden.

The ribaldry of the low characters is different; the reeve, miller, and cook are distinguished from each other.

Dryden.

In the same antique loom these scenes were wrought;

Embellish'd with good morals and just thought,
True nature in her noblest light you see,
E'er yet debauch'd by modern gallantry

To trifling jests and fulsome ribaldry. Granville.

If the outward profession of religion were once in practice among men in office, the clergy would see their duty and interest in qualifying themselves for lay-conversation, when once they were out of fear of being choaked by ribaldry or prophaneness.

Swift.

RYBAND. n. s. [rubande, ruban, Fr. This word is sometimes written ribon, or ribbon, as Dr. Johnson observes; and in that form, I may add, approaches nearer to the Fr. ruban, for rubande is not believed to have ever existed. See Nare's Elem. of Orthoepey, p. 308. Menage tells us, that ruban is from the Lat. rubens, red; "rubeus, rubenus, rubanus, RUBAN: les plus beaux rubans sont de couleur de feu." A fillet of silk; a narrow web of silk, which is worn for ornament.

Quaint in green, she shall be loose enrob'd,
With ribands pendent, flaring 'bout her head.

Shakespeare.

A riband did the braided tresses bind,

The rest was loose. Dryden, Kn. Tale.

See! in the lists they wait the trumpet's sound;
Some love-device is wrought on every sword,
And every riband bears some mystick word.

Granville.

TO RYBAND.* v. a. [from the noun.] To adorn with ribands.

One that has miraculously purchased a ribanded waistcoat. Beaum. and Fl. Fair Maid of the Inn.
Your mistress appears here in prize, ribanded with green and yellow. B. Jonson, Cynth. Revels.

RYBBD.* adj. [from rib.]

1. Furnished with ribs.

Hung on each bough a single leaf appears,
Which shrivell'd in its infancy remains,
Like a clos'd fan, nor stretches wide its veins,
But as the seasons in their circle run,
Opens its ribb'd surface to the nearer sun. Gay.

2. Marked with protuberant lines.

And plantain ribb'd, that heals the reaper's wound;

And marj'ram sweet in shepherd's posie found.

Shenstone, Schoolmistress.

RYBIBE.* n. s. [rubebe, violon. Lacombe. But see REBECK.] A sort of stringed instrument. Obsolete.

RYBON. n. s. See RIBAND.

TO RYBROAST. v. n. [rib and roast.] To beat soundly. A burlesque word.

That done, he rises, humbly bows,
And gives thanks for the princely bowls;
Departs not meanly proud, and boasting
Of his magnificent ribroasting. Butler.

I have been pinched in flesh, and well ribroasted under my former masters; but I'm in now for skin and all. L'Estrange.

RYBWORT. n. s. [plantago.] A plant.

RIC. n. s. Ric denotes a powerful, rich, or valiant man; as in these verses of Fortunatus:

Hilperice potens, si interpres barbarus

adsit,

Adjutor fortis hoc quoque nomen

habet.

Hilperic Barbarians a stout helper term.

So Afric is altogether strong; Æthelric, nobly strong or powerful: to the same sense as Polycrates, Crato, Plutarchus, Opimius. Gibson's Camden.

RICE.† n. s. [riz, Old Fr. riso, Ital. oryza, Lat. ῥίζα, Gr. from the Arabic word rouz.] One of the esculent grains: it hath its grains disposed into a panicle, which are almost of an oval figure, and are covered with a thick husk, somewhat like barley: this grain is cultivated in most of the eastern countries. Miller.

Rice is the food of two-thirds of mankind; it is kindly to human constitutions, proper for the consumptive, and those subject to hæmorrhages.

Arbuthnot.

If the snuff get out of the snuffers, it may fall into a dish of rice milk. Swift, Direct. to the Butler.

RICH.† adj. [pice, pice, piche, Saxon; rice, old Fr. riche, modern; ricco, Ital. rik, Su. rikr, Icel. from the M. Goth. reiks, a prince, a ruler, according to Serenius; from the Goth. verb rikjan, to collect together, according to Mr. H. Tooke. The derivation of Serenius seems to be the true one; power, in barbarous times, being, as Dr. Jamieson has observed, the great source of wealth.]

1. Wealthy; abounding in wealth; abounding in money or possessions; opulent; opposed to poor.

I am as rich in having such a jewel,
As twenty seas, if all their sand were pearl.

Shakespeare.

The rich shall not give more, and the poor no less. Exod.

A thief bent to unhoard the cash

Of some rich burgher. Milton.

Rich was his soul, though his attire was poor,
As heaven had cloth'd his own ambassador. Dryden.

Several nations of the Americans are rich in land, and poor in all the comforts of life. Locke.
He may look upon the rich as benefactors, who have beautified the prospect all around him. Seed.

2. Valuable; estimable; precious; splendid; sumptuous.

Earth, in her rich attire,
Consummate lovely smil'd. Milton, P. L.

Matilda never was meanly dress'd in her life; and nothing pleases her in dress, but that which is very rich and beautiful to the eye, Law.

3. Having any ingredients or qualities in a great quantity or degree.

So we th' Arabian coast do know
At distance, when the spices blow,
By the rich odour taught to steer,

Though neither day nor star appear.

Waller.

If life be short, it shall be glorious,
Each minute shall be rich in some great action.

Rowe.

Sauces and rich spices are fetched from India.

Baker.

4. Fertile; fruitful.

There are, who, fondly studious of increase,
Rich foreign mold on their ill-natur'd land Induce.

Philips.

5. Abundant; plentiful.

The gorgeous East with richest hand
Pours on her sons barbaric pearl and gold.

Milton, P. L.

6. Abounding; plentifully stocked: as, pastures rich in flocks.

7. Having something precious.

Groves whose rich trees wept odorous gums and balms.

Milton, P. L.

To RICH,* v. a. [from the noun. Dr. Johnson gives the word in the passage from Shakspeare's K. Lear as an adjective. But to rich is certainly one of our old verbs.] To enrich. Obsolete.

Then he shall be riched so,
That it maie faile nevermo.

Gower, Conf. Am. B. 4.

To rich his country, let his words lyke flowing water fall.

Drant, Tr. of Horace, (1567.)

Of all these bounds,

With shadowy forests, and with champions rich'd,

With plenteous rivers and wide-skirted meads,

We make thee lady.

Shakspeare, K. Lear.

RICHES,† n. s. [puçheſſe, Saxon; richesse, Fr. Dr. Johnson notices only the Fr. plural richesses; but both our old language and the French had the singular. "Let us when we perceyve the danger of this worldly and transitory rychesse call unto Almyghty God for helpe." Bp. Fisher, Ps. This form was not disused at the beginning of the seventeenth century. See Revel. xviii. 16. "In one hour so great riches is come to nought."]]

1. Wealth; money or possessions.

The instrumentallnes of riches to charity has rendered it necessary by laws to secure propriety.

Hammond.

Chemists seek riches by transmutation and the great elixir.

Syrat.

Riches do not consist in having more gold and silver, but in having more in proportion than our neighbours, whereby we are enabled to procure to ourselves a greater plenty of the conveniences of life, than comes within their reach, who, sharing the gold and silver of the world in a less proportion, want the means of plenty and power, and so are poorer.

Locke.

What riches give us, let us first enquire,

Meat, fire, and cloaths; what more? meat, cloaths, and fire.

Pope.

2. Splendid sumptuous appearance.

The riches of heaven's pavement, trodden gold.

Milton, P. L.

RICHLY,† adv. [from rich; Sax. puçheſſe.]

1. With riches; wealthily; splendidly; magnificently.

In Belmont is a lady richly left,
And she is fair, of wondrous virtues.

Shakspeare.

Women richly gay in gems.

Milton.

2. Plenteously; abundantly.

In animals, some smells are found more richly than in plants.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

After a man has studied the laws of England, the reading the reports of adjudged cases will richly improve him.

Watts.

3. Truly; abundantly. An ironical use.

There is such licentiousness among the basest of the people, that one would not be sorry to see them bestowing upon one another a chastisement, which they so richly deserve.

Addison.

RICHNESS. n. s. [from rich.]

1. Opulence; wealth.

Of virtue you have left proof to the world;
And virtue is grateful with beauty and richness adorn'd.

Sidney.

2. Finery; splendour.

3. Fertility; fecundity; fruitfulness.

This town is famous for the richness of the soil.

Addison.

4. Abundance or perfection of any quality.

I amused myself with the richness and variety of colours in the western parts of heaven.

Spectator.

5. Pampering qualities.

The living tincture of whose gushing blood
Should clearly prove the richness of his food.

Dryden.

RICK,† n. s. [usually reck, in our old books; puç, *hp*ic, Sax. a heap; hruk, Icel. from hreika, to pile a heap, according to Serenius; from the Goth. rikjan, to rake together, according to Mr. H. Tooke. See also REEK.]

1. A pile of corn or hay regularly heaped up in the open field, and sheltered from wet.

An inundation

O'erflow'd a farmer's barn and stable;

Whole ricks of hay and stacks of corn

Were down the sudden current born.

Swift.

Mice and rats do great injuries in the field,

houses, barns, and corn ricks.

Mortimer, Husb.

2. A heap of corn or hay piled by the gatherer.

In the north they bind them up in small bundles, and make small ricks of them in the field.

Mortimer.

RICKETS. n. s. [rachitis, Latin. The name given to the distemper at its first appearance by Glisson.]

A distemper in children, from an unequal distribution of nourishment, whereby the joints grow knotty, and the limbs uneven: its cure is performed by evacuation and friction.

Quincy.

In some years, liver-grown, spleen, and rickets are put together, by reason of their likeness.

Gravatt, Bills of Mortality.

O were my pupil fairly knock'd o' th' head,
I should possess th' estate, if he were dead;

He's so far gone with the rickets and th' evil,
That one small dose will send him to the devil.

Dryden.

So when at school we first declaim,
Old Busby walks us in a theme,

Whose props support our infant vein,
And help the rickets in the brain;

But when our souls their force dilate,
Our thoughts grow up to wit's estate.

Prior.

RICKETY. adj. [from rickets.] Diseased with the rickets.

In a young animal, when the solids are too lax, the case of rickety children, the diet should be gently astringent.

Arbuthnot.

RICTURE. n. s. [ricitura, Lat.] A gaping.

Dict.

RID. pret. of ride.

To RID,† v. a. in the pret. perhaps ridded, or rid; in the passive part. rid. [hpebban and aþeþban, Sax. redde, Teut. redda, Su. Goth.]

1. To set free; to redeem.

It is he that delivereth me from my cruel enemies; thou shalt rid me from the wicked man.

Ps. xviii. 49.

Rid me and deliver me out of great waters.

Ps. cxliv.

I will bring you out from under their burthens, and rid you out of their bondage.

Ex. vi. 6.

2. To clear; to disencumber.

They were not before so willing to be rid of their learned pastor, as now importunate to obtain him again from them, who had given him entertainment.

Hooker.

I must rid all the seas of pirates.

Shaks.

We'll use his countenance; which being done, Let her, who would be rid of him, devise

His speedy taking off.

Shaks. K. Lear.

Upon the word, steep forth

Three of thy crew, to rid thee of that care.

B. Jonson.

I can put on

Thy terrors, as I put thy mildness on, Image of thee in all things; and shall soon, Arm'd with thy might, rid heaven of these rebels.

Milton, P. L.

Did saints for this bring in their plate; For when they thought the cause had need on't,

Happy was he that could be rid on't.

Hudibras.

The god, uneasy till he slept again,

Resolv'd at once to rid himself of pain.

Dryden.

The greater visible good does not always raise men's desire, in proportion to the greatness it appears to have; though every little trouble moves us, and sets us on work to get rid of it.

Locke.

The ladies asked, whether we believed that the men of any town would, at the same conjuncture, have loaden themselves with their wives; or rather, whether they would not have been glad of such an opportunity to get rid of them?

Addison.

3. To dispatch.

Having the best at Barnet field,
We'll thither straight; for willingness rids away.

Shakspeare.

4. To drive away; to remove by violence; to destroy.

Ah deathsmen! you have rid this sweet young prince.

Shakspeare.

RIDDANCE. n. s. [from rid.]

1. Deliverance.

Deliverance from sudden death, riddance from all adversity, and the extent of saving mercy towards all men.

Hooker.

2. Disencumbrance; loss of something one is glad to lose.

I have too griev'd a heart
To take a tedious leave: thus losers part.

— A gentle riddance.

Shaks. Merch. of Ven.

By this, the cock had a good riddance of his rival.

L'Esrange.

3. Act of clearing away any encumbrances.

Those blossoms, and those dropping gums,
That lie bestrown, unsightly and unsmooth,
Ask riddance, if we mean to tread with ease.

Milton, P. L.

RIDDEN. the participle of ride.

He could never have ridden out an eternal period, but it must be by a more powerful being than himself.

Hale.

RIDDLE,† n. s. [pæbel], Saxon, from pæbe, counsel, perhaps a trial of wit. Dr. Johnson.—Mr. Horne Tooke contends that it is the past participle of prian, to twist, metaphorically applied. He had here forgotten the Saxon verb aþeþban, to guess, to divine; from which riddle obviously descends. Serenius also produces rada, Goth. per conjecturam indagare.]

1. An enigma; a puzzling question; a dark problem.

How did you dare

To trade and traffick with Macbeth,
In riddles and in charms of death? Shaks. Macbeth.
The Theban monster, that propos'd
Her riddle, and him, who solv'd it not, devour'd;
That once found out and solv'd, for grief and sight

Cast herself headlong from the Ismenian steep.

Milton.

2. Any thing puzzling.

'Twas a strange riddle of a lady;
Not love, if any lov'd her: eye day!
So cowards never use their might,
But against such as will not fight.

Hudibras.

3. [Jumble, Saxon; perhaps from hpebban, to free, (and so to separate or disentangle,) as Skinner has observed.] A coarse or open sieve.

Horse-beans and tares, sown together, are easily parted with a riddle.

Mortimer.

To RIDDLE.† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To solve; to unriddle. There is something of whimsical analogy between the two senses of the word riddle: as, we say, to sift a question: but their derivations differ.

When I have done all this, and think it duty,
Is't requisite another bore my nostrils?
Riddle me that. Beaum. and Fl. Tam. Tamed.
Riddle me this, and guess him if you can,
Who bears a nation in a single man?

Dryden, Jew.

2. To separate by a coarse sieve.

The finest sifted mould must be riddled in.

Mortimer.

To RIDDLE. v. n. [from the noun.] To speak ambiguously or obscurely.

Be plain, good son, and homely in thy drift;
Riddling confession finds but riddling shrift.

Shakespeare.

RIDDLER.* n. s. [from riddle.] One who speaks obscurely or ambiguously.

Thou riddler, speak

Distinct and clear; else I will search thy soul.

Home, Douglas.

RIDDLINGLY. adv. [from riddle.] In the manner of a riddle; secretly.

Though like the pestilence and old-fashion'd love,
Riddlingly it catch men, and doth remove
Never, till it be starv'd out, yet their state
Is poor.

Donne.

To RIDE. v. n. preter. rid or rode; part. rid or ridden. [uban, Saxon; rijden, Dutch.]

1. To travel on horseback.

Brutus and Cassius

Are rid, like madmen, through the gates of Rome.

Shakespeare.

Were you but riding forth to air yourself,
Such parting were too petty.

Shakespeare, Cymb.

Am not I thine ass, upon which thou hast ridden?

Numbers.

Through storms of smoke and adverse fire he rides,

While every shot is levell'd at his sides.

Smith.

Let your master ride on before, and do you gallop after him.

Swift, Dir. to the Groom.

2. To travel in a vehicle; to be borne, not to walk.

Infected be the air whereon they ride. Shaks.
Upon this chaos rid the distressed ark, that bore
the small remains of mankind.

Burnet, Theory.

3. To be supported in motion.

As venerable Nestor, hatch'd in silver,
Should with a bond of air, strong as the axle-tree,

On which heaven rides, knit all the Grecian ears
To his experienc'd tongue. Shaks. Tr. and Cress.

4. To manage an horse.

Skill to ride seems a science,
Proper to gentle blood; some others feign,
To manage steeds, as did this vaunter; but in vain.

Spenser.

The horses I saw well chosen, ridden, and furnished.

Shakespeare.

Inspir'd by love, whose business is to please,
He rode, he fenc'd, he mov'd with graceful ease.

Dryden.

5. To be on the water.

On the western coast

Rideth a puissant army. Shakespeare, Rich. III.
The sea was grown so rough, that the admiral was not able longer to ride it out with his galleys;
but was enforced to slip his anchors, and run his galleys on ground.

Kydles.

They were then in a place to be aided by their ships, which rode near in Edinburgh Frith.

Hayward.

Waiting him his royal fleet did ride,
And willing winds to their flew d' sails deny'd.

Dryden.

Men once walk'd where ships at anchor ride.

Dryden.

Now on their coasts our conquering navy rides,
Way-lays their merchants, and their land besets.

Dryden.

6. To be supported by something subservient.

A credulous father, and a brother noble,
Whose nature is so far from doing harms,
That he suspects none; on whose foolish honesty
My practices ride easy.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

To RIDE. v. a.

1. To sit on so as to be carried.

They ride the air in whirlwind. Milton, P. L.

2. To manage insolently at will.

Humility does not make us servile or insensible, nor oblige us to be ridden at the pleasure of every cocombe.

Collier.

The nobility could no longer endure to be ridden
by bakers, cobblers, and brewers.

Swift, Presbyt. Plea.

RIDE.* n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A saddle-horse. Norfolk. Grose.

2. A little stream. Hampshire. Grose.

3. An excursion in a vehicle, or on horseback: as, to take a ride.

4. A road cut in a wood, or through grounds, for the purpose of using the diversion of riding therein; a riding.

See RIDING.

RIDER.† n. s. [from ride; Sax. pubepe.]

1. One who is carried on a horse or in a vehicle.

The strong camel and the generous horse,
Restrain'd and aw'd by man's inferior force,
Do to the rider's will their rage submit,
And answer to the spur, and own the bit.

Prior.

2. One who manages or breaks horses.

As horses are bred better; and to that end riders dearly hired.

Shakespeare, As you like it.

I would with jockies from Newmarket dine,
And to rough riders give my choicest wine.

Bramstone.

3. An inserted leaf; an additional clause, as to a bill passing through parliament.

They tack'd the following rider to it.

Brand, Popul. Antiq. ii. 237.

RIDGE. n. s. [hpriz, Saxon; rig, Danish; rugge, Dutch; the back.]

1. The top of the back.

He thought it was no time to stay;
But in a trice advanc'd the knight
Upon the bare ridge bolt upright.

Hudibras.

2. The rough top of any thing, resembling the vertebræ of the back.

As when a vulture on Imaus bred,
Whose snowy ridge the roving Tartar bounds,
Dislodges from a region scarce of prey.

Milton, P. L.

His sons

Shall dwell to Seir, on that long ridge of hills!

Milton, P. L.

The highest ridges of those mountains serve for the maintenance of cattle for the inhabitants of the valleys.

Ray.

3. A steep protuberance.

Part rise in crystal wall, or ridge direct,
For haste.

Milton, P. L.

About her coasts unruly waters roar,
And, rising on a ridge, insult the shore.

Dryden.

4. The ground thrown up by the plow.

Thou visitest the earth; thou waterest the ridges thereof abundantly; thou settlest the furrows thereof.

Ps. lxx. 10.

The body is smooth on that end, and on this 'tis set with ridges round the point.

Woodward.

Wheat must be sowed above furrow fourteen days before Michaelmas, and laid up in round high warm ridges.

Mortimer.

5. The top of the roof rising to an acute angle.

Ridge tiles or roof tiles, being in length thirteen inches, and made circular breadthways like an half cylinder, whose diameter is about ten inches or more, and about half an inch and half a quarter in thickness, are laid upon the upper part or ridge of the roof, and also on the hips.

Mason.

6. Ridges of a horse's mouth are wrinkles or risings of the flesh in the roof of the mouth, running across from one side of the jaw to the other like fleshy ridges, with interjacent furrows or sinking cavities.

Farrier's Dict.

To RIDGE.† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To form a ridge.

Thou from heaven

Feign'dst at thy birth given thee in thy hair,
Where strength can least abide, though all thy hairs
Were bristles rang'd like those that ridge the back
Of chat'd wild boars, or ruffled porcupines.

Milton, S. A.

2. To wrinkle.

An eye

As fix'd as marble, with a forehead ridg'd
And furrow'd into storms.

Cowper.

RIDGEL.† } n. s. [ovis rijculæ, Lat.

RIDGELING. } Ainsworth. From the Sax.
pugan, to conceal; some portion of what was to be removed having been hidden from the operator's eye. Mr. H. Tooke.

From rig, Sax. hpriz, the back, "quasi rig-hold, quia testiculæ (sive alter testiculæ) intra dorsum retinentur, neque in scrotum descendunt." Dr. Whitaker,

Hist. of Craven, p. 293.] An animal half castrated: a ram of this description, in the north, is called a riggitt.

The word has also the forms of rig and rigsie.

Tend my herd, and see them fed;
To morning pastures, evening waters, led:
And 'ware the Libyan ridge's butting head.

Dryden.

RIDGINGLY.* adv. [from ridge.] After the manner of ridges, or ridge by ridge.

Hudoc.

RIDGy. adj. [from ridge.] Rising in a ridge.

Far in the sea against the foaming shore,
There stands a rock; the raging billows roar
Above his head in storms; but, when 'tis clear,
Uncurl their ridgy backs, and at his feet appear.

Dryden.

RIDICULE. † n. s. [ridicule, Fr. ridiculum, Lat. The accent, as Dr. Johnson has placed it and as Mr. Nares has observed upon it, was formerly upon the last syllable of this word; and Mr. Nares tells us, that he had even heard it so used by persons adhering to the ancient fashion. Elem. of Orthoep. 1792, p. 361. There can be little doubt, however, that Pope intended to place the accent on the first syllable; and so the word is now usually pronounced.]

1. Wit of that species that provokes laughter.

Sacred to ridicule his whole life long,
And the sad burthen of some merry song. Pope.
Those, who aim at ridicule,
Should fix upon some certain rule,
Which fairly hints they are in jest. Swift, Miscell.

2. Folly; ridiculousness.

It does not want any great measure of sense to see the ridicule of this practice.

RIDICULE.* adj. [ridicule, Fr.] Ridiculous. Not in use.

This action — was brought to court, and became so ridiculous, that Sylvanus Scory was so laughed at and jeered, that he never delivered the letter to the queen. Aubrey, Anecd. ii. 529.

TO RIDICULE. v. a. [from the noun.] To expose to laughter; to treat with contemptuous merriment.

I wish the vein of ridiculing all that is serious and good may no worse effect upon our state, than knight errantry had on theirs. Temple.

RIDICULER. † n. s. One that ridicules.

They are generally ridiculers of all that is truly excellent. Clarke, Evid. of Nat. and Rev. Religion.
The ridiculer shall make only himself ridiculous.

Earl of Chesterfield.

RIDICULOUS.* adj. [ridicule, Fr. ridiculus, Lat. Ridiculus was in use before Milton wrote, from whose Paradise Lost Dr. Johnson's earliest example of the word is drawn. Aubrey, Milton's contemporaries, uses the French adjective ridicule. But ridiculous had been employed by our translators of the Bible.] Worthy of laughter; exciting contemptuous merriment.

A stammering tongue, [in the margin ridiculous], that thou canst not understand.

Isaiah, xxxiii. 19.

He that sacrificeth of a thing wrongfully gotten, his offering is ridiculous. Ecclesi. xxxiv. 18.

Thus was the building left

Ridiculous; and the work confusion nam'd.

Milton, P. L.

It was not in Titus's power not to be derided; but it was in his power not to be ridiculous. South.

RIDICULOUSLY. adv. [from ridiculous.] In a manner worthy of laughter or contempt.

Epicurus's discourse concerning the original of the world is so ridiculously merry, that the design of his philosophy was pleasure and not instruction.

South.

RIDICULOUSNESS. n. s. [from ridiculous.] The quality of being ridiculous.

What sport do Tertullian, Minucius, and Arnobius make with the images consecrated to divine worship? from the meanness of the matter they are made of, the casualties of fire, and rottenness they are subject to, on purpose to represent the ridiculousness of worshipping such things.

Stillingfleet.

RIDING. particip. adj. Employed to travel on any occasion.

It is provided by another provincial constitution, that no suffragan bishop shall have more than one riding apparitor, and that archdeacons shall not have so much as one riding apparitor, but only a foot messenger. Ayliffe, Parergon.

RIDING. † n. s. [from ride.]

1. A road cut in a wood, or through grounds, for the purpose of using the diversion of riding therein.

Swift, Direc. to the Groom.

RIDINGHABIT.* n. s. [riding and habit.] A dress worn by women, when they ride on horseback.

There is another kind of occasional dress in use among the ladies; I mean the ridinghabit, which some have not injudiciously styled the hermaphroditical, by reason of its masculine and feminine composition. Guardian, N. 149.

Here is the dress of a modern anatomist, in what is called a ridinghabit. Watson, Hist. E. P. iv. 71.

RIDINGHOOD. n. s. [riding and hood.] A hood used by women, when they travel, to bear off the rain.

The pallium was like our ridinghoods, and served both for a tunic and a coat.

Arbutnot on Coins.

Good housewives all the winter's rage despise, Defended by the ridinghood's disguise. Gay.

RIDINGHOUSE.* † n. s. A place in which RIDINGSCHOOL. } the art of riding is taught.

I hope you apply the time you have saved from the ridinghouse to useful more than to learned purposes. Ld. Chesterfield.

RIDOTTO.* n. s. [Italian; "a company, a crew or assembly of good fellows; also, a gaming or tabling house, or other place where good companies doth meete."] Florio, 1598.] A sort of public assembly.

In the mornings, if you are high-bred enough, you are to go to White's, where whist may engage you till the masquerade, ridotto, or some other polite amusement calls you away.

The Student, vol. ii. p. 366.

How then must four long months be worn away? Four months, in which there will be no routs, no shows, no ridottos; in which visits must be regulated by the weather, and assemblies will depend upon the moon! Dr. Johnson, Rambler, N. 124.

RIE. n. s. [See RYE.] An esculent grain. This differs from wheat in having a flatter spike, the corn larger and more naked. Miller.

August shall bear the form of a young man of a fierce aspect, upon his head a garland of wheat and rie. Peacham.

RIFE.* adj. [pȳfe, Saxon; rijf, Dutch.] Prevalent; prevailing; abounding. It is now only used of epidemical distempers, Dr. Johnson says; but it is still a northern term in the sense of prevalent, common, &c. See Brockett's N. C. Words.

While those restless desires, in great men rife, To visit so low folks did much disdain,
This while, though poor, they in themselves did reign. Sidney.

Guyon closely did await
Advantage; whilst his foe did rage most rife;
Sometimes athwart, sometimes he strook him straight,

And falsed off his blows. Spenser.
The plague was then rife in Hungary. Arnolles.

Blessings then are plentiful and rife,
More plentiful than hope. Herbert.

Space may produce new worlds; whereof so rife
There went a fame in heav'n; that are long Intended to create. Milton, P. L.

This is the place,
Whence even now the tumult of loud mirth
Was rife, and perfect in my listening ear. Milton, Comus.

That grounded maxim
So rife and celebrated in the mouths
Of wisest men, that to the publick good
Private respects must yield. Milton, S. A.

Before the plague of London, inflammations of the lungs were rife and mortal. Arbutnot on Air.

RIFE. adv. [from rife.] Prevalently; abundantly.

It was *rife*ly reported, that the Turks were coming in a great fleet. Knolles, Hist.

RIFEENESS. † n. s. [from rife.] Prevalence; abundance.

The rifeness of their familiar excommunications may have thought them to seek for a spotlessness above. Bp. Hall, Beauty and Unity of the Church.

He scribbles the great rifeness of carbuncles in the summer, to the great heats. Arbutnot on Air.

RIFRAFFE.* † n. s. [il ne luy lairra rif ne raf.] Cotgrave, in V. RIF. Where rif is defined rien, nothing.] The refuse of any thing.

Thwack-thwack, and riff-raf, roars he out aloud! Bp. Hall, Sat. i. 6.

This is all riff-raf.

Beaumont and Fl. Kn. Burn. Peste.

TO RIFLE. v. a. [riffer, rifler, French, rijffelen, Teut.]

1. To rob; to pillage; to plunder.

Stand still, sir, and throw us what you have about you; if not, we'll make you, sir, and rifle you. Shakespeare.

Men, by his suggestion taught,
Ransack'd the centre, and with impious hands
Rifled the bowels of their mother earth

For treasures better hid. Milton, P. L.
You have rifled my master; who shall maintain me? L'Estrange.

A commander in the parliament's rebel army rifled and defaced the cathedral at Lichfield.

South.

2. To take away; to seize as pillage.

Mine is thy daughter, priest, and shall remain,
And pray's and tears, and bribes shall plead in vain.

Till time shall rifle every youthful grace. Pope.

RIFLE.* n. s. [rijffelen, Teut. radere, scalpere. Kilian.]

1. A kind of whetstone.

All our sports and recreations, if we use them well, must be to our body, or mind, as the mower's whetstone, or rifle, is to his scythe, to sharpen it when it grows dull.

Whately, Redempt. of Time, (1634), p. 11.

2. A sort of gun, having, within its barrel, indented lines.

RIFLEMAN.* n. s. One armed with a rifle.

RIFLER. † n. s. [from rifle.] Robber; plunderer; pillager. Prompt. Parv.

Parting both with cloak and coat, if any please to be the rifler. Milton, Doct. and Disc. of Divorce.

RIFT. † n. s. [from To rive; rioven, rived, rift. Skinner, and Mr. H. Tooke. Skinner considers rive as descended from peapian, rapere. Chaucer writes this word rest. "If thou maiest finden any shore, or hole, or refte." Rom. R. 2661. Serenius and Lye produce the Icel. rist, from ristu, rima, a chink.] A cleft; a breach; an opening.

He plucked a bough, out of whose rist there come Small drops of gory blood.

She did confine thee

Into a cloven pine, within which rist Imprison'd, thou didst painfully remain. Shakspeare.

In St. James's fields is a conduit of brick, unto which joineth a low vault; at the end of that is a round house, with a small slit or rist; and in the conduit a window: if you cry out in the rist, it makes a fearful roaring at the window. Bacon.

They have an idle tradition, that a missel bird, feeding upon a seed she cannot digest, expelleth it whole; which, falling upon a bough of a tree that hath some rist, putteth forth the missile. Bacon.

Either tropick now

'Gan thunder, and both ends of heaven; the clouds,

From many a horrid rist, abortive pour'd

Fierce rain with lightning mixt. Milton, P. R.

Some pick out bullets from the vessel's sides, Some drive old oakum through each seam and rist.

Dryden.

To RIST. v. a. [from the noun.] To cleave; to split. To rive is perhaps more proper.

To the dread rattling thunder

Have I giv'n fire, and risted Jove's stout oak

With his own bolt. Shakspeare, Tempest.

At sight of him the people with a shout

Risted the air. Milton, S. A.

On risted rocks, the dragon's late abodes,

The green reed trembles. Pope, Messiah.

To RIST† v. n.

1. To burst; to open.

I'd shriek, that even your ears

Should rist to hear me. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

Some trees are best for ship timber, as oaks that grow in moist grounds; for that maketh the timber tough, and not apt to rist with ordnance.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

When ice is congealed in a cup, it will swell instead of contracting, and sometimes rist.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

2. To belch; to break wind. [ræver, Danish, the same; perhaps from the Sax. piþ, alvus, venter.] A northern word.

RIG.† n. s. Rig, ridge, seem to signify the top of a hill falling on each side; from the Saxon, hrigg; and the Icelandick, hriggr, both signifying a back. Gibson. "Ridge of land, agger." Prompt. Parv. Rig is still our northern word, used in opposition: as, rig and furrow.

RIG.* n. s. [perhaps from the Icel. riga, citare in gym.] Bluster.

This sanguine little king's fisher (not prescient of the storm, as by his instinct he ought to be) appearing at that uncertain season before the riggs of old Michaelmas were yet well composed, and when the unclement storms of winter were approaching, began to flicker over the seas, and was busy in building its halcyon nest, as if the angry ocean had been soothed by the genial breath of May.

Burke on a Regicide Peace, Lett. 3.

RIG.* n. s. [perhaps from the old French rigoler, to mock; to laugh at; "se rigoler de, to make merry, or play the wanton with." Cotgrave.]

1. A wanton; an impudent woman; a strumpet.

Fy on thee thou rampe, thou rig!
Com. of Gamm. Garton's Needle, (1551.)
The most voluptuous, over-wanton rigge,
Proud plenty, scorns meek piety's womanhood.

Davies, Wit's Pilgrim. sign. V. 2.

2. To run a RIG. To play a trick of gaiety or merriment.

'Away went Gilpin, neck or nought,

Away went hat and wig;

He little dreamt, when he set out,

Of running such a rig.

Cowper.

3. To run the RIG upon. To practise a joke upon a person; to jeer; to banter. [rigoler, Fr.] Both this and the preceding are low expressions.

To RIG.* v. n. [from the noun.] To play the wanton. So rigging, according to Grose, is used in the west of England.

Seek judgement; relieve [in the margin righten]

the oppressed.

Isaiah, l. 17.

RIGHTEOUS.† adj. [riht-pir, Saxon; whence rightwise, in our old authors rightwisness, in Wicliffe; and rightwisely.

in Bishop Fisher: so much, as Dr. Johnson remarks, are words corrupted by pronunciation. Upon the word before us the following excellent observation

demandes especial notice. " 'Tis the Gospel's work to reduce man to the principles of his first creation; that is to be both good and wise. Our ancestors, it seems, were clear of this opinion. He that was pious and just was reckoned a righteous man. God, liness and integrity was called an counted righteousness. And in their old

Saxon English, righteous was right-wise and righteousness was originally right wiseness." Feltham, Res. ii. 48.]

1. Just; honest; virtuous; uncorrupt.

That far be from thee, to slay the righteous with the wicked; and that the righteous should be of the wicked.

Genesis.

2. Equitable; agreeing with right.

Kill my rival too; for he no less

Deserves; and I thy righteous doom will bless.

Dryden.

RIGHTEOUS.* adj. Made righteous; justified. Not in use, and inelegant.
Can we meryte grace with synne? or deserve to be righteous by folye?

Bale, Yet a Course, (1543.) fol. 62. b.

RIGHTEOUSLY.† adv. [from righteous.]

1. Honestly; virtuously.

Athen's did righteously decide,
When Phocion and when Socrates were try'd;
As righteously they did those dooms repent,
Still they were wise, whatever way they went.

Dryden.

2. According to desert.

Turn from us all those evils that we most righteously have deserved.

Litany.

RIGHTEOUSNESS. n. s. [from righteous.]
Justice; honesty; virtue; goodness; integrity.

The scripture, ascribing to the persons of men righteousness, in regard of their manifold virtues, may not be construed, as though it did thereby clear them from all faults.

Hooker.

Here wretched Phlegias warns the world with cries,

Could warning make the world more just or wise;
Learn righteousness, and dread th' avenging deities.

Dryden.

Good men often suffer, and that even for the sake of righteousness.

Nelson.

RIGHTER.* n. s. [from right; phitepe,
Sax. rector, gubernator.] A redresser;
one who relieves from wrong; one who does justice to.

I will pay thee what I owe thee, as that righter of wrongs hath left me commanded.

Shelton, Tr. of D. Quir. i. 4.

RIGHTFUL.† adj. [right and full.]

1. Having the right; having the just claim.

As in this haughty great attempt,
They laboured to supplant the rightful heir;
I lost my liberty, and they their lives.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

Some will mourn in ashes, some coal black,
For the deposing of a rightful king.

Shakespeare, Rich. II.

2. Honest; just; agreeable to justice.

Joseph his hosbonde — was a rightful man.

Wicliffe, St. Matt. i.

I came not to clepe rightful men, but synful men.

Wicliffe, St. Matt. ix.

Nor would, for gold or fee,
Be won, their rightful causes down to tread.

Spenser.

Grant to us, Lord, we beseech thee, the spirit to think and do always such things as be rightful.

Collect.

Gather all the smiling hours;
Such as with friendly care have guarded
Patriots and kings in rightful wars.

Prior.

RIGHTFULLY. adv. [from rightful.] According to right; according to justice.

Henry, who claimed by succession, was sensible that his title was not sound; but was rightfully in Mortimer, who had married the heir of York.

Dryden, Pref. to Fab.

RIGHT-HAND. n. s. Not the left.

The rank of osiers, by the murmuring stream,
Left on your right-hand brings you to the place.

Shakespeare.

RIGHTFULNESS. n. s. [from rightful.]
Moral rectitude.

But still although we fail of perfect rightful-
ness,

Seek we to tame these superfluities,
Nor wholly wink though void of purest sight-fulness.

Sidney.

RIGHTLY. adv. [from right.]

1. According to truth or justice; properly; suitably; not erroneously.

VOL. III.

Each of his reign allotted, rightlier call'd
Powers of fire, air, water, and earth beneath.

Milton.

Descend from heaven, Urania! by that name
If rightly thou art call'd.

Milton.

For glory done.

Of triumph, to be styl'd great conquerors,
Patrons of mankind, gods, and sons of gods;
Destroyers rightlier call'd, and plagues of men.

Milton.

A man can never have so certain a knowledge, that a proposition, which contradicts the clear principles of his own knowledge, was divinely revealed, or that he understands the words rightly, wherein it is delivered; as he has, that the contrary is true.

Locke.

Is this a bridal or a friendly feast?

Or from their deeds I rightlier may divine,
Unseemly frown with insolence or wine.

Pope, Odys.

2. Honestly; uprightly.

Let not my jealousies be your dishonour;
You may be rightly just, whatever I shall think.

Shakespeare.

3. Exactly.

Should I grant, thou didst not rightly see;
Then thou wert first deceiv'd.

Dryden.

4. Straitly; directly.

We wish one end; but differ in order and way,
that leadeth rightly to that end.

Ascham, Schoolmaster.

RIGHTNESS. n. s. [from right.]

1. Conformity to truth; exemption from being wrong; rectitude; not error.

It is not necessary for a man to be assured of the rightness of his conscience, by such an infallible certainty of persuasion, as amounts to the clearness of a demonstration; but it is sufficient if he knows it upon grounds of such a probability, as shall exclude all rational grounds of doubting.

South.

Like brute beasts we travel with the herd, and are never so solicitous for the rightness of the way, as for the number or figure of our company.

Rogers, Serm.

2. Straitness.

Sounds move strongest in a right line, which nevertheless is not caused by the rightness of the line, but by the shortness of the distance.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

RIGID. adj. [rigide, Fr. rigidus, Lat.]

1. Stiff; not to be bent; unpliant.

A body, that is hollow, may be demonstrated to be more rigid and inflexible, than a solid one of the same substance and weight.

Ray on the Creation.

2. Severe; inflexible.

His severe judgement giving law,

His modest fancy kept in awe;

As rigid husbands jealous are,
When they believe their wives too fair.

Denham.

3. Unremitted; unmitigated.

Queen of this universe! I do not believe

Those rigid threats of death; ye shall not die.

Milton, P. L.

4. Sharp; cruel. It is used somewhat harshly by Philips.

Cressy plains

And Agincourt, deep ting'd with blood, confess

What the Silures vigorous unwithstood

Could do in rigid fight.

Philips.

RIGIDITY.† n. s. [rigidité, Fr. from rigid.]

1. Stiffness.

Rigidity is said of the solids of the body, when, being stiff or impliable, they cannot readily perform their respective offices; but a fibre is said to be rigid, when its parts so strongly cohere together, as not to yield to that action of the fluids, which ought to overcome their resistance in order to the preservation of health; it is to be remedied by fomentations.

Rigidity of the organs is such a state as makes them resist that expansion, which is necessary to carry on the vital functions; rigidity of the vessels and organs must necessarily follow from the rigidity of the fibres. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. Stiffness of appearance; want of easy or airy elegance.

This severe observation of nature, by the one in her commonest, and by the other in her absolute forms, must needs produce in both a kind of rigidity, and consequently more naturalness than gracefulness. Wolton on Architecture.

3. Severity; inflexibility.

Not to mollify a transcendence of literal rigidity.

Milton, Tetraichordon.

Till the Lutherans abate of their rigidity.

Burnet on the Articles, Pref.

RIGIDLY.† adv. [from rigid.]

1. Stiffly; unpliantly.

2. Severely; inflexibly; without remission;
without mitigation.

It is a greater fault rigidity to censure, than to commit a small oversight. Fuller, Holy War, p. 47.

If any one shall rigidly urge from that passage the literal expression of breeding, he must allow Moses to speak in the language of the vulgar in common affairs of life.

Bentley, Serm. 4.

RIGIDNESS.† n. s. [from rigid.] Stiffness;
severity; inflexibility.

Giving themselves over to meditation, to prayer,
to fasting, to all severity and rigidness of life.

Hales, Rem. p. 110.

It is possible there may be so much good-nature in the husband, as to take off somewhat from that rigidness, which otherwise the principles of his religion would bind him to.

Sanderson, Cases of Consc. p. 4.

RIGLET. n. s. [regulet, Fr.] A flat thin square piece of wood.

The pieces that are intended to make the frames for pictures, before they are molded, are called riglets.

Mozon.

RIGMAROLE.* n. s. A repetition of idle words; a succession of long stories.
This word is colloquial and modern, and has some appearance of a corruption of an old expression, namely of the famous
"ragman's roll," as a collection of deeds was called, in which the nobility and gentry were compelled to subscribe allegiance to K. Edw. I. of England; recorded in four large rolls of parchment, consisting of thirty-five pieces bound together. See Dr. Jamieson's Scottish Etym.
Dict. in V. RAGMAN'S ROW, or ROLL.
But it may be referred to the old English word ragman, which is used in P.
Ploughman's strains, (as Dr. Jamieson has shewn,) both as a brief, and as a herald or recorder, one who recites a long list. The pardoner, with his brief, recital, or list of indulgences, is thus described:

"He — blered their eyes,

"And raughte, with his ragman, both ringes and broches." P. Pl. Vision.

The herald, thus:

"Ther is non heraud hath half swich
a rolle

"Right as a rageman hath rekned them newe." P. Pl. Crede.

Dr. Jamieson thinks that the Teut. reghe, ordo, series, is connected with that word. Ragman-rolls became a familiar term, as is evident by Skelton's usage of it.

I dyd what I coule to scarpe out the scrolles, Apollo to rase out of her ragman rolles.

Mr. Rigmarole, believe me, a woman with a butt of sack at her elbow is never long-lived!

RIGOL.† n. s. A circle. Perhaps peculiar to Shakespeare.

This sleep is sound; this is a sleep, That, from this golden rigol, hath divorc'd So many English kings. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.
About the mourning and congealed face Of that black blood a watery rigol goes, Which seems to weep upon the tainted place.

RIGOUR.† n. s. [rigor, Lat. rigueur, Fr. rigor, old Fr. Roq. Suppl.]

1. Cold; stiffness.

Haste, hapless sighs; and let your burning breath Dissolve the ice of her indurate heart, Whose frozen rigor, like forgetful death, Feels never any touch of my desert.

In Dowland's First Book of Songs, (1597.) The rest his look Bound with Gorgonian rigour, not to move.

2. A convulsive shuddering with sense of cold.

Rigors, chillness, and a fever attend every such new suppuration.

A right regimen, during the rigor or cold fit in the beginning of a fever, is of great importance; a long continued rigor is a sign of a strong disease; during the rigor, the circulation is less quick, and the blood actually stagnates in the extremities, and, pressing upon the heart, may produce concretions; therefore a rigor increaseth an inflammation.

3. Severity; sternness; want of condescension to others.

Nature has got the victory over passion; all his rigor is turned to grief and pity.

Rigour makes it difficult for sliding virtue to recover.

4. Severity of life; voluntary pain; austerity.

He resumed his rigors, esteeming this calamity such a one as should not be outlived, but that it became men to be martyrs to.

Does not looseness of life, and a want of necessary sobriety in some, drive others into rigors that are unnecessary?

This prince lived in this convent, with all the rigor and austerity of a capuchin. Addison on Italy.

5. Strictness; unabated exactness.

It may not seem hard, if in cases of necessity certain profitable ordinances sometimes be relaxed, rather than all men always strictly bound to the general rigor thereof.

Heat and cold are not, according to philosophical rigour, the efficient; but are names expressing our passions.

The base degenerate age requires Severity and justice in its rigour. This avers an impious bold offending world.

6. Rage; cruelty; fury.

He at his foe with furious rigour smites, That strongest oak might seem to overthrow;
The stroke upon his shield so heavy lights, That to the ground it doubleth him full low.

Driven by the necessities of the times and the temper of the people, more than led by his own disposition to any height and rigour of actions.

7. Hardness; not flexibility; solidity; not softness.

The stones the rigor of their kind expel, And supple into softness as they fell.

RIGOROUS.† adj. [rigoureux, Fr. Cotgrave.]

1. Severe; allowing no abatement.

He shall be thrown down the Tarpeian rock, With rigorous hands; he hath resisted law, And therefore law shall scorn him further trial, Than the severity of public power. Shaks. Coriol.

Are these terms hard and rigorous, beyond our capacities to perform?

2. Exact; scrupulously nice; as, a rigorous demonstration; a rigorous definition.

RIGOROUSLY.† adv. [from rigorous.]

1. Severely; without tenderness or mitigation.

Lest they faint At the sad sentence rigorously urg'd, For I behold them soften'd, and with tears Bewailing their excess, all terror hide.

The people would examine his works more rigorously than himself, and would not forgive the least mistake.

2. Exactly; scrupulously; nicely.

A man of strict honour, because he is punctual to his promises; because he is scrupulous in paying his debts, and rigorously just in discharging the duties of his station.

The rules of the three unities are indeed rigorously and scrupulously observed.

RIGOROUSNESS.* n. s. [from rigorous.] Severity, without tenderness or mitigation.

RILL.† n. s. [ryll, Icel. rivulus, in the Edda, q. d. rinnel, from the Su. Goth. rinna, to flow. Serenius. Rather, an abbreviation of the Lat. rivulus, viz. rillus. The old French language has riller, glisser, couler. Roq.] A small brook; a little streamlet.

May thy brimmed waves from this Their full tribute never miss, From a thousand petty rills, That tumble down the snowy hills.

On every third delightful wisdom grows, In every rill a sweet instruction flows; But some untaught, o'erhear the whispering rill, In spite of sacred leisure blockheads still.

To RILL. v. n. [from the noun.] To run in small streams.

Io! Apollo, mighty king, let envy, Ill-judging and verbose, from Lethe's lake, Draw tuns unmeasurable; while thy favour Administers to my ambitious thirst The wholesome draught from Aganippe's spring Genuine, and with soft murmurs gently rilling Adown the mountains where thy daughters haunt.

RILLET. n. s. [corrupted from rivulet.] A small stream.

A creek of Ose, between two hills, delivering a little fresh rillet into the sea. Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

Th' industrious muse thus labours to relate Those rilllets that attend proud Tamer and her state.

RIM. n. s. [rim, Saxon.]

1. A border; a margin.

It keeps off the same thickness near its centre; while its figure is capable of variation towards the rim.

2. That which encircles something else.

We may not affirm, that ruptures are confinable unto one side, as the peritoneum or rim of the belly may be broke; or its perforations relaxed in either.

The drum-maker uses it for rims.

RIME.† n. s. [hpm, pm, Sax. pm-popte, rime-frost.]

1. Hoar frost.

Breathing upon a glass giveth a dew; and in rime frosts you shall find drops of dew upon the inside of glass windows.

In a hoar frost, a rime is a multitude of quadrangular prisms piled without any order one over another.

2. [Rima, Lat.] A hole; a chink. Not used.

Though birds have no epiglottis, yet can they contract the rime or chink of their larynx, so as to prevent the admission of wet or dry indigested.

3. A step of a ladder. North.

To RIME. v. n. [from the noun.] To freeze with hoar frost.

RIME.* See RHYME.

RIMPLE.* n. s. [hpympelle, Saxon.] A wrinkle; a fold.

To RIMPLE.† v. a. [from the noun. This is our old word, which Dr. Johnson dismisses with a reference to crumple and rumple, and with the example from Wiseman's Surgery. "Rympled, rugntus."] Prompt. Parv.] To pucker; to wrinkle.

A rimpled vecke farre ronne in age.

The skin was tense, also rimpled and blistered.

RIMPLING.* n. s. [from rimple.] Uneven motion; undulation.

Throughout the lanes she glides at evening's close,

And softly lulls her infant to repose; Then sits and gazes, but with viewless look, As gilds the moon the rimpling of the brook.

RI'MY. adj. [from rim.] Steamy; foggy; full of frozen mist.

The air is now cold, hot, dry, or moist; and then thin, thick, foggy, rimy, or poisonous.

To RINCE.† See To RINSE.

RIND. n. s. [junb, Saxon; rinde, Dutch.] Bark; husk.

Therewith a piteous yelling voice was heard, Crying, O spare with guilty hands to tear My tender sides in this rough rind embar'd.

Within the infant rind of this small flower Poison hath residence, and medicine power.

These plants are neither red nor polished, when drawn out of the water, till their rind have been taken off.

Others whose fruit, burnish'd with golden rind, Hung amiable.

Thou canst not touch the freedom of this mind With all thy charms, although this corporal rind Thou hast immanacled.

This monument, thy maiden beauty's due, High on a planetree shall be hung to view; On the smooth rind the passenger shall see Thy name engrav'd, and worship Helen's tree.

To RIND. v. a. [from the noun.] To de-corticate; to bark; to husk.

RING.† n. s. [hpmg, pmg, Sax. hring, Icel. circus: "vox antiquiss. et in ling. septentr. usitatissima." Serenius.]

1. A circle; an orbicular line.

Met I my father with his bleeding rings, Their precious gems new lost.

Bubbles of water, before they began to exhibit their colours to the naked eye, have appeared through a prism girded about with many parallel and horizontal rings. Newton.

2. A circle of gold or some other matter worn as an ornament.

A quarrel.

— About a hoop of gold, a paltry ring. Shakespeare.
I have seen old Roman rings so very thick about, and with such large stones in them, that 'tis no wonder a fop should reckon them a little cumbersome in the summer. Addison.

3. A circle of metal to be held by.

The rings of iron, that on the doors were hung, Sent out a jarring sound, and harshly rung. Dryden.
Some eagle got the ring of my box in his beak, with an intent to let it fall, and devour it. Swift.

4. A circular course.

Chaste Diana,
Goddess presiding o'er the rapid race,
Place me, O place me in the dusty ring,
Where youthful charioteers contend for glory. Smith.

5. A circle made by persons standing round.

Make a ring about the corps of Caesar,
And let me shew you him, that made the will. Shakespeare.

The Italians, perceiving themselves almost envired, cast themselves into a ring, and retired back into the city. Hayward.

Round my arbour a new ring they made,
And footed it about the secret shade. Dryden.

6. A number of bells harmonically tuned.

A squirrel spends his little rage,
In jumping round a rowling cage;
The cage as either side turn up,
Striking a ring of bells a-top. Prior.

7. The sound of bells or any other sonorous body.

Stop the holes of a hawk's bell, it will make no ring, but a flat noise or rattle. Bacon.

Hawks' bells, that have holes, give a greater ring, than if the pellet did strike upon brass in the open air. Bacon.

Sullen Moloch, fled,
Hath left in shadows dread
His burning idol all of blackest hue;
In vain with cymbals ring,
They call the grisly king. Milton, Ode Nativ.

8. A sound of any kind.

The king, full of confidence, as he had been victorious in battle, and had prevailed with his parliament, and had the ring of acclamations fresh in his ears, thought the rest of his reign should be but play. Bacon, Hen. VII.

To RING.† v. a. pret. and part. pass. ring, [hpingan, Saxon.]

1. To strike bells or any other sonorous body, so as to make it sound.

Ring the alarm bell. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

2. [From ring.] To encircle.

Talbot,
Who, ring'd about with bold adversity,
Cries out for noble York and Somerset. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

3. To fit with rings.

Death, death; oh amiable lovely death!
Thou odoriferous stench, sound rottenness,
Arise forth from thy couch of lasting night,
Thou hate and terror to prosperity,
And I will kiss thy detestable bones,
And put my eye-balls in thy vaulty brows,
And ring these fingers with thy household worms. Shakespeare.

4. To restrain a hog by a ring in his nose.

But then some pence 'twould cost the clowne
To yoke and eke to ring them. W. Browne.

To RING.† v. n.

1. To form a circle. Not noticed by Dr. Johnson.

From the ocean all rivers spring,
And tribute back repay as to their king:
Right so from you all goodly virtues well
Into the rest, which round about you ring. Spenser, F. Q.

2. To sound as a bell or sonorous metal.

Ring out, ye crystal spheres,
And let your silver chime
Move in melodious time;
And let the base of heaven's deep organ blow. Milton.

No funeral rites nor man in mournful weeds,
Nor mournful bell shall ring her burial. Shaks.
Easy it might be to ring other changes upon the same bells. Norris, Miscell.

At Latagus a weighty stone he flung;
His face was flatted, and his helmet rung. Dryden.

3. To practise the art of making music with bells.

Signs for communication may be contrived at pleasure: four bells admit twenty-four changes in ringing; each change may, by agreement, have a certain signification. Holder.

4. To sound; to resound.

Hercules, missing his page, called him by his name aloud, that all the shore rang of it. Bacon.
The particular ringing sound in gold, distinct from the sound of other bodies, has no particular name. Locke.

With sweeter notes each rising temple ring,
A Raphael painted! and a Vida sung! Pope.

5. To utter as a bell.

Ere to black Hecat's summons
The shard-born beetle, with his drowsy hums,
Hath rung night's yawning peal, there shall be done

A deed of dreadful note. Shaksp. Macbeth.

6. To tinkle.

My ears still ring with noise; I'm vex'd to death:
Tongue-kill'd, and have not yet recover'd breath. Dryden.

7. To be filled with a bruit or report.

That profane, atheistical epicurean rabble, whom the whole nation so rings of, are not indeed what they vote themselves, the wisest men in the world. South.

RING-BONE. n. s.

Ring-bone is a hard callous substance growing in the hollow circle of the little pastern of a horse, just above the coronet: it sometimes grows quite round like a ring, and thence it is called the ring-bone. Farrier's Dict.

RINGDOVE. n. s. [rîngelduyve, German.]

Pigeons are of several sorts, wild and tame; as wood pigeons, dovecot pigeons, and ringdoves. Mortimer.

RINGER. n. s. [from ring.] He who rings.

RINGING.* n. s. [from ring.] Art or act of making music with bells.

Many other sports there be, as ringing, bowling, &c. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 266.

To RINGLEAD.* v. a. [ring and lead.] To conduct.

For that he useth no true compass, nor card, he ringleads them to all wrack.

Transl. of Abp. of Spalato's Serm. (1617), p. 34.

RINGLEADER.† n. s. [ring and leader.]

1. One who leads the ring. Mr. Pegge is greatly mistaken in saying that we always use this word in a bad sense; viz. that of a person who is at the head of a mob, or any tumultuous assembly. Anonym. p. 98. It is true, Dr. Johnson has taken no notice of the original meaning of the word. But Barret, in 1580, tells us, that a ringleader was the Lat. præsulor, dux, and Fr. celuy qui mene la danse. And the incomparable Barrow confirms this.

St. Peter had a primacy of order, such an one as the ringleader hath in a dance, as the primordial centurion had in the legion.

2. The head of a riotous body.

He caused to be executed some of the ringleaders of the Cornish men, in sacrifice to the citizens. Bacon, Hen. VII.

The nobility escaped; the poor people, who had been deluded by these ringleaders, were executed. Addison.

RINGLET. n. s. [ring, with a diminutive termination.]

1. A small ring.

Silver the lintels, deep projecting o'er;
And gold the ringlets that command the door. Pope.

2. A circle.

You demy puppets, that
By moonshine do the green ringlets make,
Whereof the ewe not bites. Shakespeare, Tempest.
Never met we,
Upon the beached margin of the sea,
To dance our ringlets to the whistling wind,
But with thy brawls thou hast disturb'd our sport. Shakespeare.

3. A curl.

With ringlets quaint, and wanton windings wove. Milton, Arcades.

Her golden tresses — in wanton ringlets war'd,
As the vine curls her tendrils. Milton, P. L.
These in two sable ringlets taught to break,
Once gave new beauties to the snowy neck. Pope.

RINGSTREAKED. adj. [ring and streaked.] Circularly streaked.

He removed the he-goats that were ringstreaked and spotted, and all the she-goats that were speckled. Gen. xxx. 35.

RINGTAIL.† n. s. [ring and tail.] A kind of kite with a whitish tail. Bailey.

Thou royal ring-tail, fit to fly at nothing,
But poor men's poultry. Beaum. and Fl. Philaster.

RINGWORM. n. s. [ring and worm.] A circular tetter.

It began with a serpio, making many round spots, such as is generally called ringworms. Wiseman, Surgery.

To RINSE.† v. a. [from rein, Germ. pure, clear. Dr. Johnson. — This may be carried to the M. Goth. hreinsa, clean, pure; Icel. hreinsa, to make clean; reinsur, old Fr. to wash. Our word is often written rinse, and in its northern form rench.]

1. To wash; to cleanse by washing.

This last costly treaty
Swallow'd so much treasure, and like a glass
Did break i' the rinning. Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.
Whomsoever he toucheth, and hath not rinced his hands in water, he shall be unclean. Lev. xv. 11.

This must move us humbly to sue unto God, and earnestly to entreat him, to wash us thoroughly from our wickedness, and cleanse us from our sins; yea to purge and rinse the fountain thereof, our unclean and polluted hearts. Perkins.

2. To wash the soap out of clothes.

They cannot boil, nor wash, nor rinse, they say, With water sometimes ink, and sometimes whey, According as you meet with mud or clay. King.

RINSER. n. s. [from rinse.] One that washes or rinses; a washer.

RIOT.† n. s. [riote, Fr. riotta, Italian. Dr. Johnson. — Sørenius deduces the word from the Goth. riotta, subsultare, Sueh. ruta, grassari, dissolutè vivere; Callander, from the Goth. reta, Icel. reita, ad iram excitare.]

1. Wild and loose festivity.

When his headstrong riot hath no curb,
When rage and hot blood are his counsellors,
When means and lavish manners meet together,
Oh! with what wings shall his affection fly
Tow'rd fronting peril and oppos'd decay.

Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

So senseless of expence,
That he will neither know how to maintain it,
Nor cease his flow of riot.

Shakspeare, Timon.

Not accused of riot, or unruly. Tit. i. 6.
All now was turn'd to jollity and game,
To luxury and riot, feast and dance.

Our chariots and our horsemen be in readiness.

Shakspeare.

To R'IPEN.† v. n. [ripijan, Sax.] To grow ripe; to be matured.

This is the state of man; to-day he puts forth
The tender leaves of hope, to-morrow blossoms,
And bears his blushing honours thick upon him;
The third day comes a frost, a killing frost;
And when he thinks, good easy man, full surely
His greatness is a ripening, nips his root;
And then he falls as I do.

Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

Afore the sour grape is ripening in the flower.

Is. xviii. 5.

The pricking of a fruit before it ripeneth, ripens the fruit more suddenly.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Trees, that ripen latest, blossom soonest; as peaches and cornelians; and it is a work of providence that they blossom so soon; for otherwise they could not have the sun long enough to ripen.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Melons on beds of ice are taught to bear,
And strangers to the sun yet ripen here.

Granville.

To R'IPEN. v. a. To mature; to make ripe.

thrive exceedingly. Dryden.

Mortimer.

RISE.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The act of rising, locally or figuratively.

Sit down, my masters, he cried, your rise hath been my fall. Ld. Bacon, in Mallet's Life of him.

Thy rise of fortune did I only wed,
From its decline determin'd to recede? Prior.

2. The act of mounting from the ground.

In leaping with weights, the arms are first cast backward and then forwards, with so much the greater force; for the hands go backward before they take their rise. Bacon.

3. Eruption; ascent.

Upon the candle's going out, there is a sudden rise of water; for the flame filling no more place,
the air and water succeed. Bacon.

The hill submits itself
In small descents, which do its height beguile;
And sometimes mounts, but so as billows play,
Whose rise not hinders, but makes short our way.
Dryden.

4. Place that favours the act of mounting aloft.

Rais'd so high, from that convenient rise
She took her flight, and quickly reach'd the skies.

Creech.

Since the arguments against them rise from common received opinions, it happens, in controversial discourses, as it does in the assailing of towns, where, if the ground be but firm, whereon the batteries are erected, there is no farther inquiry of whom it is borrowed, so it affords but a fit rise for the present purpose.

Locke.

5. Elevated place.

Such a rise, as doth at once invite
A pleasure, and a reverence from the sight.

Denham.

6. Appearance as of the sun in the East.

Phœbus! stay;
The world to which you fly so fast,
From us to them can pay your haste
With no such object, and salute your rise
With no such wonder, as De Mornay's eyes.

Waller.

7. Increase in any respect.

8. Increase of price.

Upon a breach with Spain, must be considered the present state of the king's treasure, the rise or fall that may happen in his constant revenue by a Spanish war.

Temple.

The bishops have had share in the gradual rise of lands.

Swift.

9. Beginning; original.

It has its rise from the lazy admonitions of those who give rules, and propose examples, without joining practice with their instructions.

Locke on Education.

All wickedness taketh its rise from the heart, and the design and intention with which a thing is done, frequently discriminates the goodness or evil of the action.

Nelson.

His reputation quickly peopled it, and gave rise to the republic, which calls itself after his name.

Addison.

10. Elevation; increase of sound.

In the ordinary rises and falls of the voice, there fall out to be two becmolls between the unison and the diapason.

RÍTUAL. adj. [rituel, Fr.] Solemnly ceremonious; done according to some religious institution.

Instant I bade the priests prepare
The ritual sacrifice, and solemn pray'r.

Prior.

If to tradition were added, certain constant ritual and emblematical observances, as the emblems were expressive, the memory of the thing recorded would remain.

Forbes.

RÍTUAL. n. s. [from the adj.] A book in which the rights and observances of religion are set down.

An heathen ritual could not instruct a man better than these several pieces of antiquity in the particular ceremonies, that attended different sacrifices.

Addison on Italy.

RÍTUALIST.† n. s. [from ritual.] One skilled in the ritual.

In whose rituals, as Ben Casem, Sid Ben Hali, Abdalla, &c. if you find any such thing, it will be more than could be expected.

Gregory, Notes on Script. (ed. 1684,) p. 99.

Of this there are two notable instances taken notice of by Cassian, and several other ritualists.

Bournie, Antiq. of the Com. People, p. 26.

RÍTUALLY.* adv. [from ritual.] With some particular ceremony.

In some parts of this kingdom is joined also solemnity of drinking out of a cup, ritually composed, decked, and filled with country liquor.

RÍVVAGE.† n. s. [French.] A bank; a coast; the shore. Not now in use.

Golden sand

The which Pactolus with his waters shere
Throws forth upon the rivage round about him nere.

Spenser, F. Q.

Think

You stand upon the rivage, and behold
A city on th' incessant billows dancing;
For so appears this fleet.

Shakspeare, Hen. V.

RÍVAL.† n. s. [rivalis, Lat. from rivus, a river; the word rivalis, in Latin, being originally applied, according to Sir T. Hamner, to proprietors of neighbouring lands parted only by a brook, which belonged equally to both; and so signified partners, or those concerned in the same affair. Morin more fully illustrates this derivation from rivus: "Rivalis désigne proprement ceux qui ont droit d'usage dans un même ruisseau; et comme cet usage est souvent pour eux un sujet de contestations, on a transporté cette signification de rivalis à ceux qui ont les mêmes prétentions à une chose." Dict. Etym. Fr. and Gr.]

1. One who is in pursuit of the same thing which another man pursues: a competitor.

Oh love! thou sternly dost thy pow'r maintain,
And wilt not bear a rival in thy reign;
Tyran'ts and thou all fellowship disdain.

Dryden.

2. A competitor in love.

She saw her father was grown her adverse party,
And yet her fortune such as she must favour her rival.

Sidney.

France and Burgundy,
Great rivals in our younger daughter's love.

Shakspeare.

Your rival's image in your worth I view;
And what I lov'd in him, esteem in you.

Granville.

RÍVAL. adj. Standing in competition; making the same claim; emulous.

Had I but the means
To hold a rival place with one of them,
I should be fortunate. Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.
Equal in years, and rival in renown
With Epaphus, the youthful Phaeton,
Like honour claims.

Dryden.

You bark to be employ'd,
While Venus is by rival dogs enjoy'd.

Dryden.

To RÍVAL. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To stand in competition with another; to oppose.

Those, that have been raised by the interest of some great minister, trample upon the steps by which they rise, to rival him in his greatness, and at length step into his place. South.

2. To emulate; to endeavour to equal or excel.

Ambitious fool! with horny hoofs to pass
O'er hollow arches of resounding brass;
To rival thunder in its rapid course,
And inmate inimitable force. Dryden, Æn.

O thou, too great to rival or to praise,
Forgive, lamented shade, these duteous lays,
Lee had thy fire, and Congreve had thy wit;
And copyists, here and there, some likeness hit;
But none possess'd thy graces, and thy ease;
In thee alone 'twas natural to please! Harte.

- To RIVAL. v. n. To be competitors. Out of use.

Burgundy,
We first address towards you, who with this king
Hath rival'd for our daughter. Shaks. K. Lear.

- RIVAL'RY.† n. s. [rivalitas, Lat.]

1. Equal rank. Obsolete.

Cæsar, having made use of him in the wars
'gainst Pompey, presently denied him rivalry;
would not let him partake in the glory of the action. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

2. Competition; rivalry.

- RIVALRY. n. s. [from rival.] Competition; emulation.

It is the privilege of posterity to set matters right between those antagonists, who, by their rivalry for greatness, divided a whole age. Addison.

- RIVALSHIP.† n. s. [from rival.] The state or character of a rival.

He hath confess'd
To me in private that he loves another,
My lady's woman, Mrs. Pleasance; therefore Secure you of rivalship. B. Jonson, Magn. Lady.

- To RIVE. v. a. preter. rived, part. riven.

[ryft, broken, Saxon; riiven, Dutch; river, Fr. to drive.] To split; to cleave; to divide by a blunt instrument; to force in disruption.

At his haughty helmet
So hugely struck, that it the steel did rive,
And cleft his head. Spenser.
The varlet at his plaint was grieved sore,
That his deep wounded heart in two did rive. Spenser.

Through riven clouds and molten firmament,
The fierce three-forked engine making way,
Both lofty towers and highest trees hath rent. Spenser.

O Cicero!

I have seen tempests, when the scolding winds
Have ri'd the knotty knots; but ne'er till now
Did I go through a tempest dropping fire. Shaks.
As one he stood escap'd from cruel fight,
Sore toil'd, his riven arms to havock hewn. Milton, P. L.

The neighbouring forests, formerly shaken and riven with the thunder-bolts of war, did envy the sweet peace of Drina. Howell, Voc. For.
Had I not been blind, I might have seen
Yon riven oak, the fairest of the green. Dryden.
Let it come;
Let the fierce lightning blast, the thunder rive me. Rowe.

- To RIVE.† v. n. [riřwa, Su. Goth.] To be split; to be divided by violence.

His hearte asonder rieth. Chaucer, Rom. R. 5718.
Oh that our hearts could but rive in sunder at but the dangers of those publick judgements! Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 69.

Blow, thou west wind,
Blow, till thou rive, and make the sea run roaring.
Beaum. and Fl. Pilgrim.
Freestone rives, splits, and breaks in any direction. Woodward.

- RIVE.* n. s. [ryf, Icel.] A rent or tear. Brockett's N. C. Words.

- To RIVEL.† v. a. [zeipelen, Saxon, corrugated, rumpel'd; ryffelen, Teut.] To contract into wrinkles and corrugations.

Her cheekes ben with teres wette,
And rievlyn as an empty skyn. Gower, Conf. Am. B. 1.

It [melancholy] makes their hollow-eyed, and to have wrinkled brows, rivelled cheeks, dry bodies. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 96.

Base quean, and rievl'd with!

Then droop'd the fading flowers, the river beauty fled,
And clos'd their sickly eyes and hung the head,
And rievl'd up with heat, lay dying in their bed. Dryden.

And since that pteuous autumn now is past,
Whose grapes and peaches have indulg'd your taste,
Take in good part, from our poor poet's board,
Such rievl'd fruits as winter can afford. Dryden.

Alum stickpicks, with contracting power,
Shrink his thin essence like a rievl'd flower. Pope.

- RIVEL.* n. s. [from the verb; ruyffel,
RIVELING. } Teut.] Wrinkle.

Huloet, and Sherwood.

It hadde no wem, ne ruyelings, or any such thing,
Wicliffe, Ephes. v.

- RIVEN. part. of rive.

- RIVER.† n. s. [riviere, Fr. rivus, Lat.] A land current of water bigger than a brook.

Springs make rivulets; and these united form brooks; which coming forward in streams, compose great *river*s that run into the sea. Locke.

It is a most beautiful country, being stored throughout with many goodly *river*s, replenished with all sorts of fish. Spenser.

The first of these *river*s has been celebrated by the Latin poets for the gentleness of its course, as the other for its rapidity. Addison on Italy.

- RIVER.* n. s. [from To rive.] One who splits or cleaves.

An honest block-river, with his beetle, heartily calling,
Echard, Obs. on the Answ. to Cont. of the Cl. p. 23.

- RIVER-DRAGON. n. s. A crocodile. A name given by Milton to the king of Egypt.

Thus with ten wounds
The river-dragon tam'd at length, submits
To let his sojourners depart. Milton, P. L.

- RIVERET.† n. s. [diminutive of river.] A small stream; a rill.

Bringing all their riverets in,
There ends; a new song to begin. Drayton, Polyolb.

Calls down each riveret from her spring,
Their queen upon her way to bring. Drayton, Polyolb. S. 8.

Wandle, a clear riveret, full of the best trouts.
Leigh's England Describ'd, (1659), p. 190.

- RIVER-GOD. n. s. Tutelary deity of a river. His wig hung as strait as the hair of a river-god rising from the water. Arbuthnot and Pope.

- RIVER-HORSE. n. s. Hippopotamus.

Rose,
As plants ambiguous between sea and land,
The river-horse and scaly crocodile. Milton, P. L.

- RIVET. n. s. [river, Fr. to break the point of a thing; to drive.] A fastening pin clenched at both ends.

The armourers accomplishing the knights,
With busy hammers closing rivets up,
Give dreadful note of preparation. Shaks. Hen. V.

Thy armour
I'll frush, and unlock the rivets all,
But I'll be master of it. Shaks. Troil. and Cress.

Though Valeria's fair, and though she loves me too,
'Gainst her my soul is arm'd on every part;
Yet there are secret rivets to my heart,
Where Berenice's charms have found the way,
Subtle as lightnings. Dryden, Tyr. Love.

The verse in fashion is, when numbers flow
So smooth and equal, that no sight can find
The rivet, where the polish'd piece was join'd. Dryden.

The rivets of those wings inclos'd Fit not each other. Dryden, Don Seb.

This instrument should move easy upon the rivet. Sharp.

- To RIVET. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To fasten with rivets.

This man,
If all our fire were out, would fetch down new,
Out of the hand of Jove; and rivet him
To Caucasus, should he but frown. B. Jonson.

2. To fasten strongly; to make immovable.

You were to blame to part with
A thing stuck on with oaths upon your finger,
And riveted with faith unto your flesh. Shaks.

Why should I write this down, that's riveted, Screw'd to my memory? Shakspeare, Cymb.

What one party thought to rivet to a settledness by the influence of the Scots, that the other rejects. King Charles.

Till fortune's fruitless spite had made it known,
Her blows not shook but riveted his throne. Dryden.

Thus hath God not only riveted the notion of himself into our natures, but likewise made the belief of his being, necessary to the peace of our minds and happiness of society. Tillotson.

If the eye sees those things riveted, which are loose, where will you begin to rectify the mistake? Locke.

Where we use words of a loose and wandering signification, hence follows mistake and error, which those maxims, brought as proofs to establish propositions, wherein the terms stand for under-determined ideas, do by their authority confirm and rivet. Locke.

Rivet and nail me where I stand, ye pow'rs!
Congreve.

They provoke him to the rage
Of fangs and claws, and stooping from your horse,
Rivet the panting savage to the ground. Addison, Cato.

A similitude of nature and manners, in such a degree as we are capable of, must tie the holy knot, and rivet the friendship between us. Atterbury.

3. To drive or clench a rivet.

In riveting, the pin you rivet in should stand upright to the plate you rivet it upon; for if it do not stand upright, you will be forced to set it upright, after it is riveted. Mozon.

- RIVULET. n. s. [rivulus, Lat.] A small river; a brook; a streamlet.

By fountain or by shady rivulet,
He sought them. Milton, P. L.

The veins, where innumerable little rivulets have their confluence into the common channel of the blood. Bentley.

I saw the rivulet of Salforata, formerly called Abula, and smelt the stench that arises from its water, which Martial mentions. Addison on Italy.

- RIXATION.* n. s. [rixatio, Lat.] A brawl; a quarrel. Cockeram.

- RIXDOLLAR. n. s. A German coin, worth about four shillings and six-pence sterling. Dict.

ROACH.† n. s. [from rutilus, Lat. red-haired. Dr. Johnson. — Sax. peohche.]

1. A roach is a fish of no great reputation for his dainty taste; his spawn is accounted much better than any other part of him: he is accounted the watersheep, for his simplicity and foolishness; and it is noted, that roaches recover strength, and grow in a fortnight after spawning. Walton, Angler.

If a gudgeon meet a roach,
He dare not venture to approach;
Yet still he leaps at flies. Swift.

2. As sound as a ROACH. [roche, Fr. a rock.] Apparently a corrupt phrase. Firm; stout.

Ray has the expression, as sound as a trout; but sometimes people will express it, as sound as a roach, which is by no means a firm fish, but rather otherwise; and on that account Mr. Thomas surmises it should rather be sound as a roche, or rock: and it is certain, the abbey of De Rupe, in Yorkshire, was called Roche-abbey, implying that roche was formerly the pronunciation of rock here, in some places at least. Pegge, Anonym. p. 349.

ROAD.† n. s. [rade, Fr. route, French: Route is via trita. Dr. Johnson. — What is ridden over. Mr. Horne Tooke. Anciently written rode. See the fourth definition. But see also the old Fr. rote. "Dans la Normandie et le Perche rote est un sentier étroit." Roq. Suppl. Gloss.]

1. Large way; path.

Would you not think him a madman, who, whilst he might easily ride on the beaten road way, should trouble himself with breaking up of gaps? Suckling.

To God's eternal house direct the way,
A broad and ample road. Milton, P. L.
The liberal man dwells always in the road. Fell.
To be indifferent whether we embrace falsehood or truth, is the great road to error. Locke.
Could stupid atoms, with impetuous speed,
By diff'rent roads and adverse ways proceed,
That here they might rencounter, here unite.

Blackmore.
There is but one road by which to climb up.

2. [Rade, Fr. Dr. Johnson. — This also, according to Skinner, is from ride; ships riding at anchor. The Su. Goth. redd is the same, as our ride in this sense.] Ground where ships may anchor.

I should be still
Peering in maps for ports and roads;
And every object that might make me fear
Misfortune to my ventures. Shaks. Merch. of Ven.
About the island are many roads, but only one harbour. Sandys, Journey.

3. Inroad; incursion.

The Volscians stand Ready, when time shall prompt them, to make road Upon's again. Shakspeare, Coriol.
Cason was desirous of the spoil, for he was, by the former road into that country, famous and rich. Knolles.

The king of Scotland, seeing none came to Perkin, turned his enterprise into a road, and wasted Northumberland with fire and sword.

4. Journey. The word seems, in this sense at least, to be derived from rode, the preterite of ride: as we say a short ride; an easy ride. Dr. Johnson. — The Sax. pad is a journey; and rade, or raid, is the Scottish word; but rode our old one, as if from ride:

"He mote travel for worship,
"And make many hasty rodes,
"Sometime in Pruis, sometime in Rhodes."

Gower, Conf. Am. B. 4.]

With easy roads he came to Leicester,
And lodg'd in the abbey. Shaks. Hen. VIII.
From the east his flaming road begins.

Milton, P. L.

5. The act or state of travelling.

Some taken from their shops and farms, others from their sports and pleasures, these at suits at law, those at gaming-tables, some on the road, others at their own fire-sides. Law.

ROADSTEAD.* n. s. [road and stead.] A place fit for ships to anchor in. "We often meet with the word roadstead in voyages, and I suppose it is still a common term with all seafaring men." Mr. Horne Tooke.

Three large ships of war and a lugger had anchored in a small roadstead upon the coast.
London Gaz. Extraord. (Feb. 27, 1797.)

ROADWAY.* n. s. [road and way.] Course of the publick road; highway.

Never a man's thought in the world keeps the roadway better than thine.

Shakspeare, Hen. IV. P. II.
Employing them at home about some publick buildings, as bridges, roadways, &c.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. Pref.
I have digressed into such a path, as I doubt not ye will agree with me to be much fairer, and more delightful, than the roadway I was in.

Milton, Apol. for Smectymn.

ROAK.* See ROKE.

TO ROAM.† v. n. [romigare, Italian. See Room. Dr. Johnson. — Raumen, Germ. puman, Sax. remove; pum, latus, patens; pume, latē, undequaque; rumen, Theatisc. uterius, longius. Our early use of the word was simply to walk about:

"Though we slepe or wake, or rome or ride,

"Ay flyeth the time, it wol no man abide." Chaucer, Cl. Tale.]

To wander without any certain purpose; to ramble; to rove; to play the vagrant. It has been imagined to come from the pretences of vagrants, who always said they were going to Rome.

Five summers have I spent in farthest Greece,
Roaming clean through the bounds of Asia.

Shakspeare.
Daphne roaming through a thorny wood. Shakspeare.

The lonely fox roams far abroad,
On secret rapine bent, and midnight fraud. Prior.
What were unlighten'd man,
A savage roaming through the woods and wilds
In quest of prey. Thomson, Summer.

TO ROAM. v. a. To range; to wander over.

Now fowls in their clay nests were couch'd,
And now wild beasts came forth the woods to roam.

Milton, P. L.

ROAM.* } n. s. [from the verb.] Act

ROAM'ING. } of wandering.

The ravings and roamings of a busy fancy.
More, Myst. of Godliness, p. 282.
The boundless space, through which these rovers take

Their restless roam, suggests the sister-thought,
Of endless time. Young, Night Th. 9.

ROA'MER.† n. s. [from roam.] A rover; a rambler; a wanderer; a vagrant.
And now is religion a rider, a romer by the street. Viz. of Plowman, fol. 50.

ROAN.† adj. [rouen, Fr.]
A roan horse is a horse of a bay, sorrel, or black colour, with grey or white spots interspersed very thick.

Farrier's Dict.

What horse? a roan, a crop-ear, is it not?
Shakspeare, Hen. IV. P. I.

ROAN-TREE.* See ROUN-TREE.

TO ROAR.† v. n. [japan, Sax. reeren, Teut. ruir, old French. The Scottish form of this word is rare, or rair.]

1. To cry as a lion or other wild beast. Roaring bulls he would him make to tame. Spenser.

Warwick and Montague,
That in their chains fetter'd the kingly lion,
And made the forest tremble when they roar'd.

Shakspeare.

The young lions roared upon him and yelled.

Jer. ii. 15.

The death of Daphnis woods and hills deplore,
They cast the sound to Libya's desert shore;
The Libyan lions hear, and hearing roar. Dryden.

2. To cry in distress.

At his nurse's tears
He whin'd and roar'd away your victory,
That pages blush'd at him. Shakspeare, Coriol.
Sole on the barren sands the suff'ring chief Roar'd out for anguish, and indulg'd his grief. Dryden.

3. To sound as the wind or sea.

South, East, and West, with mixt confusion roar.
And rowl the foaming billows to the shore. Dryden.

Loud as the wolves on Orcas' stormy steep,
Howl to the roaring of the northern deep. Pope.

4. To make a loud noise.

The brazen throat of war had ceas'd to roar. Milton, P. L.
Consider what fatigues I've known,
How oft I cross'd where carts and coaches roar. Gay.

ROAR. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The cry of the lion or other beast.

The wonted roar is up,
And hiss continual through the tedious night. Thomson.

2. An outcry of distress.

A clamour of merriment.
Where be your gibes now? your gambols? your songs?
Your flashes of merriment, that were wont to set the table in a roar? Shakspeare, Hamlet.

4. The sound of the wind or sea.

The roar
Of loud Euroclydon. Philips.

5. Any loud noise.

Deep-throated engines belch'd, whose roar
Imbowl'd with outrageous noise the air. Milton, P. L.

Oft on a plat of rising ground,
I hear the far-off curfew sound,
Over some wide-water'd shore,
Swinging slow with sullen roar. Milton, Il Pens.
When cannons did diffuse,
Preventing posts, the terror, and the news;
Our neighbour princes trembled at their roar. Waller.

The waters, listening to the trumpet's roar,
Obey the summons, and forsake the shore. Dryden.

ROA'ER.† n. s. [from roar.]

1. A noisy brutal man.

Hear this, ye godless and swaggering roarers, that dare say with Pharaoh, Who is the Lord?

You that now bid defiance to fear, shall in spite of you learn the way to fear.

Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 231.

- The English roasters put down all. Howell.
2. One who bawls.

The roarer has no other qualification for a champion of controversy, than a hardened front and strong voice. Having seldom so much desire to confute as to silence, he depends rather upon vociferation than argument.

Dr. Johnson, Rambler, No. 144.

ROA'RING.* n. s. [from roar.]

1. Cry of the lion or other beast.

The king's wrath is as the roaring of a lion.

Prov. xix. 12.

More roarings of the lion.

Addison, Guard. No. 124.

2. Outcry of distress.

My sighing cometh before I eat, and my roarings are poured out like water.

Job, iii. 24.

3. Sound of the wind or sea.

They shall roar against them like the roaring of the sea.

Isaiah, v. 30.

ROA'RY. adj. [better rorry; rores, Lat.]

- Dewy.

On Lebanon his foot he set,
And shook his wings with roary May dews wet.

Fairfax.

To ROAST.† v. a. [*rostir, rotir, Fr. rosten, Germ. geropot, Saxon, roasted; from rastrum, Lat. a grate; to roast, being, in its original sense, to broil on a gridiron. Dr. Johnson. — Wachter to the Germ. rost, a grate, adds the Welsh verb rhostio, to roast, rhost, what is roasted; and admits that it is an ancient British word, but of Greek origin, viz. from τέσσω, Æolicè pro τέπω, to dry, from τέρεω, (from which the Latins have torreo), and so by a metathesis rosten.]*

1. To dress meat, by turning it round before the fire.

The slothful man roasteth not that which he took in hunting.

Prov. xii. 27.

Roasting and boiling are below the dignity of your office.

Swift, Direct. to the Cook.

2. To impart dry heat to flesh.

Here elements have lost their uses,

Air ripens not, nor earth produces;

Fire will not roast, nor water boil.

Swift.

3. To dress at the fire without water.

In eggs boiled and roasted, there is scarce difference to be discerned.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

4. To heat any thing violently.

Roasted in wrath and fire,

He thus o'zised with coagulate gore,

Old Priam seeks.

Shakespeare.

5. In common conversation, to jeer or banter.

On bishop Atterbury's roasting lord Coningsby about the topik of being priest-ridden.

Atterbury's Epist. Correspond. vol. ii. p. 417.

ROAST. for roasted.

He lost his roast beef stomach, not being able to touch a sirloin.

Addison.

And if Dan Congreve judges right,

Roast beef and ale make Britons fight.

Prior.

It warns the cook-maid, not to burn

The roast meat which it cannot turn.

Swift, Miscell.

ROAST.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. That which is roasted.

He drave him thence, as Tobias drove away the spirit Asmodeus; for that was done with a roste, and this with a spit.

Sir J. Harrington, Dr. View of the Ch. p. 63.

2. In common conversation, banter.

3. To rule the ROAST. To govern; to manage; to preside. It was perhaps originally roist, which signified a tumult, to direct the populace.

Where champions ruleth the rost,

Their daily disorder is most. Tusser, Husbandry.

The new-made duke, that rules the roast. Shaks.

Alma slap-dash, is all again

In every sinew, nerve, and vein;

Runs here and there like Hamlet's ghost,

While every where she rules the roast. Prior.

ROA'STER.* n. s. [from roast.]

1. One who roasts meat.

Sherwood.

2. A gridiron. Ainsworth, in V. Craticula.

ROB.† n. s. [I believe Arabick. Dr. Johnson. — Dr. Hunt, in his Dissertation on the Arab. Language, (1739), informs us that it is certainly a word borrowed from the Arabians. The French and Italians use the same word.] Inspissated juices.

The infusion, being evaporated to a thicker consistence, passeth into a jelly, rob, extract, which contain all the virtues of the infusion.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

To ROB.† v. a. [rober, old Fr. robbare, Italian. Dr. Johnson. — And these from the M. Goth. raubjan, birauban, to spoil, to plunder; Germ. and Teut. rauben, "Verbum antiquissimum à Scythis et Celtis cum ipsâ re longè latèq; disseminatum. Persis rubaden est rapere, et inde roubah, vulpes, quia raptò vivit. Persas autem et genus et linguam à Scythis ducere, jam multa monuerunt vocabula. Usum Celticum demonstrant idiomatica Celtica, Cambricum, et Armoricum, in quibus vigent derivata ab hoc verbo oriunda, ut sunt raib, rapacitas, rob, præda, manifesto satis indicio, ipsum verbum Celtis haud ignotum fuisse." Wachter.]

1. To deprive of any thing by unlawful force, or by secret theft; to plunder.

To be robbed, according to the present use of the word, is to be injured by theft, secret or violent; to rob, is to take away by unlawful violence; and to steal, is to take away privately.

Is't not enough to break into my garden,

And, like a thief, to come to rob my grounds,

But thou wilt brave me with these saucy terms?

Shakespeare.

Our sins being ripe, there was no preventing of God's justice from reaping that glory in our calamities, which we robbed him of in our prosperity.

King Charles.

I have not here designed to rob him of any part of that commendation, which he has so justly acquired from the whole author, whose fragments only fall to my portion.

Dryden.

The water-nymphs lament their empty urns,

Bacotia, robb'd of silver Dirce, mourns. Addison.

2. To set free; to deprive of something bad. Ironical.

Our house is hell, and thou, a merry devil,

Did'st rob it of some taste of tediousness. Shaks.

3. To take away unlawfully.

Better be disdain'd of all, than fashion a carriage to rob love from any.

Shakespeare.

Procure, that the nourishment may not be robbed and drawn away.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Nor will I take from any man his due;

But thus assuming all, he robs from you. Dryden.

Oh double sacrilege on things divine,

To rob the relick, and deface the shrine! Dryden.

RO'BBER. n. s. [from rob.] One that plunders by force, or steals by secret means; a plunderer; a thief.

These hands, which thou dost ravish from my chin,

Will quicken and accuse thee; I'm your host; With robbers' hands, my hospitable favour

You should not ruffle thus. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

Thou, — like a robber, stripp'dst them of their robes.

Milton, S. A.

The robber must run, ride, and use all the desperate ways of escape; and probably after all, his sin betrays him to the gaol, and from thence advances him to the gibbet.

South.

Bold Prometheus did aspire,

And stole from heaven the seeds of fire;

A train of ills, a ghastly crew,

The robber's blazing track pursue. Dryden, Hor.

Public robbers are more criminal than petty and common thieves.

Davenant.

RO'BBERY. n. s. [roberie, old Fr. from rob.] Theft perpetrated by force or with privacy.

Thieves for their robbery have authority,

When judges steal themselves.

Shakespeare, Meas. for Meas.

A storm or robbery

Shook down my mellow hangings. Shaks. Cymb.

Some more effectual way might be found, for suppressing common thefts and robberies. Temple.

RO'BINS.* n. s. [raaband, a rope-band. Wiedgren's Swedish Lex.] Small ropes which fasten sails to the yards.

ROBE. n. s. [robbe, Fr. robba, Italian; rauba, low Lat.] A gown of state; a dress of dignity.

Through tatter'd clothes small vices do appear;
Robes and furr'd gowns hide all. Shaks. K. Lear.

My Nan shall be the queen of all fairies

Finely attir'd in a robe of white. Shakespeare.

The last good king, whom willing Rome obey'd,

Was the poor offspring of a captive maid;

Yet he those robes of empire justly bore,

Which Romulus, our sacred founder, wore.

Dryden.

To ROBE. v. a. [from the noun.] To dress pompously; to invest.

What christian soldier will not be touched with a religious emulation, to see an order of Jesus do such service for enlarging the christian borders; and an order of St. George only to robe, and feast, and perform rites and observances?

Bacon.

There in long robes the royal magi stand;

The sage Chaldeans robb'd in white appear'd;

And Brachmans. Pope, Temp. of Fame.

Robbed in loose array she came to bathe.

Thomson.

RO'BARDSMAN. } n. s. In the old statutes, RO'BERTSMAN. } a sort of bold and stout robbers or night thieves, said to be so called from Robinhood, a famous robber.

ROBUSTIOUS. } buste, Fr. Hammond uses robustus: "a robustus obdurate sinner." Works, iv. 685.]

1. Strong; sinewy; vigorous; forceful. These redundant locks,

Robustious to no purpose, clust'ring down,
Vain monument of strength. Milton, S. A.

2. Boisterous; violent; unwieldy. The men sympathize with the mastiffs, in robustious and rough coming on. Shakespeare, Hen. V.

It offends me to hear a robustious periwig-pated fellow tear a passion to tatters, to very rags, to split the ears of the groundlings. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

Hardly could one see a man of a more grim aspect; and no less robust and rude was his behaviour. Sir T. Herbert, Mem. of K. Ch. I.

While I was managing this young robustious fellow, that old spark, who was nothing but skin and bone, split through my fingers. Dryden, Don Seb.

Romp-loving miss

Is haul'd about in gallantry robust. Thoms Aut.

3. Requiring strength. The tenderness of a sprain remains a good while after, and leaves a lasting caution in the man, not to put the part quickly again to any robust employment. Locke.

4. Robustious is now only used in low language, and in a sense of contempt. Admires how modest women can

Be so robustious like a man. Swift.

ROBUSTIOUSLY.* adv. [from robustious.] With violence; with fury.

He speaketh wickedly, roughly, and robustiously.

Ep. Richardson on the O. Test. p. 287.

The multitude commend writers, as they do fencers or wrestlers, who, if they come in robustiously, and put for it with a deal of violence, are received for the braver fellows.

B. Jonson, Discoveries.

ROBUSTIOUSNESS.* n. s. [from robustious.] Quality of being vigorous.

That robustiousness of body, and puissance of person, which is the only fruit of strength.

Sir E. Sandys, State of Rel. (ed. 1605), sign. S. 9.

ROBUSTNESS. n. s. [from robust.] Strength; vigour.

Beef may confer a robustness on my son's limbs, but will hebetate his intellects.

Arbutnot and Pope.

RO'CAMBOLE. n. s. See GARLICK. Rocambol is a sort of wild garlick, otherwise called Spanish garlick; the seed is about the bigness of ordinary peas. Mortimer.

Garlick, rocambol, and onions abound with a pungent volatile salt. Arbutnot on Aliments.

ROCHE-ALUM. n. s. [roche, Fr. a rock.] A purer kind of alum.

Roché-alum is also good. Mortimer, Husbandry.

ROCHET.† n. s. [rochet, Fr. rochetum, from roccus, low Lat. a coat. Dr. Johnson.

—Mr. Horne Tooke contends, that it is the past participle of the Sax. puzgan, to cover, as pocce, the upper garment, is; of which, he says, rochet is the diminutive. Rock, or rokke, is the Su. Goth. and German, for a loose outer garment; and our old word is rokkete. Some have considered it derived from the Germ. rauh, (whence the Dutch ruig and our rough,) hairy; our ancestors being first clothed in skins.]

1. An outer garment. There nis no clothe sitheth bette On damosel, than doth rokkete.

Chaucer, Rom. R. 1240.

Rochet, a frock, loose gaberdine, gown of canvas or coarse linen, worn by a labourer over the rest of his clothes; also, a prelate's rochet, &c.

Cotgrave.

2. A linen habit now peculiar to a bishop, worn under the chimere. Bishops were obliged, by the canon law, to wear their rochets whenever they appeared in public; which practice was constantly kept up in England till the Reformation.

Wheatly on the Com. Prayer, ch. 2. § 4.

3. [Rubellio, Lat.] A fish. Usually written rochet; the red gurnard. Chambers.

Of rotchets, whittings, or such common fish. Broune, Brit. Past. B. 2. S. 1.

ROCK.† n. s. [roc, roche, Fr. rocca, Ital. from the Gr. ῥωξ, a crag or cliff; and that from ῥῖσσω, to break. Scott, and Lemon. Of the same opinion is Morin; who wishes to confirm it by the analogy of the Lat. rupes, a rock, from rumpo, to break or tear asunder; "parce que le roc ou la roche escarpeprement une masse rompue et escarpée."] 1. A vast mass of stone, fixed in the earth. The splitting rocks cower'd in the sinking sands, And would not dash me with their ragged sides. Shakespeare.

There be rock herbs; but those are where there is some mould. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Distilling some of the tincted liquor, all that came over was as limpid and colourless as rock water, and the liquor remaining in the vessel deeply ceruleous. Boyle.

These lesser rocks, or great bulky stones, are they not manifest fragments? Burnet, Theory.

Of amber a nodule, invested with a coat, called rock amber. Woodward on Fossils.

Ye darksome pines, that o'er yon rocks reclin'd, Wave high, and murmur to the hollow wind. Pope.

2. Protection; defence. A scriptural sense. Though the reeds of Egypt break under the hand of him that leans on them, yet the rock of Israel will be an everlasting stay. K. Charles.

3. [Rock, Danish; rocca, Italian; rucca, Spanish; spin-roch, Dutch.] A distaff held in the hand, from which the wool was spun by twirling a ball below. A learned and a manly soul I purpos'd her; that should with even powers, The rock, the spindle, and the sheers, controul Of destiny, and spin her own free hours. B. Jonson.

On the rock a scanty measure place Of vital flax, and turn the wheel apace. Dryden.

Flow from the rock my flax, and swiftly flow, Pursue thy thread, the spindle runs below. Parnel.

To ROCK.† v. a. [roquer, Fr. Dr. Johnson.—Descended from the Icel. hrocka, to shake, or be shaken. Serenius adds the Dalecamp. rucka, oscillare.] 1. To shake; to move backwards and forwards.

If, by a quicker rocking of the engine, the smoke were more swiftly shaken, it would, like water, vibrate to and fro. Boyle.

The wind was laid; the whispering sound Was dumb; a rising earthquake rock'd the ground. Dryden.

A living tortoise, being turned upon its back, could help itself only by its neck and head, by pushing against the ground to rock itself as in a cradle, to find out the side towards which the inequality of the ground might more easily permit to roll its shell. Ray on the Creation.

2. To move the cradle, in order to procure sleep. Come, take hand with me, And rock the ground whereon these sleepers be. Shakespeare.

Leaning her head upon my breast, My panting heart rock'd her asleep. Suckling.

My bloody resolutions, Like sick and forward children, Were rock'd asleep by reason. Denham.

While his secret soul on Flanders preys, He rocks the cradle of the babe of Spain. Dryden.

High in his hall, rock'd in a chair of state, The king with his tempestuous council sate. Dryden.

3. To lull; to quiet. Sleep rock thy brain, And never come mischance between us twain! Shakespeare.

O lull me, lull me, charming air, My senses rock with wonder sweet! Like snow on wool, thy fallings are; Soft, like a spirit, are they feet! Song on Music, in Wit Restored, (1658), p. 95.

The rocky orb

Of tenfold adamant, his ample shield.

Milton, P. L.

3. Hard; stony; obdurate.

I, like a poor bark, of sails and tackling reft,
Rush all to pieces on thy rocky bosom.

Shakspeare, Rich. III.

I tell you of the rocky, flinty hearts of men turned into flesh.

Bp. Hall, Estate of a Christian.

There are some men of rocky hearts and impassible tempers.

Norris on the Beat. p. 46.

ROD. n. s. [roede, Dutch.]

1. A long twig.

Some chase a hazel rod of the same year's shoot, and this they bind on to another straight stick of any wood, and walking softly over those places, where they suspect the bowels of the earth to be enriched with metals, the wand will, by bowing towards it, discover it.

Boyle.

2. A kind of sceptre.

She had all the royal makings of a queen;

As holy oil, Edward confessor's crown,

The rod and bird of peace. Shaks. Hen. VIII.

The pastoral reed

Of Hermes, or his opiate rod.

Milton, P. L.

O gentle sleep, I cry'd,

Why is this gift to me alone deny'd?

Mildest of beings, friend to ev'ry clime,

Where lies my error, what has been my crime?

Beasts, birds, and cattle feel thy balmy rod;

The drowsy mountains wave, and seem to nod:

The torrents cease to chide, the seas to roar,

And the hush'd waves recline upon the shore.

Harte.

3. Anything long and slender.

Let the fisherman

Increase his tackle, and his rod retie.

Gay.

Haste, ye Cyclops, with your forked rods,

This rebel love braves all the gods,

And every hour by love is made,

Some heaven-defying Enclade.

Granville.

Bp. Taylor.

ROGAION-WEEK. n. s. The second week before Whitsunday; thus called from three fasts observed therein, the Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday, called rogation days, because of the extraordinary prayers and processions then made for the fruits of the earth, or as a preparation for the devotion of holy Thursday.

Dict.

ROGUE.† n. s. [of uncertain etymology, Dr. Johnson. — Mr. Horne Tooke pronounces it the past participle of the Sax. ypizan: "Rogue (according to the usual change of the characteristic i) is the past tense, and therefore past participle, of ypigan, and means covered, cloaked; most aptly applied to the character designated by that term." Div. of Purley, ii. 227. — Rogues, in our old books, are "sturdy beggars." This is the earliest acceptance of the word. I conceive it therefore to descend from the Dutch prachgen, to go a begging, whence our prog, written also progue, a word of bad meaning; and thence, omitting p, the word before us. See TO PROG.]

1. A wandering beggar; a vagrant; a vagabond.

For fear lest we, like rogues, should be reputed,
And for ear-marked beasts abroad be bruited.

Spenser, Hubb. Tale.

To roaring billows and the warring wind.

Pope.

6. To move as waves or volumes of water.

Wave rolling after wave.

Milton, P. L.

Our nation is too great to be ruined by any but itself; and if the number and weight of it roll one way upon the greatest changes that can happen, yet England will be safe.

Temple.

Till the huge surge roll'd off, then backward sweep
The restless tides, and plunge into the deep.

Pope.

Storms beat, and rolls the main;
Oh beat those storms, and roll the seas in vain!

Pope.

7. To fluctuate; to move tumultuously.

Here tell me, if thou dar'st, my conscious soul,
What diff'rent sorrows did within thee roll. Prior.

The thoughts, which roll within my ravish'd breast,
To me, no seer, the inspiring gods suggest.

Pope.

In her sad breast the prince's fortunes roll,
And hope and doubt alternate seize her soul.

Pope.

The rolls of parliament, the entry of the petitions, answers, and transactions in parliament, are extant.

Hale.

7. A register; a catalogue.

Beasts still cannot discern beauty; and let them be in the roll of beasts, that do not honour it.

Sidney.

These signs have mark'd me extraordinary,
And all the courses of my life do shew,
I am not in the roll of common men.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

The roll and list of that army doth remain.

Davies.

Of that short roll of friends writ in my heart,
There's none, that sometimes greet us not. Donne.
'Tis a mathematical demonstration, that these twenty-four letters admit of so many changes in their order, and make such a long roll of differently ranged alphabets, not two of which are alike; that they could not all be exhausted, though a million millions of writers should each write above a thousand alphabets a day, for the space of a million millions of years.

Bentley.

8. Chronicle.

Please thy pride, and search the herald's roll,
Where thou shalt find thy famous pedigree.

Dryden.

His chamber all was hang'd about with rolls
And old records, from antient times deriv'd.

Spenser.

The eye of time beholds no name

So best as time, in all the rolls of fame. Pope.

9. [Role, Fr.] Part; office. Not in use.

In human society, every man has his roll and station assigned him.

L'Estrange.

ROLLER. n. s. [rouleau, Fr. from roll.]

1. Any thing turning on its own axis, as a heavy stone to level walks.

When a man tumbles a roller down a hill, the man is the violent enforcer of the first motion; but when it is once tumbling, the property of the thing itself continues it.

Hammond.

The long slender worms, that breed between the skin and flesh in the isle of Ormuz and in India, are generally twisted out upon sticks or rollers.

Ray on the Creation.

They make the string of the pole horizontal towards the lathe, conveying and guiding the string from the pole to the work, by throwing it over a roller.

Mason, Mech. Ex.

Lady Charlotte, like a stroller,
Sits mounted on the garden roller.

Swift, Miscell.

2. Bandage; fillet.

Fasten not your roller by tying a knot, lest you hurt your patient.

Wiseman, Surgery.

Bandage being chiefly to maintain the due situation of a dressing, surgeons always turn a roller with that view.

Sharp.

RO'LLINGPIN. n. s. [rolling and pin.] A pope of Rome.

These are the chief grounds upon which we separate from the Roman communion.

Burnet, Art. 22.

When you are in Roman-Catholic countries, go to their churches, see all their ceremonies.

Ld. Chesterfield.

ROMAN'CE.† n. s. [roman, Fr. romanza,
Italian. "The Latin language ceased to be regularly spoken in France, about the ninth century; and was succeeded by what was called the romance-tongue, a mixture of the language of the Franks and of bad Latin. The species of writing, called romans, began in the tenth century, according to the opinion of the Benedictine fathers, who have well refuted M. Fleuri and Calmet, who make it less ancient by two hundred years." Dr. Warton, Ess. on Pope,

i. 291. Metrical fables or romances have been by some attributed to an eastern origin; by others, with greater probability, to the poets of the north.]

1. A military fable of the middle ages; a tale of wild adventures in war and love.

What resounds

In fable or romance of Uther's son. Milton, P. L.
A brave romance who would exactly frame,
First brings his knight from some immortal dame.

Waller.

Some romances entertain the genius;
and strengthen it by the noble ideas which they give of things; but they corrupt the truth of history.

Dryden, Dufresnoy.

2. A lie; a fiction. In common speech.

A staple of romance and lies,
False tears and real perjuries,
Where sighs and looks are bought and sold,
And love is made true to be told.

Prior.

To ROMAN'CE. v. n. [from the noun.] To lie; to forge.

This is strange romancing. Richardson, Pamela.

ROMAN'CE.† n. s. [from romance.]

1. A writer of romances.

Sir James Long [was] in the civil warres colonel of horse; good sword-man; admirable extempore orator; great memory; great historian and romancer.

Aubrey, Anecd. ii. 433.

That the French romancers borrowed some things from the English, appears from the word
"termagant," which they took up from our minstrels, and corrupted into "tervagaunte."

Bp. Percy, Ess. on Anc. Metr. Romances.

This poem (le Roman de la Rose) is far beyond the rude efforts of all their preceding romancers.

Warton, Hist. E. P. i. 368.

Chaucer's rime of Sir Thopas, being intended to ridicule the vulgar romancers, seems to have been purposely written in their favourite metre.

Tyrwhitt on the Lang. and Vers. of Ch. § 7.

2. A liar; a forger of tales.

The allusion of the daw extends to all impostors, vain pretenders, and romancers.

L'Estrange.

Shall we, cries one, permit
This lewd romancer, and his bantering wit?

Tate, Jew.

ROMAN'CY.* adj. [from romance.] Romantantic; full of wild scenery. This is the older adjective, but is not now in use.

The house is an old house, situated in a romancy place; and a man, that is given to devotion and learning, cannot find out a better place.

Life of A. Wood, (under 1658), p. 118.

RO'MANISM.* n. s. [from Roman.] Tenets of the church of Rome.

Papists have the common faith, (and I wish to God they had no more,) and their own proper romanism; to the very same or like purpose as the Jews have the law and the prophets, and the Talmud of their rabbins.

Brevint, Saul, &c. at Endor, (1674), p. 5.

RO'MANIST.* n. s. [from Roman.] A papist.

The Romanists are guilty of too much scruple in this kind. Bp. Hall, Cases of Consc. D. 4. C. 7.

More, Antid. against Idol. ch. 4.

To Ro'MANIZE.† v. a. [from roman, Fr.]

1. To convert to Romish or papistical opinions.

Yet if your English romanized hearts

Gainst nature's custome swell with false defence,
Brandish your stings, and cast your utmost darts,
Against the greatness of her glorious name.

Mir. for Mag. p. 787.

Our countrymen, romanized and jesuited, have filled the world with outcries against our state for suppressing them, and making laws against their religion.

Dr. White, Sermon. (1615.) p. 27.

2. To Latinize; to fill with modes of the Roman speech.

He did too much romanize our tongue, leaving the words he translated, almost as much Latin as he found them.

Dryden.

To Ro'MANIZE.* v. n. To follow a Romish opinion, custom, or mode of speech.

Thou hast seen a popish Jew interdeed for the dead:—Tell me, gentle reader, whether doth the Jew romanize, or the Roman judaize, in his devotions?

Lightfoot, Miscell. p. 137.

So apishly romanizing, that the word of command still was set down in Latin.

Milton, Areopagitica.

ROMAN'TICAL.† } adj. [from romance.]

ROMAN'TICK. }
1. Resembling the tales of romances; wild.

Ayliffe, Parergon.

RO'MIST.* n. s. [from Rome.] A papist.

The Romists hold fast the distinction of mortal and venial sins.

South, Sermon. vii. 110.

ROMP.† n. s. [Dr. Johnson offers no etymology.

The word at first was ramp, and is ancient in this sense. It is from the verb ramp, signifying both to rage, and to sport or play. The old sense, I should add, is personal. "Ey on thee, thou rampe, thou rig!" Com. of Gamm. Gorton's Needle, 1551. "Although she were a lusty bouncing rampe." Harvey, Pierce's Supererog. 1593.]

1. A rude, awkward, boisterous, untaught girl.

She was in the due mean between one of your affected courtesying pieces of formality, and your romps that have no regard to the common rules of civility.

Arbuthnot.

2. Rough rude play.

Rompe loving miss

Is haul'd about in gallantry robust. Thomson.

To ROMP. v. n. To play rudely, noisily, and boisterously.

In the kitchen, as in your proper element, you can laugh, squall, and romp in full security.

Swift, Rule to Servants.

Men presume on the liberties taken in romping.

Richardson, Clarissa.

RO'MPISH.* adj. [from romp.] Inclined to rude or rough play. Ash.

RO'MPISHNESS.* n. s. [from rompish.]

Disposition to rude sport.

The air she gave herself was that of a romping girl; and whenever I talked to her with any turn of fondness, she would immediately snatch off my periwig, try it upon herself in the glass, clap her arms a-kimbo, draw my sword, and make passes on the wall, take off my cravat, and seize it to make some other use of the lace, or run into some other unaccountable rompishness.

Spectator, No. 187.

RONDEAU.† n. s. [Fr.]

1. A kind of ancient poetry, commonly consisting of thirteen verses; of which eight have one rhyme and five another: it is divided into three couplets, and at the end of the second and third, the beginning of the rondeau is repeated in an equivocal sense, if possible. Trevoux.

He used to read him a book of sonnets, rondeaus, and virelays.

Warton, Hist. E. P. iii. p. lxxvi.

2. A kind of jig, or lively tune, which ends with the first strain repeated.

RO'NDLE.† n. s. [rondelle, old French.] A round mass.

Certain rondles given in arms, have their names according to their several colours.

Peacham on Blazoning.

RO'NDURE.* n. s. [rondure, Fr.] A circle;

a round. Not in use.

All things rare

That heaven's air in this huge rondure hems.

Shakspeare, Sonnet. 21.

RO'NION.† n. s. [rognon, French, the loins.

I know not certainly the meaning of this word. Dr. Johnson.—It is no doubt from the Fr. rogne, royne, scurf. See Roïn. And thus Dr. Johnson himself on the passage in the Merry Wives of Windsor. "Ronyon, applied to a woman, means, as far as can be traced, much the same with scall, or scab, spoken of a man." A fat bulky woman.

Give me, quoth I:

Aroynt thee, witch! the rump-fell ronyon cries.

Shakspeare, Macbeth.

Out of my door, you witch, you polecat, you ronyon!

Shaks. M. W. of Windsor.

RONG.* The old pret. and part. of ring.

A fool's bell is soone ronge. Chaucer, Romp. R.

RONT. n. s. [See RUNT.] An animal stunted in the growth: commonly pronounced runt.

My ragged ronts all shiver and shake,
As doen high towers in an earthquake;
They went in the wind wag their wriggle tails,
Peake as a peacock; but now it avales. Spenser.

ROOD.† n. s. [poë, Sax.]

1. The fourth part of an acre in square measure, or one thousand two hundred and ten square yards.

I've often wish'd that I had clear,
For life, six hundred pounds a year,
A terras-walk, and half a rood
Of land, set out to plant a wood. Swift.

No stately larch-tree there expands a shade
O'er half a rood of Larissæan glade. Harte.

2. A pole; a measure of sixteen feet and a half in long measure.

Satan,

With head uplift above the wave;—

His other parts besides—

Prone on the flood, extended long and large,

Lay floating many a rood. Milton, P. L.

For stone fences in the north, they dig the stones for eighteen-pence a rood, and make the walls for the same price, reckoning twenty-nine foot to the rood or pole. Mortimer.

3. [poë, Sax. from the old Goth. and Icel. roda, an image. Junius, and Serenius.] The cross; an image or picture of our Saviour upon the cross, with those of the Virgin Mary and St. John on each side of it. Chaucer writes this word rode.

And nigh thereto a littel chappel stode,
Which, being all with ivy overspred,
Deckt all the roofe; and, shadowing the roode,
Seem'd like a grove faire braunched over hed.

Spenser, F. Q.

By the holy rood,

I do not like these several councils. Shakspeare.

ROO'DLOFT.† n. s. [rood and loft.] A gallery in the church on which the cross, or the representation already mentioned, was set to view.

They shall see that all roodlofts, in which wooden crosses stood, be clean taken away.

Irish Constitutions and Canons, (1635.) p. 110.

Under the king's arms, placed over the roodloft, is [a] distich. Ashmole's Berks. i. p. 69.

ROO'DY.* adj. [poë, Saxon.] Coarse; luxuriant. Craven Dialect.

ROOFE.† n. s. [hpor, Sax. In the plural Sidney has rooves, now obsolete. Dr. Johnson.—Mr. Horne Tooke calls this word the past participle of hpean, to sustain. Serenius directs us to the M. Goth. hrot, tectum, a roof; Icel. riaftr, raf; Sueth. ant. ref.]

1. The cover of a house.

Her shoulders be like two white doves,

Perching within square royal rooves. Sidney.

Return to her, and fifty men dismiss'd?

No, rather I abjure all roofs, and chuse

To wage against the ennmy o' th' air.

Shakspeare, K. Lear.

2. The house in general.

I'll tell all strictly true,

If time, and foode, and wine enough accrue

Within your roofe to us; that freely we May sit and banquet. Chapman.

3. The vault; the inside of the arch that covers a building.

From the magnanimity of the Jews, in causes of most extreme hazard, those strange and unwonted resolutions have grown, which, for all circumstances, no people under the roof of heaven did ever match. Hooker.

The dust
Should have ascended to the roof of heav'n,
Rais'd by your populous troops.

Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

In thy fane, the dusty spoils among,
High on the burnish'd roof, my banner shall be hung. Dryden.

4. The palate; the upper part of the mouth.

Swearing till my very roof was dry
With oaths of love. Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

My very lips might freeze to my teeth, my tongue to the roof of my mouth, ere I should come by a fire. Shakespeare.

Some fishes have rows of teeth in the roofs of their mouths; as pikes, salmones, and trouts. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

To Roof. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To cover with a roof.

He enter'd soon the shade
High roof'd, and walks beneath, and alleys brown. Milton, P. L.

Large foundations may be safely laid;
Or houses roof'd, if friendly planets aid. Creech.

I have not seen the remains of any Roman buildings, that have not been roofed with vaults or arches. Addison.

2. To inclose in a house.

Here had we now our country's honour roof'd,
Were the grac'd person of our Banquo present. Shakespeare.

Roof'LESS.* adj. [poplear; Sax.] Wanting a roof; uncovered.

And columns, awful in decay,
Rear up their roofless heads to form the various scene. Hughes.

Roof'FY. adj. [from roof.] Having roofs.

Snakes,
Whether to roofy houses they repair,
Or sun themselves abroad in open air,
In all abodes of pestilential kind
To sheep. Dryden, Georg.

ROOK.† n. s. [hpoc, Sax.] Serenius pronounces it formed from the sound, like the Swed. kræaka, a crow; and Skinner from the Lat. raucus, hoarse.]

1. A bird resembling a crow: it feeds not on carrion, but grain.

Augurs, that understood relations, have,
By magpies, and by choughs, and rooks brought forth

The secret'st man of blood. Shaks. Macbeth.
Huge flocks of rising rooks forsake their food,
And crying seek the shelter of the wood. Dryden.

The jay, the rook, the daw
Aid the full concert. Thomson, Spring.

2. One of the pieces used at the game of chess. [roc, "à la tour, pièce des échecs," Lacombe.]

So have I seen a king on chess,
His rooks and knights withdrawn,
His queen and bishops in distress,
Shifting about grow less and less,
With here and there a pawn. Dryden, Songs.

3. A cheat; a trickish rapacious fellow.

Rooks and rakeshames sold to lucre.
Milton, Of Ref. in Eng. B. 2.
I am, like an old rook, who is ruined by gaming, forced to live on the good fortune of the pushing young men. Wycherley.

To Rook. v. n. [from the noun.] To rob; to cheat.

They rook'd upon us with design,
To out-reform and undermine. Hudibras.

How any one's being put into a mixed herd of unruly boys, and then learning to rook at span-fairing, fits him for conversation, I do not see.

Locke on Education.

To Rook.* v. a. To cheat; to plunder by cheating.

He [Sir John Denham] was much rook'd by gamsters. Aubrey, Anecd. ii. 317.

To Rook.* To squat. See To Ruck.

RoO'KERY. n. s. [from rook.] A nursery of rooks.

No lone house in Wales, with a mountain and a rookery, is more contemplative than this court. Pope.

RoO'KY. adj. [from rook.] Inhabited by rooks.

Light thickens, and the crow
Makes wing to the rooky wood. Shaks. Macbeth.

ROOM.† n. s. [pum, Saxon, and Su. Goth. rums, M. Goth. space, a place.]

1. Space; extent of place great or small.

With new wonder, now he views,
To all delight of human sense expos'd
In narrow room, nature's whole wealth. Milton, P. L.

If you will have a young man to put his travels into a little room, and in short time gather much, this he must do. Bacon.

2. Space or place unoccupied.

The dry land is much too big for its inhabitants; and that before they shall want room by increasing and multiplying, there may be new heavens and a new earth. Bentley.

3. Way unobstructed.

Make room, and let him stand before our face. Shakespeare.

What train of servants, what extent of field,
Shall aid the birth, or give him room to build? Creech.

This paternal regal power, being by divine right, leaves no room for human prudence to place it any where. Locke.

4. Place of another; stead.

In evils, that cannot be removed without the manifest danger of greater to succeed in their rooms, wisdom of necessity must give place to necessity. Hooker.

For better ends our kind Redeemer dy'd,
Or the fallen angels' rooms will be but ill supply'd. Roscommon.

By contributing to the contentment of other men, and rendering them as happy as lies in our power, we do God's work, are in his place and room. Calamy, Serm.

5. Unobstructed opportunity.

When this princess was in her father's court, she was so celebrated, that there was no prince in the empire, who had room for such an alliance, that was not ambitious of gaining her into his family. Addison, Freeholder.

It puts us upon so eager a pursuit of the advantages of life, as leaves no room to reflect on the great author of them. Atterbury.

6. Possible admission; possible mode.

Will you not look with pity on me?
Is there no hope? is there no room for pardon? A. Philips.

7. An apartment in a house; so much of a house as is inclosed within partitions.

I found the prince in the next room,
Washing with kindly tears his gentle cheeks. Shakespeare.

If when she appears in th' room,
Thou dost not quake, and art struck dumb;
Know this,
Thou lov'st amiss;
And to love true,
Thou must begin again, and love anew. Suckling.

In a prince's court, the only question a man is to ask is, whether it be the custom of the court, or will of the prince, to be uncovered in some rooms and not in others. Stillingfleet.

It will afford me a few pleasant rooms, for such a friend as yourself. Pope.

8. Particular place or station.

With price whereof they buy a golden bell,
And purchase highest rooms in boure and hall. Spenser, Colin Clout.

They love the uppermost rooms at feasts. St. Matt. xxiii. 6.

9. Office. Obsolete.

He exercised his high room of chancery, as he was accustomed. Cavendish, Life of Wolsey.

RoO'MAGE. n. s. [from room.] Space; place.

Man, of all sensible creatures, has the fullest brain to his proportion, for the lodging of the intellectual faculties: it must be a silent character of hope, when there is good store of roomage, and receipt, where those powers are stowed. Watson.

RoO'MFUL.* adj. [room and full.] Abounding with rooms. Not in use.

Now in a roomful house. Donne, Progr. of the Soul, st. 34.

RoO'MINESS. n. s. [from roomy.] Space; quantity of extent.

RoomTH.* n. s. [from room.] Space; place. See F. Junii Gloss. Goth. in V. RUMS, "latus, spatiosus: Anglis quoque roomthie est latus, spatiosus."

Unto his roof all put their hands to hew,
Whose roomth but hinders others that would grow. Drayton, Bar. War. vi. 28.

Not finding fitting roomth upon the rising side. Drayton, Polyolb. S. 6.

RoO'MTHY.* adj. [from roomth.] Spacious. See Junius in ROOMTH.

The love of money is the root of all evil, is a truth universally agreed in. Temple.

5. The first ancestor.

It was said,
That myself should be the root, and father
Of many kings. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

Why did my parents send me to the schools,
That I with knowledge might enrich my mind;
Since the desire to know first made men fools,
And did corrupt the root of all mankind? Davies.

Whence,
But from the author of all ill, could spring
So deep a malice, to confound the race
Of mankind in one root? Milton, P. L.
They were the roots out of which sprang two distinct people, under two distinct governments. Locke.

6. Fixed residence.

7. Impression; durable effect.

Having this way eased the church, as they thought, of superfluity, they went on till they had plucked up even those things also, which had taken a great deal stronger and deeper root. Hooker.
That love took deepest root, which first did grow.
Dryden.

To Root.† v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To fix the root; to strike far into the earth.

Her fallow leas
The darnel, hemlock, and rank fumitory
Doth root upon. Shakespeare, Hen. V.

To Root. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To fix deep in the earth.

When ocean, air, and earth at once engage,
And rooted forests fly before their rage,
At once the clashing clouds to battle move. Dryd.
Where the impetuous torrent rushing down
Huge craggy stones, and rooted trees had thrown,
They left their courses. Dryden, T. n.

2. To impress deeply.

The great important end that God designs it for, the government of mankind, sufficiently shews the necessity of its being rooted deeply in the heart, and put beyond the danger of being torn up by any ordinary violence.

They have so rooted themselves in the opinions of their party, that they cannot hear an objection with patience. Watts.

3. To turn up out of the ground; to radicate; to extirpate: with a particle; as, out or up.

He's a rank weed,
And we must root him out. Shaks. Hen. VIII.

Soon shall we drive back Alcibiades,
Who, like a boar too savage, doth root up
His country's peace. Shaks. Timon.

The Egyptians think it sin or to root up or to bite

Their leeks or onions, which they serve with holy rite. Ralegh, Hist. of the World.

Root up wild olives from thy labour'd lands.

dialect is, according to this ancient word, rape.]

1. A cord; a string; a halter; a cable; a hauler.

Thou drunken slave, I sent thee for a rope,
And told thee to what purpose.

Shakespeare, Com. of Err.
An anchor, let down by a rope, maketh a sound; and yet the rope is no solid body, whereby the sound can ascend. Bacon.

Who would not guess there might be hopes,
The fear of gallows and ropes
Before their eyes, might reconcile
Their animosities a while? Hudibras.

Hang yourself up in a true rope, that there may appear no trick in it. Arbutnot, J. Bull.

2. Any row of things depending: as, a rope of onions.

I cannot but confess myself mightily surprised, that, in a book, which was to provide chains for all mankind, I should find nothing but a rope of sand. Locke.

3. The intestines of birds. [poppar, Sax.]
As, the ropes of a woodcock.

TO ROPE. v. n. [from the noun.] To draw out into viscosities; to concreate into glutinous filaments.

1. Rogue's tricks. See ROPE-TRICK.
What saucy merchant was this, that was so full of his ropery? Shakespeare, Rom. and Jul.

2. Place where ropes are made.

The new ropery, and the forges where they put fresh touch-holes into old cannon, are established upon an extensive plain; but there is little activity in either. Swinburne, Trav. through Spain, L. 17.

RO'PETRICK. n. s. [rope and trick.] Probably a rogue's trick; a trick that deserves the halter.

She may perhaps call him half a score knaves, or so: an' he begin once, he'll rail in his rope-tricks. Shakespeare.

Sir T. Brown, Miscell. p. 20.

ROSE.† n. s. [pore, Sax. rose, Fr. rosa, Lat.]

1. A flower.

The flower of the rose is composed of several leaves, which are placed circularly, and expand in a beautiful order, whose leafy flower-cup afterward becomes a roundish or oblong fleshy fruit, inclosing several angular hairy seeds; to which may be added, it is a weak, pithy shrub, for the most part beset with prickles, and hath pinnated leaves: the species are, 1. The wild briar, dog rose, or hep-tree. 2. Wild briar or dog rose, with large prickly hews. 3. The greater apple-bearing rose. 4. The dwarf wild Burnet-leaved rose. 5. The dwarf wild Burnet-leaved rose, with variegated leaves. 6. The striped Scotch rose. 7. The sweetbriar or eglantine. 8. Sweet briar with a double flower. All the other sorts of roses are originally of foreign growth, but are hardy enough to endure the cold of our climate in the open air, and produce beautiful and fragrant flowers.

Miller.

Make use of thy salt hours, season the slaves For tubs and baths, bring down the rose-cheek'd youth,

To the tub fast and the diet. Shakespeare, Timon. Patience, thou young and rose-lipp'd cherubin.

Shakespeare.

The Provencal roses on my razed shoes. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

Those roses

Were big enough to hide a cloven foot.

B. Jonson, Dev. an Ass.

Under the Rose.† Of this vulgar saying, Dr. Johnson produces only the following opinion of Sir Thomas Brown, from his Vulgar Errors: "By desiring a secrecy to words spoke under the rose, we mean, in society and comotation, from the ancient custom in symposiack meetings, to wear chaplets of roses about their heads." Sir Thomas has elsewhere considered the rose as the symbol of silence; which others also have stated, calling it the flower of Venus, consecrated by Cupid to Harpocrates the god of silence. There is a curious passage in an old book, which has hitherto escaped observation, that graphically illustrates the secrecy required in respect to speaking under the rose. "Among the pagans (in old tyme) those, that invited any, shewed them the doore threshold, saying these words; Let nothing pass over this, that is to say, let nothing be reported over this threshold of any thing that shall be done at this banquet. And for this cause (for the present) in many countries they lay tablecloths upon their tables, whereupon are painted roses, shewing thereby, that all the words spoken thereat, ought to be hidden under it." Wodroephe, Fr. and Eng. Gramm. 4to. 1623, p. 397. Yet we had formerly also the phrase without the rose, which seems to point at the wearing of roses as the original of the saying: "I speak it now without the rose." Beaumont, and Fletch. Beggar's Bush.

Treason is but a tavern dialect: any thing passes well under the rose! It is not the man, but the liquor; not the liquor, but the excess, that is guilty of this liberty!

Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 20.

If this make us speak Bold words anon, 'tis all under the rose Forgotten!

Now that you and I are together, and under the rose too, as they say, why should not we drink somewhat briskly? Goodman, Wint. Ev. Conf. P. I.

Rose, pret. of rise.

Eve — rose and went forth among her flowers.

Milton, P. L.

ROSEAL.* adj. [roseus, Lat.] Rosy; like a rose in smell or colour.

Grind ceruss with a weak water of gum-lake, roset, and vermillion, which maketh it a fair carnation. Peacham.

ROSICRUCIAN.  n. s.* [from ros, Lat. dew, and crua, a cross. "Crua stands for lux, light, because the figure of the cross \times exhibits the three letters of which the word LUX is formed; and light is what, in the opinion of the Rosicrucians, when properly modified, produces gold. And of all natural bodies, dew is the most powerful dissolvent of gold." Mosheim, Ecc. Hist. Cent. xvii. § 1.] One of those philosophers who, by the assistance of the dew seek for light, or, in other words, the substance called the philosopher's stone. Mosheim. A sort of fantastick chymist; a kind of quack or cheat.

A mysterious knack — that lies locked up in the brain or breast of some chemical man, that, like the Rosicrucians, will not yet reveal it.

ROSICRUCIAN.  adj.* Of the Rosicrucians.

Rosicrucian virtuosos
Can see with ears, and hear with noses;
And, when they neither see nor hear,
Have more than both supply'd by fear,
That makes 'em in the dark see visions!

ROSIER. † n. s. [rosier, Fr. Chaucer writes it rosier.] A rose-bush.

By the rosier, or by other bushes.
Chaucer, Pers. Tale.

In fond rotation spread the spotted wing,
And shiver every feather with desire. Thomson.

2. Vicissitude of succession.

This is all the possible rotation our speculative state-botcher can in reason promise to himself. Buller, Charact.

RO'TATOR. n. s. [Latin.] That which gives a circular motion.

This articulation is strengthened by strong muscles; on the inside by the triceps and the four little rotators. Wiseeman.

RO'TATORY.  adj.* [rotatus, Lat.] Whirling; running round with celerity. Dr. Johnson thus defines the second sense of giddy, with rotatory prefixed.

The ball and socket joint allows a rotatory or sweeping motion. Paley, Nat. Theol. ed. 9.

ROTE.† n. s.

1. [Rotē, old Fr. from the Lat. rota, a wheel; the Fr. vielle, and what we call the hurdy-gurdy. Ritson, Metr. Rom. i. clxv. "Rotē, instrument qu'on a appelé depuis vielle; il étoit monté de cinq cordes, accordées de quarte en quarte." Roquefort, Gloss. Lang. Rom.] A musical instrument.

Wel couthe he sing, and playen on a rote.

Chaucer.

There did he find, in her delicious bower,
The faire Pæana playing on a rote. Spenser, F. Q.

2. [Rotine, old Fr. par rotine, by rote. Cotgrave. This is the general usage of this meaning, with by; but it is not universally so.] Words uttered by mere memory without meaning; memory of words without comprehension of the sense.

First rehearse this song by rote,

To each word a warbling note.

Shakespeare.

Thy loved did read by rote, and could not spell.

Shakespeare.

He rather saith it by rote to himself, than that

Bacon, Ess.

he can thoroughly believe it.

All this he understood by rote,

And as occasion serv'd would quote. Hudibras.

Learn Aristotle's rules by rote,

And at all hazards boldly quote. Swift, Miscell.

These learn a rote of buffoonery, that serveth all occasions.

Swift.

To ROTE. v. a. [from the noun.] To fix in the memory, without informing the understanding.

Speak to the people

Words roted in your tongue; bastards and syllables

Of no allowance to your bosom's truth. Shaks.

To ROTE.* v. n. [rota, Lat.] To go out by rotation or succession.

A third part of the senate, or parliament, should rote out by ballot every year, and new ones be chosen in their room.

Grey, Note on Hudibras, P. 2. C. 3. ver. 1108.

ROTCUT. n. s. [rot and gut.] Bad beer.

They overwhelm their paunch daily with a kind of flat rotgut, we with a bitter dreggish small liquor.

Harvey.

ROTHER-BEASTS.* n. s. [hṛōþer, Sax.

hṛōþu, boves, vaccæ; hṛut, or rutr,

Icel. aries, from ru, vellus, cæsaries.

Serenius.] Horned cattle; black cattle.

Phillips says it is used in old statutes,

and in his time in the north of England.

The beare to chase, the hinde to runne, the cruel boare to fall

Upon the heards of rother-beasts had now no lust

at all. Golding, Tr. of Ovid's Met. (1567.)

ROTHER-NAILS. n. s. [a corruption of rudder.] Among shipwrights, nails with very full heads used for fastening the rudder irons of ships. Bailey.

ROTHER-SOIL.* n. s. The dung of rotherbeasts. Bailey.

ROTTEEN. adj. [from rot.]

1. Putrid; carious; putrescent.

Trust not to rotten planks.

Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

Prosperity begins to mellow,

And drop into the rotten mouth of death. Shaks.

O bliss-breeding sun, draw from the earth

Rotten humidity; below thy sister's orb

Infect the air. Shakespeare, Timon.

There is by invitation or excitation; as when a rotten apple lieth close to another apple that is sound; or when dung, which is already putrefied, is added to other bodies. Bacon.

Who brass as rotten wood; and steel no more
Regards than reed. Sandys, Paraphr.

It groweth by a dead stub of a tree, and about the roots of rotten trees, and takes his juice from wood putrefied. Bacon.

They serewood from the rotten hedges took,
And seeds of latent fire from flints provoke. Dryden.

2. Not firm; not trusty.

Hence, rotten thing, or I shall shake thy bones
Out of thy garments. Shakespeare, Coriol.

3. Not sound; not hard.

They were left moidled with dirt and mire, by reason of the deepness of the rotten way. Knolles, Hist. of the Turks.

4. Fetid; stinking.

You common cry of curs, whose breath I hate,
As reek o' the rotten fens. Shakespeare, Coriol.

ROT'TENNESS. n. s. [from rotten.] State of being rotten; cariousness; putrefac-tion.

Discas'd ventures,

That play with all infirmities for gold,

Which rottenness lends nature.

Shakespeare, Cymbeline.

If the matter stink and be oily, it is a certain sign of a rottenness. Wiseman, Surgery.

ROTUND. adj. [rotonde, Fr. rotundus,

Latin.] Round; circular; spherical.

The cross figure of the Christian temples is more proper for spacious buildings than the rotund of the heathens; the eye is much better filled at first entering the rotund, but such as are built in the form of a cross give us a greater variety.

Addison.

ROTUNDFOLIOUS. adj. [rotundus, and folium, Lat.] Having round leaves.

ROTUNDITY. n. s. [rotunditas, Lat. rotun- dité, Fr. from rotund.] Roundness;

sphericity; circularity.

Thou all-shaking thunder,

Strike flat the thick rotundity o' the world.

Shakespeare.

With the rotundity common to the atoms of all fluids, there is some difference in bulk, else all fluids would be alike in weight. Grew.

Who would part with these solid blessings, for the little fantastical pleasantness of a smooth con-vexity and rotundity of a globe? Bentley, Serm.

Rotundity is an emblem of eternity, that has neither beginning nor end. Addison on Medals.

ROTUNDO.† n. s. [rotondo, Italian.] A building formed round both in the inside and outside; such as the Pantheon at Rome. Trevoux.

He at last brought us to the rotunda.

Addison on Anc. Medals.

On the brink of the precipice stands the Sibyl's temple, the remains of a little rotundo surrounded with its portico. Gray, Lett.

To ROVE.† v. n. [roffver, Danish, to range for plunder; rooven, Teut. the same; hraufa, Icel. to move from a place. Serenius.]

1. To ramble; to range; to wander.

Thou'st years upon thee, and thou art too full
Of the war's surfeits, to go rove with one

That's yet unbruist. Shakespeare, Coriol.

Faulest thou dropt from his unerring skill,

With the bare power to sin, since free of will;

Yet charge not with thy guilt his bounteous love,

For who has power to walk, has power to rove.

Arbutnot.

I view'd th' effects of that disastrous flame,
Which kindled by th' imperious queen of love,
Constrain'd me from my native realm to rove. Pope.

2. To shoot an arrow called a rove. To rove wide of the mark, is a phrase yet used in some places. Dr. Johnson has taken no notice of this definition.

Even at the marke-white of his heart she roved.

Spenser, F. Q.

To ROVE. v. a. To wander over.

Roving the field, I chanc'd

A goodly tree far distant to behold,

Loaden with fruit of fairest colours. Milton, P. L.

Cloacina as the town she rov'd,

A mortal scavenger she saw, she lov'd. Gay.

RO'VER.† n. s. [from rove.]

1. A wanderer; a ranger.

Are you rovers, and men of fortune?

Bogan, Hom. Hebr. (1658,) p. 243.

Thought, busy thought, too busy for my peace,

Strays, wretched rover, o'er the pleasing past.

Young, Night Th. 1.

2. A fickle inconstant man.

Soon, too soon, the happy lover

Does our tenderest hopes deceive;

Man was form'd to be a rover,

Foolish love to believe. Mendez, Song in the Chapelet.

3. A robber; a pirate. [neapepe, Saxon;

roover, Teut.]

This is the case of rovers by land, as some can-tons in Arabia. Bacon, Holy War.

4. A kind of arrow.

Here be of all sorts; flights, rovers, and butt-shafts. B. Jonson, Cynthia Revels.

5. At ROVERS. Without any particular aim. Dr. Johnson.—Barret explains

"running at rovers" by overmuch liberty.

To shoot at rovers, however, means, in the terms of archery, to shoot at a very distant object, instead of the butt which was nearer. Thus in the stat. 33 Hen. VIII. 9. it is enacted, that no person under the age of twenty-four shall shoot at a standing mark, except it be a rover, where he may change his ground every shot, &c. And no other person above twenty-four shall shoot at any mark of eleven score yards, or under, &c.

You pretend to shoote at the butte, you shoote quite at the rovers, and cleane from the marke.

Abp. Cranmer, Answ. to Bp. Gardiner, p. 63.

Nature shoots not at rovers; even inanimates, though they know not their perfection, yet are they not carried on by a blind unguided impetus;

but that, which directs them, knows it.

Glanville, Scopsis.

Providence shoots not at rovers: there is an arrow that flies by night as well as by day, and

God is the person that shoots it. South, Serm.

Men of greater reading show their talents on the meanest subjects; this is a kind of shooting at rovers. Addison.

ROUGE. n. s. [French.] Red paint.

ROUGE.* adj. [rouge, Fr.] Red.

Of olive and of ruge flouris

Weren ystrewed halle and bours.

Davies's Fvisions, (about 1312,) in Wart. H. E. P. i. 223.

To ROUGE.* v. n. To lay rouge over the face: as, she rouges.

To ROUGE.* v. a. To have the face

coloured with rouge: as, she was rouged.

ROUGH.† adj. [hpeof, neoh, Saxon;

rauh, Germ. The Sax. has also the substantive hpeof, Scabious.]

1. Not smooth; rugged; having inequalities on the surface.

The fiend

O'er bog or steep, through strait, rough, dense, or rare;

Pursues his way. Milton, P. L.

Were the mountains taken all away, the remaining parts would be more unequal than the roughest sea; whereas the face of the earth should resemble that of the calmest sea, if still in the form of its first mass. Burnet, Theory.

2. Austere to the taste: as, rough wine.
3. Harsh to the ear.

The rough and woful musick that we have,
Cause it to sound. Shakspeare, Pericles.
Most by the numbers judge a poet's song,
And smooth or rough with them is right or wrong. Pope.

4. Rugged of temper; inelegant of manners; not soft; coarse; not civil; severe; not mild; rude.

A fiend, a fury, pitiless and rough,
A wolf; may worse, a fellow all in buff. Shaks.
Strait with a band of soldiers tall and rough
On him he seizes. Cowley, Davidels.

The booby Phaon only was unkind,
A surly boatman rough as seas and wind. Prior.

5. Not gentle; not proceeding by easy operation.

He gave not the king time to prosecute that gracious method, but forced him to a quicker and rougher remedy. Clarendon.

Hippocrates seldom mentions the doses of his medicines, which is somewhat surprising, because his purgatives are generally very rough and strong. Arbutnot on Coins.

6. Harsh to the mind; severe.

Kind words prevent a good deal of that perverseness, which rough and imperious usage often produces in generous minds. Locke.

7. Hard featured; not delicate.

A rosy chain of rheums, a visage rough,
Deform'd, unfeatur'd, and a skin of buff. Dryden.

8. Not polished; not finished by art: as, a rough diamond.

9. Terrible; dreadful.

Before the cloudy van,
On the rough edge of battle, ere it join'd,
Satan advance'd. Milton, P. L.

10. Rugged; disordered in appearance; coarse.

Rough from the tossing surge Ulysses moves,
Urg'd on by want, and recent from the storms,
The brackish ooze his manly grace deforms. Pope.

11. Tempestuous; stormy; boisterous.

Come what come may,
Time and the hour run through the roughest day. Shakspeare.

12. Hairy; covered with hair or feathers. See ROUGH-FOOTED.

*ROUGH. n. s. Not calm weather. Obsolete.

Thrice happy swains! —

In calms, you fish; in roughs, use songs and dances. P. Fletcher, Pisc. Eccl. vii. 32.

To ROUGHCAST. v. a. [rough and cast.]

1. To mould without nicety or elegance; to form with asperities and inequalities. Nor bodily, nor ghostly negro could Roughcast thy figure in a Radder mould. Cleaveland.

2. To form any thing in its first rudiments.

In meritment they were first practised, and this roughcast unwhewn poetry was instead of stage plays for one hundred and twenty years. Dryden, Ded. to Juw.

ROUGHCAST. n. s. [rough and cast.]

1. A rude model; a form in its rudiments. The whole piece seems rather a loose model and roughcast of what I design to do, than a complete work. Digby.

2. A kind of plaster mixed with pebbles, or by some other cause very uneven on the surface.

Some man must present a wall; and let him have some plaster, lome, or roughcast about him to signify wall. Shakspeare.

ROUGH-DRAUGHT. n. s. [rough and draught.] A draught in its rudiments; a sketch.

My elder brothers came
Roughdrafts of nature, ill design'd and lame,
Blown off, like blossoms, never made to bear;
Till I came finish'd, her last labour'd care. Dryden.

To ROUGHDRAW. v. a. [rough and draw.]

- To trace coarsely.

His victories we scarce could keep in view,
Or polish 'em so fast, as he roughdraw. Dryden.

To ROUGHEN. v. a. [from rough.] To make rough.

Such difference there is in tongues, that the same figure which roughens one, gives majesty to another; and that was it which Virgil studied in his verses. Dryden.

Ah! where must needy poet seek for aid,
When dust and rain at once his coat invade!
His only coat; when dust confus'd with rain,
Roughens the nap, and leaves a mingled stain. Swift.

To ROUGHEN. v. n. To grow rough.

The broken landscape
Ascending roughens into rigid hills. Thomson, Spring.

To ROUGHHEW.† v. a. [rough and hew.]
Dr. Farmer informed Mr. Steevens that the phrase, as used by Shakspeare, is technical. "A wool-man, butcher, and dealer in skewers, lately observed to him, that his nephew (an idle lad) could only assist him in making them; he could rough-hew them, but not shape their ends. To shape the ends of wool-skewers, or point them, requires a degree of skill; any one can rough-hew them." Those who lop the branches and knots, from trees that have been felled, I may add, commonly call their work rough-hewing.] To give to any thing the first appearance of form.

There's a divinity that shapes our ends,
Roughhew them how he will. Shaks. Hamlet.

The whole world, without art and dress,
Would be but one great wilderness,
And mankind but a savage herd,
For all that nature has conferr'd:
This does but roughhew and design,
Leaves art to polish and refine. Hudibras.

ROUGHHEWN. particip. adj.

1. Rugged; unpolished; uncivil; unfinished.

A roughhewn seaman, being brought before a justice for some misdeameour, was by him ordered away to prison; and would not stir; saying, it was better to stand where he was, than to go to a worse place. Bacon, Apophthegms.

2. Not yet nicely finished.

I hope to obtain a candid construction of this roughhewn, ill-timber'd discourse. Howell, Voc. For.

ROUGHLY. adv. [from rough.]

1. With uneven surface; with asperities on the surface.

2. Harshly; uncivilly; rudely.

Ne Mammon would there let him long remain,
For terror of the torments manifold,
In which the damned souls he did behold,
But roughly him bespake. Spenser.

Rebuk'd, and roughly sent to prison,
Th' immediate heir of England! was this easy? Shakspeare.

3. Severely; without tenderness.

Some friends of vice pretend,
That I the tricks of youth too roughly blame. Dryden.

4. Austere to the taste.

5. Boisterously; tempestuously.

6. Harshly to the ear.

ROUGHNESS. n. s. [from rough.]

1. Superficial asperity; unevenness of surface.

The little roughnesses or other inequalities of the leather against the cavity of the cylinder, now and then put a stop to the descent or ascent of the sucker. Boyle.

While the steep horrid roughness of the wood Strives with the gentle calmness of the flood. Denham.

When the diamond is not only found, but the roughness smoothed, cut into a form, and set in gold, then we cannot but acknowledge, that it is the perfect work of art and nature. Dryden.

Such a persuasion as this well fixed, will smooth all the roughness of the way that leads to happiness, and render all the conflicts with our lusts pleasing. Atterbury.

2. Austere to the taste.

Divers plants contain a grateful sharpness, as lemons; or an austere and incoacted roughness, as sloes. Brown.

3. Taste of astringency.

A tobacco-pipe broke in my mouth, and the spitting out the pieces left such a delicious roughness on my tongue, that I champed up the remaining part. Spectator.

4. Harshness to the ear.

In the roughness of the numbers and cadences of this play, which was so designed, you will see somewhat more masterly than in any of my former tragedies. Dryden.

The Swedes, Danes, Germans, and Dutch attain to the pronunciation of our words with ease, because our syllables resemble theirs in roughness and frequency of consonants. Swift.

5. Ruggedness of temper; coarseness of manners; tendency to rudeness; coarseness of behaviour and address.

Roughness is a needless cause of discontent; severity breedeth fear; but roughness breedeth hate: even reproofs from authority ought to be grave and not taunting. Bacon.

When our minds' eyes are disengag'd,
They quicken sloth, perplexities ungy,
Make roughness smooth, and hardness mollify. Denham.

Roughness of temper is apt to discountenance the timorous or modest. Addison.

6. Absence of delicacy.

Should feasting and balls once get amongst the cantons, their military roughness would be quickly lost, their tempers would grow too soft for their climate. Addison.

7. Severity; violence of discipline.

8. Violence of operation in medicines.

9. Unpolished or unfinished state.

10. Inelegance of dress or appearance.

11. Tempestuousness; storminess.

12. Coarseness of features.

ROUGH-FOOTED.† adj. [from rough and foot.] Feather-footed: as, "a rough-footed dove." Sherwood.

ROUGH-SHOD. adj.* [rough and shod.]
Having the foot fitted, when the roads in frosty weather are slippery, with a roughened shoe: used of horses.

ROUGHINGS. n. s. pl.* Grass after mowing or reaping. See ROVEN.

ROUGH. old pret. of reach. [commonly written by Spenser rought.] Reached.

The moon was a month old, when Adam was no more,
And rought not to five weeks, when he came to fivescore. Shakspeare, L. Lab. Lost.

To ROUGHWORK. v. a. [rough and work.] To work coarsely over without the least nicety.

Thus you must continue, till you have rough-wrought all your work from end to end.

Mozon, Mech. Ex.

RO'VING.* n. s. [from To rove.] Act of rambling or wandering.

The numberless rovings of fancy, and windings of language.

Barrow, Sermon. i. 177.

If we indulge the frequent rise and roving of passions, we thereby procure an unattentive habit.

Watts.

ROULEAU.* n. s. [French.] A little roll; a roll of guineas made up in a paper: a term of gaming, as the amusing Pop-Dictionary of 1690 informs us, adding that certain lenders made up a rouleau of 49 guineas, for which they were to receive in payment 50!

Expos'd in glorious heaps the tempting bank, Guineas, half-guineas, all the shining train, The winner's pleasure, and the loser's pain: In bright confusion open rouleaus lie, They strike the soul, and glitter in the eye!

Pope, Basset-Table.

ROUN-TREE.* n. s. [ronn, runn, Su. Goth. sorbus aucuparia; ronne, Dan. Ihre conjectures, with great probability, that the etymon may be from runa, incantation, because of the use made of it in magical arts. Brockett, N. C. Words. It is also written roan-tree and royne-tree, and has been esteemed a tree of wonderful efficacy in depriving witches of their infernal power. See Craven Dialect.] The mountain-ash. A northern word.

To ROUN.* v. n. To whisper. See the second sense of To Round. But roun, or rown, is the true word, as the etymon, and ancient usage of it, will shew. [Sax. punian, susurrare, mysticé loqui; Germ. runen; M. Goth. runa, mysterium, secretum. The Lancashire dialect preserves this form in reawn, to whisper. Rownynge, susurrum. Pr. Parv.]

And oft he rouneth in her ear.

Gower, Conf. Am. B. 4.

He rouned in his ere.

Chaucer, Fr. Tale.

To ROUN.* v. a. To address in a whisper.

A little wholesome talk,

That none could hear, close rouned in the ear.

Bretton, Works of a Young Wit, (1577.)

ROUNCEVAL. n. s. [from Rounceval, a town at the foot of the Pyrenees.] See PEA, of which it is a species.

Dig garden,

And set as a daintie thy rounceval penae.

Tusser.

ROUND.† adj. [rond, French; rondo, Italian; rund, Dutch; rotundus, Latin. Dr. Johnson.—Su. Goth. rund, raund: vox antiquissima. Serenius.]

1. Cylindrical.

Hollow engines long, and round, thick ramm'd.

Milton, P. L.

2. Circular.

The outside bare of this round world.

Milton, P. L.

4. [Rotundo ore, Lat.] Smooth; without defect in sound.

In his satyrs Horace is quick, round, and pleasant, and as in nothing so bitter, so not so good as Juvenal.

Peacham.

His style, though round and comprehensive, was incomprehensible sometimes by parentheses, and became difficult to vulgar understandings.

Fell, Life of Hammond.

5. Whole; not broken.

Pliny put a round number near the truth, rather than a fraction.

Arbutnot on Coins.

6. Large; not inconsiderable: this is hardly used but with sum or price.

Three thousand ducats! 'tis a good round sum.

Shakespeare.

They set a round price upon your head.

Addison.

It is not easy to foresee what a round sum of money may do among a people, who have tamely suffered the Franche Compté to be seized on.

Addison on Italy.

She called for a round sum out of the privy purse.

Hooker.

7. Plain; clear; fair; candid; open.

This doth shine over all; a simple and round heart.

Hollyband's Fr. Liltelton, (1581), p. 82.

Round dealing is the honour of man's nature; and a mixture of falsehood is like alloy in gold and silver, which may make the metal work the better, but it embaseth it.

Bacon.

8. Quick; brisk.

Painting is a long pilgrimage; if we do not actually begin the journey, and travel at a round rate, we shall never arrive at the end of it.

Dryden, Dufresnoy.

Sir Roger heard them upon a round trot; and after pausing, told them, that much might be said on both sides.

Addison.

9. Plain; free without delicacy or reserve; almost rough.

Let his queen mother all alone intreat him, To shew his griefs; let her be round with him.

Shakespeare.

The kings interposed in a round and princely manner; not only by way of request and persuasion, but also by way of protestation and menace.

Bacon.

ROUND.† n. s.

1. A circle; a sphere; an orb.

Hie thee hither,

That I may pour my spirits in thine ear, And chastise with the valour of my tongue All that impedes thee from the golden round, Which fate and metaphisick aid both seem To have crown'd thee withal.

Shaks. Macbeth.

I'll charm the air to give a sound, While you perform your antick round.

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

Three or four we'll dress like urchins, With rounds of waxen tapers on their heads, And rattle in their hands.

Shakespeare, M. W. of Windsor.

Hirsute roots are a middle sort, between the bulbous and fibrous; that, besides the putting forth sap upwards and downwards, putteth forth in round.

Bacon.

He did foretel and prophesy of him, Who to his realms that azure round hath join'd.

Denham.

They meet, they wheel, they throw their darts afar;

Then in a round the mingled bodies run, Flying they follow, and pursuing shun.

Dryden.

How shall I then begin, or where conclude, To draw a fame so truly circular?

For, in a round, what order can be shew'd, Where all the parts so equal perfect are?

Dryden.

The mouth of Vesuvio has four hundred yards in diameter; for it seems a perfect round.

Addison.

This image on the medal plac'd,

With its bright round of titles grac'd,

And stamp on British coins shall live.

Addison.

2. Rundle; step of a ladder.

When he once attains the upmost round,

He then unto the ladder turns his back,

Looks in the clouds, scorning the base degrees

By which he did ascend.

Shakspeare, Jul. Cas.

Many are kick'd down ere they have climbed the two or three first rounds of the ladder.

Gow, of the Tongue.

All the rounds like Jacob's ladder rise; The lowest hid in earth, the topmost in the skies.

Dryden.

This is the last stage of human perfection, the utmost round of the ladder whereby we ascend to heaven.

Norris.

3. The time in which any thing has passed through all hands, and comes back to the first: hence applied to a carousal.

A gentle round fill'd to the brink,

To this and t' other friend I drink,

Suckling.

Women to cards may be compar'd; we play

A round or two, when us'd, we throw away.

Granville.

The feast was serv'd; the bowl was crown'd; To the king's pleasure went the mirthful round.

Prior.

4. A revolution; a course ending at the point where it began.

We, that are of purer fire,

Imitate the starry quire,

Who, in their mighty watchful spheres,

Lead in swift rounds the months and years.

Milton, Comus.

No end can to this be found, 'Tis nought but a perpetual fruitless round.

Cowley.

If nothing will please people, unless they be greater than nature intended, what can they expect, but the ass's round of vexatious changes?

L'Estrange.

How then to drag a wretched life beneath An endless round of still returning woes, And all the gnawing pains of vain remorse? What torment's this?

Smith.

Some preachers, prepared upon two or three points, run the same round from one end of the year to another.

Addison.

'Till by one countless sum of woes oppress'd, Hoary with cares, and ignorant of rest, We find the vital springs relax'd and worn; Compell'd our common impotence to mourn, Thus through the round of age, to childhood we return.

Prior.

5. Rotation; succession in vicissitude.

Such new Utopians would have a round of government, as some the like in the church, in which every speak becomes uppermost in his turn.

Holyday.

6. [Ronde, Fr.] A walk performed by a guard or officer, to survey a certain district.

He accompanied the major of the regiment in going what are styled the rounds.

Langton of Johnson, in Boswell's Life.

Felton on the Classics.

ROUNDEL.† } n. s.
ROUNDELAY. }

1. [Rondelet, Fr. A kind of ancient poetry, which commonly consists of thirteen verses, of which eight are of one kind of rhyme and five of another: it is divided into three couplets; and at the end of the second and third, the beginning of the roundel is repeated in an equivocal sense, if possible. Dict. Tre-voux.] A song or tune in which preceding lines or strains are repeated; a kind of dance.

Siker, sike a roundel never heard I none;
Little lacketh Perigot of the best,
And Willie is not greatly over-gone,
So weren his under-songs well address'd.

Spenser, Shep. Cal.
To hear thy rimes and roundelays,
Which thou wert wont in wasteful hills to sing,
I more delight than lark in summer days,
Whose echo made the neighbouring groves to ring.

Spenser.
Come now a roundel and a fairy song. Shaks.
The muses and graces made festivals; the fawns, satyrs, and nymphs did dance their roundelays.

Howell.

ROUND-ROBIN.* n. s. ["a corruption of the Fr. ruban ronde, a round riband. It was usual among French officers, when they signed a remonstrance, to write their names in a circular form, so that it was impossible to ascertain who signed first." James, Milit. Dict.] A written petition or remonstrance, signed by several persons round a ring or circle.

The question was who should have the courage to propose them to him? at last it was hinted, that there could be no way so good as that of a round-robin, as the sailors call it, which they make use of when they enter into a conspiracy, so as not to let it be known who puts his name first or last to the paper.

Sir W. Forbes, Lett. to Boswell, in Bosw. Life of Johns.

To ROUSE. v. a. [of the same class of words with raise and rise.]

1. To wake from rest.

At once the crowd arose, confus'd and high;
For Mars was early up, and rous'd the sky.

Dryden.

Rev'rent I touch thee! but with honest zeal,
To rouse the watchmen of the publick weal,
To virtue's work provoke the tardy hal;
And goad the prelate slumbering in his stall.

Pope.

2. To excite to thought or action.

Then rouse that heart of thine,
And whatsoever heretofore thou hast assum'd to be,
This day be greater. Chapman.

The Dane and Swede, rous'd up by fierce alarms,
Bless the wise conduct of her pious arms;
Soon as his fleets appear, their terrors cease,
And all the northern world lies hush'd in peace.

Addison.

I'll thunder in their ears their country's cause,
And try to rouse up all that's Roman in them.

Addison's Cato.

The heat with which Luther treated his adversaries, though strained too far, was extremely well fitted by the providence of God to rouse up a people, the most phlegmatick of any in Christendom. Atterbury.

3. To put into action.

As an eagle, seeing prey appear,
His airy plumes doth rouse full rudely dight;
So shak'd he, that horror was to hear.

Spenser, F. Q.

Blust'ring winds had rous'd the sea.

Milton, P. L.

4. To drive a beast from his laire.

The blood more stirs,
To rouse a lion than to start a hare.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

He stooped down, he couched as a lion, and as an old lion; who shall rouse him up?

Gen. xlix. 9.

The unexpected sound
Of dogs and men his wakeful ear does wound;
Rous'd with the noise, he scarce believes his ear,
Willing to think th' illusions of his fear
Had giv'n this false alarm.

Denham.

Now Cancer glows with Phœbus' fiery car,
The youth rush eager to the sylvan war;
Swarm o'er the lawns, the forest-walks surround,
Rouse the fleet hart, and cheer the op'ning bound.

Pope.

To ROUSE. v. n.

1. To awake from slumber.

Men, sleeping found by whom they dread,
Rouse and bestir themselves ere well awake.

Milton, P. L.

Richard, who now was half asleep,
Rous'd; nor would longer silence keep. Prior.

Melancholy lifts her head;
Morpheus rouses from his bed. Pope, St. Cecilia.

2. To be excited to thought or action.

Good things of day begin to droop and drowse,
While night's black agents to their prey do rouse.

Shakespeare.

ROUSE.† n. s. [rusch, German, half drunk. Dr. Johnson.—This word is used in the various significations of a riotous noise, a drunken debauch, and a large portion of liquor. We had it probably from our Saxon or Danish progenitors; and though the original word is lost, it remains in the German rausch. Hence our carouse. Douce, Illustr. of Shakespeare, ii. 205.—The Danish rousa is preserved in a work, believed by Mr. Brand to be written in King Charles the Second's time: "Thou noblest drunkard Bacchus,—teach me how to take the Danish rousa, the Switzer's stoop of Rhenish, the Italian parmasant, the Englishman's healths and frolicks." Popul. Antiq. ii. 228.] A large glass filled to the utmost, in honour of a health proposed. The word is obsolete.

They have given me a rouse already.

—Not past a pint, as I am a soldier.

Shakespeare, Othello.

No jocund health that Denmark drinks to-day,
But the great cannon to the clouds shall tell;
And the king's rouse shall bruit it back again,
Respeaking either thunder. Shakespeare.

Take the rouse freely,
'Twill warm your blood, and make you fit for jollity. Beaumont and Fl. Loy. Subject.

ROUS'ER.† n. s. [from rouse.] One who rouses.

All this which I have depainted to thee, are inciters and rousers of my mind.

Shelton, Tr. of D. Quix. iii. 6.

ROUT.† n. s. [route, old Fr. rot, Teut. rotte, Germ. ruia, roula, low Lat. "rhawd", rhawter, Welsh, caterva, turma, rhodio, vagari.] Serenius.

1. A clamorous multitude; a rabble; a tumultuous crowd.

Besides the endless routs of wretched thralls,
Which thither were assembled day by day
From all the world. Spenser.

A rout of people there assembled were,
Of every sort and nation under sky. Spenser.

If that rebellion
Came like itself in base and abject routs,
Led on by bloody youth, goaded with rage,
And countenanced by boys and beggary,
You, reverend father, then had not been there.

Shakespeare.

Farmers were to forfeit their holds in case of unlawful retainer, or partaking in routs and unlawful assemblies.

Bacon.

Such a tacit league is against such routs and shoals, as have utterly degenerated from the laws of nature.

Bacon.

Nor do I name of men the common rout,
That, wandering loose about,
Grow up and perish, as the summer fly.

Milton, S. A.

Fancy, wild dame, with much lascivious pride,
By twin chameleons drawn, does gaily ride,
Her coach there follows, and throngs round about,
Of shapes and airy forms an endless rout. Cowley.

The mad ungovernable rout,
Full of confusion and the fumes of wine,
Lov'd such variety and antic tricks. Roscommon.

Harley spies
The doctor fasten'd by the eyes
At Charing-cross among the rout,
Where painted monsters are hung out. Swift.

2. A select company. Not noticed by Dr. Johnson, or any of our lexicographers.

He rode the hinderest of the route.

Chaucer, C. T. Prolog.

Upon a little hillock she was placed
Higher than all the rest, and round about
Environ'd with a girland, goodly graced,
Of lovely lasses; and them all without
The lustie shepherd swaynes sate in a rout.

Spenser, F. Q.

She is the foundress of those assemblies called routs. Dr. Warton, Renelagh House.

Our lords and ladies then could sup alone,
The noisy terms of drums and routs unknown.

Neulle, Imit. of Juvenal, p. 24.

3. [Route, Fr.] Confusion of an army defeated or dispersed.

Thy army,
As if they could not stand when thou wert down,
Dispers'd in rout, betook them all to fly. Daniel.

Their mightiest quell'd, the battle swerv'd,
With many an inroad gor'd; deformed rout
Enter'd, and foul disorder. Milton, P. L.

To ROUT. v. a. To dissipate and put into confusion by defeat.

The next way to end the wars with him, and to rout him quite, should be to keep him from invading of those countries adjoining.

Spenser on Ireland.

That party of the king's horse, that charged the Scots, so totally routed and defeated their whole army, that they fled. Clarendon.

To ROUT. v. n. To assemble in clamorous and tumultuous crouds.

The meaner sort routed together, and suddenly assailing the earl in his house, slew him.

Bacon, Hen. VII.

To ROUT, or ROWT.* v. n. [hriota, Icel. hpucan, Sax. ryta, Su. Goth. Our word is also pronounced and written, in some parts of the north, raut.] To snore in sleep. Prompt. Parv. The word is retained also in Barret's Alv. 1580. To snort. It is still a northern word; to make a bellowing noise; to roar. And so anciently, as well as to snore.

The belling of the sea —
And that a man stande out of doute
A myle off thence, and heare it route.

Chaucer, House of Fame, ii. 590.

They had gode leysir for to route,
To vye who mighten slepe best.

Chaucer, Dr. ver. 172.

To ROUT.* v. n. To search in the ground: as, a swine. A corruption of root. See To ROOT. It is a low expression also for making any search.

Do thou the monumental hillock guard
From trampling cattle, and the routing swine.

Edwards, Sonn. (1758), s. 44.

ROUTE. n. s. [route, Fr.] Road; way.

Wide through the furzy field their route they take,
Their bleeding bosoms force the thorny brake.

Gay.

ROUTINE.* n. s. [French; anciently rottine, "an usual course, beaten path, ordinary way." Cotgrave.] Custom; practice.

He has certain set forms and routes of speech.
Butler, Rem. ii. 272.

ROW.† n. s. [reih, Germ. pæpa, Saxon. See Rew.] A rank or file; a number of things ranged in a line.

Lips never part, but that they show
Of precious pearl the double row. Sidney.

After them all dancing on a row,
The comely virgins came with garlands dight,
As fresh as flow'ers. Spenser.

Three rows of great stones, and a new row of timber. Ezra, vi. 4.

Where any row
Of fruit trees, overwoody, reach'd too far
Their pamp'rd boughs, and needed hands to check

Fruitless embraces. Milton, P. L.
A triple mounted row of pillars, laid

On wheels. Milton, P. L.
Where the bright seraphim in burning row,

Their loud uplifted angel-trumpets blow.
Milton, Ode.

A new-born wood of various lines there grows,
And all the flourishing letters stand in rows. Cowley.

The victor honour'd with a nobler vest,
Where gold and purple strive in equal rows.

Why round our coaches crowd the white-glov'd beaux,
Why bows the sidebox from its inmost rows? Pope.

Row.* n. s. A riotous noise; a drunken debauch. Mr. Douce thinks that, to the substantive rowse, may be referred "the word row, which was very much used a few years since." Illustr. of Shakspeare, 1807. ii. 205. It is a very low expression.

To ROW.† v. n. [ropan, Sax. ro, Su. Goth.] To impel a vessel in the water by oars.

He saw them toiling in rowing; for the wind was contrary. St. Mark, vi. 48.

Some of these troughs or canoes were so great,
That above twenty men have been found rowing in one. Abbott.

The bold Britons then securely row'd;
Charles and his virtue was their sacred load. Waller.

The watermen turned their barge, and rowed softly,
that they might take the cool of the evening. Dryden.

To Row. v. a. To drive or help forward by oars.

The swan rows her state with oary feet. Milton, P. L.

Row'ABLE.* adj. [from To row.] Capable of being rowed upon.

That long barren fen,
Once rowable; but now doth nourish men
In neighbour towns, and feels the weighty plough. B. Jonson, Horace's Art of Poetry.

Row'EL.† n. s. [rouelle, Fr.]

1. A goodly person! and could manage faire
His stubborn steed with curb'd canon bitt,
Who under him did trample as the aire,
And chaunt that any on his backe should sitt:
The yron rowels into frothy fume he bitt. Spenser, F. Q. i. vii. 37.

2. The points of a spur turning on an axis.

He gave his able horse the head,
And, bending forward, struck his agile heels
Against the panting sides of his poor jade
Up to the rowel head. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

A rider like myself, who ne'er wore rowel
Nor iron on his heel. Shaks. Cymbeline.

A mullet is the rowel of a spur, and hath never but five points; a star hath six.

Peacham on Blazoning.

He spur'd his fiery steed

With goring rowels, to provoke his speed. Dryden.

3. A seton; a roll of hair or silk put into a wound to hinder it from healing, and provoke a discharge.

To Row'EL. v. a. To pierce through the skin, and keep the wound open by a rowel.

Rowel the horse in the chest. Mortimer, Husbandry.

Row'EN.† n. s. [rowings are in some places what are elsewhere called roughings. See ROUGHINGS.]

Rowen is a field kept up till after Michaelmas, that the corn left on the ground may sprout into green. Notes on Tusser.

Then spare it for rowen, til Michel be past,
To lengthen thy dairie, no better thou hast. Tusser.

Turn your cows, that give milk, into your rowens, till snow comes. Mortimer, Husbandry.

Row'EL. n. s. [from row.] One that manages an oar.

Four galleys first, which equal rowers bear,
Advancing in the wat'ry lists, appear. Dryden.

The bishop of Salisbury ran down with the stream thirty miles in an hour, by the help of but one rower. Addison.

ROYAL. adj. [royal, Fr.]

1. Kingly; belonging to a king; becoming a king; regal.

The royal stock of David. Milton, P. L.

The royal bowers
Of great Seleucia built by Grecian kings. Milton, P. L.

Thrice happy they, who thus in woods and groves,
From courts retired, possess their peaceful loves:
Of royal maids how wretched is the fate! Granville.

2. Noble; illustrious.

What news from Venice?
How doth that royal merchant, good Antonio? Shakspeare.

ROYAL.* n. s.

1. One of the shoots of a stag's head. Bailey.

2. The highest sail of a ship. Chambers.

3. In artillery, a kind of small mortar. Chambers.

4. One of the soldiers of the first regiment of foot, which is called The Royals; and is supposed to be the oldest regular corps in Europe. James.

ROYALISM.* n. s. [Fr. royalisme.] Attachment to the cause of royalty.

ROYALIST.† n. s. [royaliste, Fr. "taking the king's part, siding with the king." Cotgrave.] Adherent to a king.

Where Candish fought, the royalists prevail'd, Neither his courage nor his judgement fail'd. Waller.

The old church of England royalists, another name for a man who prefers his conscience before his interests, are the most meritorious subjects in the world, as having passed all those terrible tests, which domineering malice could put them to, and carried their credit and their conscience clear. South.

To Ro'YALIZE. v. a. [from royal.] To make royal.

Ere you were queen, ay, or your husband king,
To royalize his blood, I spilt mine own. Shaks.

Ro'YALLY. adv. [from royal.] In a kingly manner; regally; as becomes a king.

It shall be my care,

To have you royally appointed. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

His body shall be royally interr'd,

And the last funeral poms adorn his hearse. Dryden.

Ro'YALTY. n. s. [royauté, Fr.]

1. Kingship; character or office of a king.

Draw, you rascal; you come with letters against the king, and take vanity the puppet's part against the royalty of her father. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

He will lose his head, ere give consent,
His master's son, as worshipfully he terms it,
Shall lose the royalty of England's throne. Shaks.

Royalty by birth was the sweetest way of majesty: a king and a father compounded into one, being of a temper like unto God, justice and mercy. Holyday.

If they had held their royalties by this title, either there must have been but one sovereign, or else every father of a family had as good a claim to royalty as these. Locke.

2. State of a king.

I will, alas! be wretched to be great,
And sign in royalty, and grieve in state. Prior.

3. Emblems of royalty.

Wherefore do I assume
These royalties, and not refuse to reign? Milton, P. L.

To ROYNE. v. a. [rogner, Fr.] To gnaw; to bite.

Yet did he murmur with rebellious sound,
And softly royne when savage choler can rebound. Spenser, F. Q.

Ro'YNISH. adj. [rogneux, Fr. mangy, paltry.] Paltry; sorry; mean; rude.

The roynish clown, at whom so oft
Your grace was wont to laugh, is also missing. Shakspeare.

Ro'YTELET. n. s. [French.] A little or petty king.

Causing the American royetelets to turn all homagers to that king and the crown of England. Heylin.

Ro'YTISH.* adj. Wild; irregular.

This word is retained in the northern rowty, over-rank, spoken of corn or grass. Its origin I know not.

No weed presum'd to show its roytish face
In this inclosure; nettles, thistles, brakes,
Thorns, briars, cockle, henlock, rampant grasse,
With all those herbs the meager wizard rakes
Into his deadly boxes, either yet
Were not at all, or far from Eden set. Beaumont, Psyche, (1651.) p. 85.

To RUB.† v. a. [rhubio, Welsh; reiben, German, to wipe. Dr. Johnson. — "The Greek word τριβε vulgarly signifies to rub." Hammond on St. Mark, xiv. 3.

Wachter, under the Germ. reiben, refers to this Greek word; and notices also the Heb. roph, contriv. But see also Spiegel, Gloss. Su. Goth. in V. RIFWA, and RUBBA.]

1. To clean or smooth any thing by passing something over it; to scour; to wipe; to perfricate.

2. To touch so as to leave something of that which touches behind.

Their straw-built citadel new rubb'd with balm. Milton, P. L.

In narrow clefts, in the monument that stands over him, catholics rub their beads, and smell his bones, which they say have in them a natural perfume, though very like apple-pieck balsam; and what would make one suspect, that they rub the marble with it, it is observed, that the scent is stronger in the morning than at night.

Addison on Italy.

3. To move one body upon another.

Look, how she *rub*s her hands.

— It is an accustomed action with her, to seem thus washing her hands. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

5. A whetstone.

RUBBAGE.† } n. s. [from rub; as perhaps RUBBISH. } meaning, at first, dust made by rubbing. Rubbage is not now used. Dr. Johnson. — Of rubbidge, another form of this word, Dr. Johnson has taken no notice. Mr. Pegge considers rubbidge as the change of rubbish made by the modern Londoners; idge being a favourite termination of theirs. See his Anecd. of the Eng. Language, 2d edit. 70. But this is not the fact. Rubbidge is old in the language, and used by such men as Jeremy Taylor and Hall. Who shall now dare to reprehend the cockneys? "Buried in rubbidge and dust." Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 56. "The rubbidge and ruins of our own vile bodies." Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 72. "The Colossus, noble without, stuff with rubbidge and coarse metal within." Brown, Chr. Mor. iii. 11.

1. Ruins of building; fragments of matter used in building.

What trash is Rome!

What rubbish, and what offal! when it serves

For the base matter to illuminate

So vile a thing as Caesar. Shaks. Jul. Cæs.

Such conceits seem too fine among this rubbage. Wotton.

A fabrick, though high and beautiful, if founded on rubbish, is easily made the triumph of the winds. Glansville, Scopsis.

When the foundation of a state is once loosened, the least commotion lays the whole in rubbish. L'Estrange.

Th' Almighty cast a pitying eye,
He saw the town's one half in rubbish lie. Dryden.

Knowledge lying under abundance of rubbish, his scope has been to remove this rubbish, and to dress up crabbed matters as agreeably as he can. Davenant.

The enemy hath avoided a battle, and taken a surer way to consume us, by letting our courage evaporate against stones and rubbish. Swift.

2. Confusion; mingled mass.

That noble art of political lying ought not to lie any longer in rubbish and confusion. Arbuthnot, J. Bull.

3. Any thing vile and worthless.

*RUBBIDGE. n. s. Rubbish. See what I have said under the etymological part of RUBBAGE. And also RUBBLE.

*RUBBLE. n. s. Rubbish. This is perhaps the oldest form of the word rubbish.
Carry out rubble, as mortar, and broken stones of old buildings. Barret, Adv. (1580.)

Rubble, or rubbish, of old houses. Barret, ut supr.

Pieces of timber, bars of iron, massy stones, together with all the rubble and stones in the walls of that great and glorious pile. Dean King, Sermon. (1608.) p. 20.

RUBBLE-STONE. n. s.

Rubble-stones owe their name to their being rubbed and worn by the water, at the latter end of the deluge, departing in hurry and with great precipitation. Woodward.

RUBICAN. adj. [rubicane, Fr.] Rubican. colour of a horse is one that is bay, sorrel, or black, with a light, grey, or white upon the flanks, but so that this grey or white is not predominant there. Farrier's Dict.

RUBICUND.† adj. [rubicunde, French; rubicundus, Lat.] Inclining to redness.

RUBIED.† adj. [from ruby.] Red as a ruby.

The rubied cherry. Shakespeare, Pericles.

Thrice upon thy finger's tip,
Thrice upon thy rubied lip. Milton, Comus.

Rubied nectar flows
In pearl, in diamond, and in massy gold. Milton, P. L.

*RUBIFICATION. n. s. [from ruber and facio, Lat.] Act of making red: a term of chymistry.

Dealbation, rubication, and fixation. Hovell, Lett. ii. 42.

RUBIFIC. adj. [ruber and facio, Latin.] Making red.

While the several species of rays, as the rubific, are by refraction separated one from another, they retain those motions proper to each. Grew, Cosmol.

RUBIFORM. adj. [ruber, Lat. and form.] Having the form of red.

Of those rays, which pass close by the snow, the rubiform will be the least refracted; and so come to the eye in the directest lines. Newton, Opt.

TO RUBIFY.† v. a. To make red. Originally a chemical term.

Waters rubifying, Chaucer, Chan. Yeom. Tale.
This topically applied, becomes a phænigmus or rubifying medicine, and of such fiery parts as to conceive fire of themselves, and burn a house.

RUBIOUS. adj. [rubescens, Lat.] Ruddy; red. Not used.

Diana's lip

Is not more smooth and rubious.

Shakespeare, Tw. Night.

RUBRICAL.* adj. [from rubrica, Lat.]

1. Red.

A man would think you had eaten over-liberally of Esau's red porridge, and from thence dream continually of blushing; — that you thus persecute ingenious men all over your book with this one overtured rubrical conceit still of blushing.

Milton, Animado. Rem. Defence.

2. Placed in rubrics.

As the singing-psalms were never a part of our liturgy, no rubrical directions are any where given for the manner of performing them.

Watson, Hist. E. P. iii. 199.

TO RUBRICATE.* v. a. [rubricatus, Lat.]

Dr. Johnson merely notices rubricated as an adjective, (as Ash has after him,) without any example; but it is an old verb, hitherto unnoticed; To distinguish or mark with red.

RUBRICATE.* part. adj. [rubricatus, Lat.] Marked with red.

Other festivals I enquire not after, that stand rubricate in old calendars. Spelman.

RUBRICK.† n. s. [rubrique, Fr. rubrica, Lat.] The earliest example of our word, given by Dr. Johnson, is from Milton. It occurs in Sylvester's Du Bartas, 1621, among other hard words (as they were then considered) requiring explanation. Directions printed in books of law and in prayer books; so termed, because they were originally distinguished by being in red ink.

No date prefix'd,

Directs me in the starry rubrick set. Milton, P. R.

They had their particular prayers according to the several days and months; and their tables or rubrics to instruct them. Stillingfleet.

The rubrick and the rules relating to the liturgy are established by royal authority, as well as the liturgy itself. Nelson.

RUBRICK. adj. Red.

The light and rays, which appear red, or rather make objects appear so, I call rubrick or red-making. Newton.

What though my name stood rubrick on the walls? Pope.

TO RUBRICK. v. a. [from the noun.] To adorn with red.

RUB'Y.† n. s. [rubī, rubis, old Fr. from rubens, Lat.]

1. A precious stone of a red colour, next in hardness and value to a diamond.

Up, up, fair bride! and call

Thy stars from out their several boxes, take Thy rubies, pearls, and diamonds forth, and make Thyself a constellation of them all. Donne.

Melpomene would be represented like a manly lady, upon her head a dressing of pearl, diamonds, and rubies. Peccham.

Crowns were on their royal scutcheons plac'd,
With sapphires, diamonds, and with rubies grac'd.
Dryden.

2. Redness.

You can behold such sights,
And keep the natural ruby of your cheeks,
When mine is blanch'd with fear. Shaks. Macbeth.

3. Any thing red.

Desire of wine
Thou could'st not repress, nor did the dancing ruby
Sparkling, out-pour'd, the flavour, or the smell,
Or taste, that cheers the hearts of gods and men,
Allure thee from the cool crystalline stream.
Milton, S. A.

4. A blain; a blotch; a carbuncle. This is a very old acceptance of the word.

To take away red rubies that growe in the face by reason of the heate of the liver.

TO RUD. v. a. [pubu, Sax. redness.] To make red. Obsolete.

Her cheeks, like apples, which the sun had *rudde*d.

Spenser.

RUD'DER.† n. s. [roeder, Teut. roder, Su. Goth. ruder, Germ. Our old word was both roder and rother. "The ship of love has lost his rother." Gower, Conf. Am. B. 2. "Roder, or stern of a ship," Huloet.]

1. The instrument at the stern of a vessel, by which its course is governed.

My heart was to thy rudder ty'd by the string,
And thou should'st tow me after. Shakespeare.

They loosed the rudder bands, and hoised up the main-sail, and made toward shore.

Acts, xxvii. 40.

Those, that attribute unto the faculty any first or sole power, hath therein no other understanding, than such a one hath, who, looking into the stern of a ship, and finding it guided by the helm and rudder, doth ascribe some absolute virtue to the piece of wood, without all consideration of the hand that guides it. Raleigh, Hist. of the World.

Fishes first to shipping did impart;

Their tail the rudder, and their head the prow.

Dryden.

Thou held'st the rudder with a steady hand
Till safely on the shore the bark did land.

Dryden.

2. Any thing that guides or governs the course.

For rhyme the rudder is of verses. Hudibras.

RUD'DINESS. n. s. [from ruddy.] The quality of approaching to redness.

The rudness upon her lip is wet;

You'll mar it if you kiss it. Shaks. Wint. Tale.

If the flesh lose its rudness, and look pale and withered, you may suspect it corrupting.

Wiseman, Surgery.

RUD'DLE. n. s. [rudul, Icelandick.] Red earth.

Ruddle owes its colour to an admixture of iron; and as that is in greater or less proportion, it is of a greater or less specifick gravity, consistence, or hardness. Woodward.

RUD'DLEMAN.* n. s. One who is employed in digging rudde or red earth.

Besmeared like a *rudde*man, a gypsy, or a chimney-sweeper. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 470.

RUD'DOCK.† n. s. [pubuc, Sax. from pube or poeb, red. Chaucer has mentioned this bird.] A red-breast.

RUDIMENT. n. s. [rudiment, Fr. rudimentum, Latin.]

1. The first principles; the first elements of a science.

Such as were trained up in the rudiments, and were so made fit to be by baptism received into the church, the fathers usually term bearers. Hooker.

To learn the order of my fingering,
I must begin with rudiments of art. Shakespeare.
Thou soon shalt quit

Those rudiments, and see before thine eyes
The monarchies of th' earth, their pomp, and state, Sufficient introduction to inform

Thee, of thyself so apt, in regal arts. Milton, P. R.
Could it be believed, that a child should be forced to learn the rudiments of a language, which he is never to use, and neglect the writing a good hand, and casting accounts? Locke.

2. The first part of education.

He was nurtured where he was born in his first rudiments, till the years of ten, and then taught the principles of music.

German. Anciently, rewen. Wicliffe, and Chaucer.] To grieve for; to regret; to lament.

Thou temptest me in vain;
To tempt the thing which daily yet I rue,
And the old cause of my continued pain,
With like attempts to like end to renew. Spenser.

You'll rue the time,
That clogs me with this answer. Shakespeare.
France, thou shalt rue this treason with thy tears,
If Talbot but survive. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.
Oh! treacherous was that breast, to whom you
Did trust our counsels, and we both may rue,
Having his falsehood found too late, 'twas he
That made me cast you guilty, and you me.

Donne.

Thy will
Chose freely what it now so justly rue.

Milton, P. L.
The consequent appendant miseries of sin are studiously kept from the sinner's notice; his eye must not see what his heart will certainly rue.

South, Serm. x. 339.

TO RUE* v. n. To have compassion. See
RUTH.

I pray you, that ye wil reue on me.

Chaucer, Mill. Tale.
Full many a one for me deepe groan'd and sigh'd,

And to the dore of death for sorrow drew,
Complaining out on me that would not on them
reue. Spenser, F. Q. vi. viii. 20.

RUE* n. s. [heopeo, Sax. repentance.]

Sorrow; repentance.

Rue, even for ruth, here shortly shall be seen,
In the remembrance of a weeping queen.

Shakespeare, Rich. II.

My marriage day chas'd joy away;

For I have found it true,

That bed which did all joys display

Became a bed of rue. Broilwaite, Shep. Tales.

RUE† n. s. [rue, Fr. pruë, Gr. ruta, Lat.
pube, Sax.] An herb, called herb of grace, because holy water was sprinkled with it. Miller. — Dr. Johnson, and the commentators on Shakespeare disputing upon this title of herb of grace, have overlooked Jeremy Taylor's notice of it: "They [the Romish exorcists] are to try the devil by holy water, incense, sulphur, rue, which from thence, as we suppose, came to be called herb of grace." Diss. from Popery, c. 2. § 10.

What savor is better,
For places infected, than wormwood and rue?
Tusser.

Here did she drop a tear; here, in this place,
I'll set a bank of rue, sour herb of grace.
Shakespeare, Rich. II.

The vessel, to encounter the serpent, arms herself with eating of rue. More, Ant. against Atheism.

RUEFUL.† adj. [from rue and full.] Mournful; woeful; sorrowful.

When we have our armour buckled on,
The venom'd vengeance ride upon our swords,
Spur them to rueful work, rein them from ruth.
Shakespeare.

Behold, looke, if ever you saw the like rueful spectacle!
By. Andrews, Serm. on the Passion.

Cocytus, nam'd of lamentation loud,
Heard on the rueful stream. Milton, P. L.

He sigh'd, and cast a rueful eye;
Our pity kindles, and our passions die. Dryden.

RUEFULLY. adv. [from rueful.] Mournfully; sorrowfully.

Why should an ape run away from a snail, and very ruefully and frightfully look back, as being afraid?
More.

RUEFULNESS.† n. s. [from rueful.] Sorrowfulness; mournfulness.

For he was false, and fraught with fickleness,
And learned had to love with secret looks,
And well could dance, and sing with ruefulness.
Spenser, F. Q.

RUEING.* n. s. [from rue.] Lamentation.

I pray God this sudden riches make not again a long repentance, this sudden joy a long rueing.
Sir T. Smith, Orat. for Q. Eliz. Marrying.

RUELE. n. s. [French.] A circle; an assembly at a private house. Not used.

The poet, who flourished in the scene, is condemned in the ruele. Dryden, Pref. to Æn.

RUFF.† n. s.

1. A puckered linen ornament, formerly worn about the neck. See RUFFLE.

You a captain; for what? for tearing a whore's ruff in a bawdy house? Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

We'll revel it,
With ruffs, and cuffs, and fardingals. Shakespeare.

Like an uproar in the town,
Before them every thing went down,
Some tore a ruff, and some a gown. Dryden.

Sooner may a gulling weather spy,
By drawing forth heaven's scheme tell certainly,
What fashion'd hats, or ruffs, or suits next year,
Our giddy-headed antick youth will wear. Donne.

The ladies freed the neck from those yokes, those linen ruffs in which the simplicity of their grandmothers had enclosed it. Addison, Guardian.

2. Any thing collected into puckers or corrugations.

I rear'd this flower,
Soft on the paper ruff its leaves I spread. Pope.

3. [From rough scales.] A small river fish.

A ruff or poise is much like the perch for shape, and taken to be better, but will not grow bigger than a gudgeon; he is an excellent fish, and of a pleasant taste. Walton.

4. A state of roughness. Obsolete.

As fields set all their bristles up; in such a ruff wert thou. Chapman, Iliad.

5. New state. This seems to be the meaning of this cant word, unless it be contracted from ruffle.

How many princes that, in the ruff of all their glory, have been taken down from the head of a conquering army to the wheel of the victor's chariot!
L'Estrange.

6. A bird of the tringa species, still considered in several parts of England as a great dainty.

Of partridge, pheasant, woodcock, of which some may yet be there; and godwit, if we can, Knut, rail, and ruff too. B. Jonson, Epig.

7. A particular kind of pigeon.

8. At cards, the act of winning the trick by trumping cards of another suit. [ronfle, Fr.] See Cotgrave and Sherwood.

To RUFF.* v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To ruffle; to disorder.

The feather in her lofty crest,
Ruffed of Love, gan lowly to avale. Spenser, F. Q.

The bird, ruffing his fethers wyde. Spenser, F. Q.

2. To trump any other suit of the cards at whist.

RUFFIAN.† n. s. [ruffiano, Italian; ruffien, Fr. a bawd; ruffeuer, Danish, to pilage; perhaps it may be best derived from the old Teutonic word which we now write rough. Dr. Johnson. — Serenius and Dr. Jamieson consider rofua, Su. Goth. to rob, as the original. The Scottish word is ruffie: our word, in its elder form, ruffin, or rouffin. Some have thought it formed from the word ruff; the bullies and swaggerers of old time wearing enormous ruffs: to whose mode of dress our ancient books often allude.

"A ruffian will have more in his ruff and hose, than he should spend in a year."

Bp. Pilkington, Expos. of Haggai, 1559.

"They set them out wyth sumptuous and gorgeous apparell, — sometyme lyke ruffjns, but seldome like honest folckes." Woolton, Chr. Manual, 1576. The ruffian thus seems to have been, at first, a kind of coxcomb, swaggerer, or bully; a ruffler. "Their youthful and ruffjns' tricks." Woolton, ut supra.] A brutal, boisterous, mischievous fellow; a cut-throat; a robber; a murderer.

Have you a ruffian that will swear? drink? dance?

Revel the night? rob? murder? Shaks. Hen. IV.

Every fidler sings libels openly; and each man is ready to challenge the freedom of David's ruffians. "Our tongues are our own, who shall control us?"

Bp. Hall, Fashions of the World.

The boasted ancestors of these great men, whose virtues you admire, were all such ruffians, This dread of nations, this almighty Rome, That comprehends in her wide empire's bounds All under heaven, was founded on a rape. Addison, Cato.

RUFFIAN.† adj. Brutal; savagely boisterous.

Should'st thou but hear I were licentious,
And that this body, consecrate to thee,
By ruffian lust should be contaminate,
Would'st thou not spit at me?

Shakespeare, Com. of Err.

Experienc'd age
May timely intercept the ruffian rage;
Convene the tribes. Pope, Odys.

To RUFFIAN. v. n. [from the noun.] To rage; to raise tumult; to play the ruffian. Not used.

A fuller blast ne'er shook our battlements;
If it hath ruffian'd so upon the sea,
What ribs of oak, when mountains melt upon them,
Can hold the mortise? Shakspeare, Othello.

RUFFIANLIKE.*† adj. [ruffien and like.] RUFFIANLY. } Like a ruffian; dissolute; licentious; brutal.

To omit this ruffianlike railing and whorish scolding.

Fulke, Ans. to P. Frarine, (1580), p. 54.

Sir Ralph Vane's bold answers, termed rude and ruffianlike, falling into ears apt to take offence, furthered his condemnation. Haywood.

Misconstrue me not as one that affects to be a patron of ruffianly and dissolute fashions.

Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 241.

To RUFFLE.† v. a. [ruffelen, Teut. to wrinkle, to rivel. Kilian. Serenius adds ruffla, circumspargere. Dalec. ant.]

1. To disorder; to put out of form; to make less smooth.

Naughty lady,
These hairs, which thou dost ravish from my chin,
Will quicken and accuse thee; I'm your host;
With robbers' hands, my hospitable favour
You should not ruffle thus. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Not one flower of their crowns was blasted;
no, not one hair of their heads ruffled.

Proceed, against Garnet, &c. (1606), Hh. 4. b.

In changeable taffeties, differing colours emerge and vanish upon the ruffling of the same piece of silk. Boyle.

As she first began to rise,
She smooth'd the ruffled seas, and clear'd the skies. Dryden.

Bear me, some god! oh quickly bear me hence
To wholesome solitude, the nurse of sense;
Where contemplation prunes her ruffled wings,
And the free soul looks down at pitted kings. Pope.

2. To discompose; to disturb; to put out of temper.

Were I Brutus,
And Brutus Antony, there were an Antony
Would ruffle up your spirits, and put a tongue
In every wound of Caesar, that should move
The stones of Rome to rise and mutiny. Shakspeare.

We are transported by passions, and our minds ruffled by the disorders of the body; nor yet can we tell, how the soul should be affected by such kind of agitations. Glanville.

3. To put out of order; to surprise.

The knight found out
The advantage of the ground, where best
He might the ruffled foe infect. Hudibras.

4. To throw disorderly together.

Within a thicket I repos'd, when round
I ruffled up fall'n leaves in heap, and found,
Let fall from heaven, a sleep interminate. Chapman.

5. To contract into plaits.

A small skirt of fine ruffled linen, running along the upper part of the stays before, is called the modesty-piece. Addison.

To RUFFLE.† v. n.

1. To grow rough or turbulent.

The night comes on, and the high winds
Do sorely ruffle; for many miles about
There's scarce a bush. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

As we find the ruffling winds to be commonly in cemeteries, and about churches; so the eagerest and most sanguinary wars are about religion. Howell, Lett. iv. 29.

The rising winds a ruffling gale afford. Dryden.

2. To be in loose motion; to flutter.

One spendeth his patrimony upon pounces and cuts; another bestoweth more on a dancing shirt than might suffice him to buy honest and comely apparel for his whole body. Some hang their revenues about their necks, ruffling in their ruffs; and many one jeopardeth his best joint to maintain himself in sumptuous rayment.

Homily against Excess of Apparel.

The fiery courier, when he hears from far
The brightly trumpets and the shouts of war,
On his right shoulder his thick mane reclin'd,
Ruffles at speed, and dances in the wind. Dryden.

3. To be rough; to jar; to be in contention. Out of use.

A valiant son-in-law thou shalt enjoy;
One fit to bandy with thy lawless sons,
To ruffle in the commonwealth of Rome.

Titus Andron.

They would ruffle with jurors, and inforce them to find as they would direct. Bacon, Hen. VII.

RUFFLE.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Plaited linen used as an ornament.

The tucker is a slip of fine linen, run in a small ruffle round the uppermost verge of the women's stays. Addison.

2. Disturbance; contention; tumult.

A blusterer, that the ruffle knew
Of court, of city. Shakespeare, Lover's Complaint.
Conceive the mind's perception of some object,
and the consequent ruffle or commotion of the blood. Watts.

3. A kind of flourish upon a drum; a military count of respect.

RUFFLER.* n. s. [from ruffle.] A swaggerer; a bully; a boisterous fellow. Obsolete. In the Interlude of New Custome, published in 1573, cruelty and avarice are personified, and called rufflers.

The ranke rable of Romysch rufflers.

Bale, Yet a Course, fol. 56.

RUFFLING.* n. s. [from ruffle.] Commotion; disturbance. Obsolete. Barret.

With great trouble and business, with great stir and ruffling. Barret, in V. Trouble, Aliv. (1580.)

RUFTHOOD. n. s. In falconry, a hood to be worn by a hawk when she is first drawn. Bailey.

RUG.† n. s. [ruggig, rough, Swedish. Dr. Johnson. — Mr. Horne Tooke says that it is the Sax. poc, indumentum, and the past participle of puzan, to cover; the characteristic i, as usual, being changed into oo and u. Div. of Purl. ii. 229. The Saxon poc is also hircinum vel equinum indumentum; and the Goth. rock, toga, has been derived by Stadenius from rauh, rough, hairy, as the skins of beasts; as rug is by Serenius from the Icel. ru, vellus, caesaries, wool, hair. The Finlanders, Mr. Callander has observed, call a furred gown roucka; and the bed-coverings they use, made of sheep-skins, are named roucat; whence, he says, our rug.]

1. A coarse, nappy, woollen cloth.

January must be expressed with a horrid and fearful aspect, clad in Irish rug or coarse frieze.

Peacham on Drawing.

The vuugus resembleth a goat, but greater and more profitable; of the fleece whereof they make rugs, coverings, and stuffs. Heylin.

2. A coarse, nappy coverlet used for mean beds.

She covered him with a mantle, [in the margin, rug or blanket.] Judges, iv. 18.

A rug was o'er his shoulders thrown;

A rug; for night-gown he had none. Swift, Miscell.

3. A rough woolly dog. Not used.

Mungrels, spaniels, curs,
Shoughes, water rugs, and demy wolves are cleped
All by the name of dogs. Shakespeare, Mac.

RUG-GOWNED.* adj. [rug and gown.]
Wearing a coarse or rough gown.

I had rather meet

An enemy in the field, than stand thus nodding
Like to a rug-gown'd watchman.

Beaum. and Fl. Prophetess.

RUGGED.† adj. [ruggig, Swedish; rugneux, old Fr. See also ROUGH, and rugue. Originally our word was ruggy. "Ruggy hairs." Chaucer, Kn. Tale.]

1. Rough; full of unevenness and asperity. Nature, like a weak and weary traveller, Tir'd with a tedious and rugged way. Denham. Since the earth revolves not upon a material and rugged, but a geometrical plane, their proportions may be varied in innumerable degrees. Bentley.

2. Not neat; not regular; uneven.

His hair is sticking;

His well-proportion'd beard made rough and rugged,

Like to the summer's corn by tempest lodg'd.

Shakespeare.

3. Savage of temper; brutal; rough.

The greatest favours to such an one neither soften nor win upon him; neither melt nor endear him, but leave him as hard, rugged, and unconcerned as ever. South.

4. Stormy; rude; tumultuous; turbulent; tempestuous.

Now bind my brows with iron, and approach
The rugged'st hour that time and spite dare bring,
To frown upon th' enraged Northumberland.

Shakespeare.

He finds, instead of soft lawns and shady thickets, nothing more than uncultivated ruggedness.

Johnson, Journ. West. Islands.

2. Roughness; asperity.

Hardness and ruggedness is unpleasant to the touch. Bacon.

Syrups immediately abate and demulce the hoarseness and violence of a cough, by mollifying the ruggedness of the intern tunick of the gullet. Harvey.

This softness of the foot, which yields and fits itself to the ruggedness and unevenness of the roads, does render it less capable of being worn. Ray on the Creation.

3. Roughness; rudeness; coarseness of behaviour.

They that of that soft sex, with whom I have conversed, have accused me of too great severity and ruggedness towards them.

Mayne, Answ. to Chymel, (1647,) p. 27.

I had no inclination to a wife who had the ruggedness of a man without his force, and the ignorance of a woman without her softness.

Johnson, Ramb. No. 115.

The northern Europe, until some parts of it were subdued by the progress of the Roman arms, remained almost equally covered with the ruggedness of primitive barbarism.

Burke, Abridg. Eng. Hist. B. i. ch. 1.

RUGIN. n. s. A nappy cloth.

The lips grew so painful, that she could not endure the wiping the ichor from it with a soft rugin with her own hand. Wiseman, Surgery.

RUIN. n. s. [ruine, Fr. ruina, Lat.]

1. The fall or destruction of cities or edifices.

Loud rung the ruin, and with boisterous fear,
Strait revell'd in the queen's amazed ear.

Beaumont, Psyche.

2. The remains of building demolished.

The Veian and the Gavian towers shall fall,
And one promiscuous ruin cover all;
Nor, after length of years, a stone betray
The place where once the very ruins lay. Addison.
Judah shall fall, oppress'd by grief and shame,
And men shall from her ruins know her fame. Prior.

Such a fool was never found,
Who pull'd a palace to the ground,
Only to have the ruins made

Materials for a house decay'd. Swift.

3. Destruction; loss of happiness or fortune; overthrow.

He parted frowning from me, as if ruin
Leapt from his eyes. Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

Those whom God to ruin has design'd,
He fits for fate, and first destroys their mind. Dryden.

4. Mischief; bane.

The errors of young men are the ruin of business. Bacon.

Havock, and spoil, and ruin are my gain. Milton, P. L.

To RUIN. v. a. [ruiner, Fr. from the noun.]

1. To subvert; to demolish.

A nation loving gold must rule this place,
Our temples ruin, and our rites deface. Dryden.

2. To destroy; to deprive of felicity or fortune.

By thee rais'd, I ruin all my foes.

Milton, P. L.

Dispose all honours of the sword and gown,
Grace with a nod, and ruin with a frown. Dryden.
A confident dependence ill-grounded craves such a negligence, as will certainly ruin us in the end. Wake.

3. To impoverish.

She would ruin me in silks, were not the quantity that goes to a large pincushion sufficient to make her a gown and petticoat. Addison.

To RUIN. v. n.

1. To fall in ruins.

Hell heard the unsufferable noise, hell saw
Heaven ruining from heav'n, and would have fled Afrighted, but strict fate had fix'd too deep
Her dark foundations, and too fast had bound.

Milton, P. L.

2. To run to ruin; to dilapidate.

Though he his house of polish'd marble build,
Yet shall it ruin like the moth's frail cell,
Or sheds of reeds, which summer's heat repel.

Sandys.

3. To be brought to poverty or misery.

If we are idle, and disturb the industrious in their business, we shall ruin the faster.

Locke.

To RU'INATE.† v. a. [from ruin.] This word is now obsolete. Dr. Johnson.—
Ruinated, according to Mr. Pegge, is the usual word of a Londoner for ruined.
Anecd. of the Eng. Lang. 2d ed. p. 69.
But it is a common northern word. See
Craven Dialect, and Brockett's N. C.
Words. Nor is it, as applied to a building in the sense of decayed, obsolete.]

1. To subvert; to demolish.

I will not ruinate my father's house,
Who gave his blood to lime the stones together,
And set up Lancaster.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

What offence of such impie-ty Hath Priam or his sonnes done thee? that with so high a hate

Thou should'st thus ceaselessly desire to raze and ruinate

So well a builded town as Troy?

Chapman.

We'll order well the state,
That like events may ne'er it ruinate.

Shaks.

He built the ruinated priory, adorned with the arms of his friends.

Graves, Recollect. of Shenstone, (1788,) p. 69.

2. To bring to meanness or misery irrecoverable.

The Romans came to pull down kingdoms;
Philip and Nabis were already ruinated, and now was his turn to be assailed.

Bacon, War with Spain.

ruiners of the church.

Milton, Anim. Rem. Defence.

RU'INOUS. adj. [ruinosus, Lat. ruinosus, Fr.]

1. Fallen to ruin; dilapidated; demolished.

It is less dangerous, when divers parts of a tower are decayed, and the foundation firm, than when the foundation is ruinous.

Hayward.

2. Mischievous; pernicious; baneful; destructive.

The birds,
After a night of storm so ruinous,
Clear'd up their choicest notes in bush and spray,
To gratulate the sweet return of morn.

Milton, P. R.

Those successes are more glorious, which bring benefit to the world, than such ruinous ones, as are dyed in human blood.

Glanville, Pref.

A stop might be put to that ruinous practice of gaming.

Swift.

RU'INOUSLY.† adv. [from ruinous.]

RU'INOUSNESS.* n. s. [from ruin.] A ruinous state.

Scott.

RULE.† n. s. [old Fr. regle; Saxon, pegol, pegul; Lat. regula.]

1. Government; empire; sway; supreme command.

I am asham'd, that women
Should seek for rule, supremacy, or sway,
When they are bound to serve, love, and obey.

Shakespeare.

May he live
Ever below'd, and loving may his rule be! Shaks.

A wise servant shall have rule over a son that cauteh shame.

Prov. xvii. 2.

Adam's sin did not deprive him of his rule, but left the creatures to a relictation.

Bacon.

There being no law of nature nor positive law of God, that determines which is the positive heir, the right of succession, and consequently of bearing rule, could not have been determined.

Locke.

This makes them apprehensive of every tendency, to endanger that form of rule established by the law of their country.

Addison, Freeholder.

Instruct me whence this uproar;
And wherefore Vaneoe, the sworn friend to Rome,
Should spurn against our rule, and stir

The tributary provinces to war? A. Philips, Briton.

Seven years the traitor rich Mycenæ sway'd;
And his stern rule the groaning land obey'd.

Pope.

2. An instrument by which lines are drawn.

Or, if your influence be quite damm'd up
With black usurping mists, some gentle taper,
Though a rush-candle from the wicker hole
Of some clay habitation, visit us
With thy long-levell'd rule of streaming light!

Milton, Comus.

A judicious artist will use his eye, but he will trust only to his rule.

South, Serm.

3. Canon; precept by which the thoughts or actions are directed.

He laid this rule before him, which proved of great use; never to trouble himself with the foresight of future events.

Fell, Life of Hammond.

This little treatise will furnish you with infallible rules of judging truly.

Dryden, Dufresnoy.

Know'st with an equal hand to hold the scale;
See'st where the reasons pinch, and where they fail,

Dryden.

And where exceptions o'er the general rule prevail.

We profess to have embraced a religion, which contains the most exact rules for the government of our lives.

Tillotson.

We owe to Christianity the discovery of the most certain and perfect rule of life.

Tillotson.

A rule that relates even to the smallest part of our life, is of great benefit to us, merely as it is a rule.

Law.

4. Regularity; propriety of behaviour.

Not in use.
Some say he's mad; others, that lesser hate him,
Do call it valiant fury; but for certain,
He cannot buckle his distemper'd cause

Shaks. Macbeth.

Within the belt of rule.

To RULE.† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To govern; to control; to manage with power and authority.

It is a purpos'd thing
To curb the belt of the nobility;
Suffer it, and live with such as cannot rule,
Nor ever will be ru'd.

Shaks. Coriol.

Marg'ret shall now be queen, and rule the king
But I will rule both her, the king, and realm.

Shakespeare.

A greater power now ru'd him. Milton, P. L.
Rome! 'tis thine alone with awful sway,
To rule mankind, and make the world obey,
Disposing peace and war thy own majestic way.

Dryden.

2. To manage; to conduct.

He sought to take unto him the ruing of the affairs.

1 Mac.

3. To settle as by a rule.

Had he done it with the pope's licence, his adversaries must have been silent; for that's a ruled case with the schoolmen.

Atterbury.

4. To mark with lines: as ruled paper, ruled parchment.

Barret, Alv. (1580.)
To RULE. v. n. To have power or command: with over.

Judah yet ruleth with God, and is faithful with the saints.

Hos. xi. 12.

Thrice happy men! whom God hath thus advane'd!

Created in his image, there to dwell,
And worship him; and in reward to rule

Over his works.

Milton, P. L.

We subdue and rule over all other creatures;
and use for our own behoof those qualities wherein they excel.

Ray.

He can have no divine right to my obedience, who cannot shew his divine right to the power of ruing over me.

Locke.

RU'LER. n. s. [from rule.]

1. Governour; one that has the supreme command.

as opposed to unruly; and is old in the language. Cotgrave and Sherwood both have it.

RUM.† n. s.

1. A country parson, Dr. Johnson says; calling it a cant word, and citing the verses of Swift in proof of his definition. Swift has elsewhere applied it in a similar manner. But the general meaning is a queer or old-fashioned person; transferred also to things, as to an old book. See also the adjective RUM.

I'm grown a mere mopus; no company comes,
But a rabble of tenants and rusty dull *rum*s.

Swift.

You're a rare rum, [to Dr. Mills.]

Swift in Sheridan's Life.

The books which booksellers call *rum*s, appear to be very numerous.

Nichols's Liter. Anecd. v. 471.

2. A kind of spirits distilled from molasses.
I know not how derived. Roemer in Dutch is a drinking glass. Dr. Johnson.—Rum is the name it bears among the native Americans. Chambers.

RUM.* adj. Old-fashioned; odd; queer.
A cant term.

Law, Locke, and Newton, and all the rum race; That talk of their modes, their ellipses, and space!

The Lounger in the Student, vol. 2. p. 279.
I have heard—that the expression rum books arose from Osborne's sending large assortments of unsaleable works to Jamaica in exchange for rum. But I believe this etymology is erroneous. See a large number of words connected with rum in N. Bailey's Collection of Canting Words and Terms.

Nichols's Liter. Anecd. v. 471.

To RUMBLE.† v. n. [rommelen, Teut. rommelen, old Fr. rombolare, Ital. ramla, Su. Goth. Serenus derives the last from the Icel. rymber, murmur. Dr. Jamieson considers it as a diminutive from the Su. Goth. raama, to roar.] To make a hoarse low continued noise.

The trembling streams, which wont in channels clear

To rumble gently down with murmur soft,
And were by them right tuneless taught to bear
A base's part amongst their consorts oft,
Now forc'd to overflow with brackish tears,
With troublous noise did dull their dainty ears.

Spenser.

Rumble thy belly full, spit fire, spout rain;
Nor rain, wind, thunder, fire are my daughters;
I tax not you, you elements, with unkindness.

Shakespeare.

Our courtier thinks that he's prefer'd, whom every man envies;

When love so rumbles in his pate, no sleep comes in his eyes.

Suckling.

The fire she fann'd, with greater fury burn'd,
Rumbling within.

Dryden.

Th' included vapours, that in caverns dwell,
Lab'ring with colic pangs, and close confin'd,
In vain sought issue from the rumbling wind.

Dryden.

On a sudden there was heard a most dreadful rumbling noise within the entrails of the machine, after which the mountain burst.

Addison.

Johnson.—Perhaps from raum, room, space. Germ. and Sax. Hence perhaps the word in the form of romage. Philips says, it is originally a sea term, and properly signifies “to remove goods or luggage out of a ship's hold.” As in order to this, Mr. Malone has added,

“they must be searched for and tumbled about, hence the word came to signify to search, to tumble about, in which last sense it is used by women.” To search;

to evacuate.

Our greedy seamen rummage every hold,
Smile on the booty of each wealthier chest.

Dryden.

rusticated for ever. Spectator.

RUSTICATION.* n. s. [rustication, Fr. from rusticate.] A dwelling in the country.
The word is old, being in Cockeram's vocabulary. Later usage of it implies a kind of exile into the country.

I was afraid that her resolution would sink under the sudden transition from a town life to such a melancholy state of rustication. Smallett.

RUSTICITY. n. s. [rusticité, Fr. rusticitas, from rusticus, Lat.]

1. Qualities of one that lives in the country; simplicity; artlessness; rudeness; savageness.

There presented himself a tall, clownish young man, who, falling before the queen of the fairies, desired that he might have the achievement of any adventure, which, during the feast, might happen;

that being granted, he rested him on the floor, unfit for a better place by his rusticity. Spenser.

The sweetness and rusticity of a pastoral cannot be so well express in any other tongue as in the Greek, when rightly mixt with the Dorick dialect.

Addison.

This so general expence of their time would curtail the ordinary means of knowledge, as 'twould shorten the opportunities of vice; and so accordingly an universal rusticity presently took place, and stopped not till it had over-run the whole stock of mankind.

Woodward, Nat. Hist.

2. Rural appearance.

Ru'stick. adj. [rusticus, Lat. rustique, Fr.]

1. Rural; country.

By Lelius willing missing was the odds of the Iberian side, and continued so in the next by the excellent running of a knight, though fostered so by the muses, as many times the very rustick people left both their delights and profits to hearken to his songs.

Sidney.

2. Rude; untaught; inelegant.

An ignorant clown cannot learn fine language or a courtly behaviour, when his rustick airs have grown up with him till the age of forty.

Watts, Logick.

3. Brutal; savage.

My soul foreboded I should find the bower Of some fell monster, fierce with barbarous power; Some rustick wretch, who liv'd in heav'n's despatch, Contemning laws, and trampling on the right.

Pope.

4. Artless; honest; simple.

5. Plain; unadorned.

An altar stood, rustick, of grassy sord.

Milton, P. L.

With unguents smooth the polish'd marble shone,

Where ancient Neleus sat, a rustick throne. Pope.

Ru'stick. † n. s.

1. A clown; a swain; an inhabitant of the country.

As nothing is so rude and insolent as a wealthy rustick, all this his kindness is overlooked, and his person most unworthily rail'd at.

South.

2. Rude sort of masonry, in imitation of simple nature, not according to rules of art.

Clap four slices of pilaster on't, That laid with bits of rustick makes a front. Pope.

Ru'stily.* adv. [from rusty.] In a rusty state.

Their armour they should make look so rustily, and ill-favour'dly, as might well become such wearers.

Sidney, Arcad. b. 1.

Ru'stiness. n. s. [from rusty.] The state of being rusty.

To Ru'sTLE. † v. n. [hprɪtlan, Sax. crepitare. "Factum crediderim a Suio-Goth. hrista, rīsta, quater, usurpatumque primum ab exprimendum sonum ab armis concussis factum." Serenius.] To make a low continued rattle; to make a quick succession of small noises.

He is coming; I hear the straw rustle. Shaks.

This life

Is nobler than attending for a check; Richer, than doing nothing for a bauble; Prouder, than rustling in unpaid-for silk. Shaksp.

Thick swarm'd, both on the ground, and in the air

Brush'd with the hiss of rustling wings. Milton.

As when we see the winged winds engage, Rustling from every quarter of the sky,

North, east, and west, in airy swiftness vy.

Granville.

All begin the attack; Fans clap, silks rustle, and tough whalebones crack.

Pope.

Not less their number than the milk-white swans,

That o'er the winding of Cyaster's springs, Stretch their long necks, and clap their rustling wings.

Pope.

Ru'sTLING.* n. s. [from rustle.] A quick succession of small noises.

Let not the creaking of shoes, nor the rustling of silks, betray thy poor heart to women.

Shaks. K. Lear.

Ru'sTY.* adj. [from rust.]

1. Covered with rust; infected with rust. After a long calm of peace, he was left engaged in a war with a rusty sword and empty purse.

Howell.

Part scour the rusty shields with seam, and part New grind the blunted axe.

Dryden, En.

2. Impaired by inactivity.

Hector, in his dull and long continued truce, Is rusty grown.

Shaks. Tr. and Cres.

3. Surly; morose.

There was a guard by St. Giles's of rusty ruffians, kept by lord Lovelace's order; they made a great clutter.

Diary of Hen. E. of Clarendon, (in 1689.)

Old Iron, why so rusty? will you never leave your innuendoes?

Guardian, No. 160.

4. Rancid; a corruption of reasty. See REASTY.

RuT. † n. s. [ruīt, rut, Fr. rugitus, Latin. Roquefort. From rauta, ryta, Su. Goth. rugire. Serenius.]

1. Copulation of deer.

The time of going to rut of deer is in September; for that they need the whole summer's feed to make them fit for generation; and if rain come about the middle of September, they go to rut somewhat the sooner.

Bacon.

The ground hereof was the observation of this part in deer after immoderate venery, and about the end of their rut.

Brown.

2. [Route, Fr. ratta, Su. Goth. a path.] The track of a cart wheel.

Ainsworth.

From hills raine waters headlong fall, That allways eat huge ruts, which, met in one bed fill a vall

With such a confluence of streames, that on the mountaine grounds

Farre off, in frighted shepherds eares the bustling noise rebounds.

Chapman.

To RuT. v. n. [from the noun.] To desire to come together. Used of deer.

RUTH. n. s. [from rue.]

1. Mercy; pity; tenderness; sorrow for the misery of another. Out of use.

O wretch of guests, said he, thy tale hath stirred My mind to much ruth.

Chapman.

All ruth, compassion, mercy he forgot.

She fair, he full of bashfulness and truth Lov'd much, hop'd little, and desired naught;

He durst not speak, by suit to purchase ruth.

Fairfax.

The better part with Mary and with Ruth Chosen thou hast; and they that overween,

And at thy growing virtues fret their spleen, No anger find in thee, but pity and sorrow.

Miltons, Sonnet.

2. Misery; sorrow.

The weary Britons, whose war-hable youth Was by Maximian lately led away,

With wretched miseries and woful ruth, Were to those Pagans made an open prey.

Spenser.

Ru'THFUL. † adj. [ruth and full.]

1. Merciful; compassionate.

He [God] ruthful is to man.

Turberville, Ecl. 3.

2. Rueful; woful; sorrowful.

The inhabitants seldom take a ruthful and reaving experience of those harms, which infectious diseases carry with them. Cowen, Surv. of Cornwall.

What sad and ruthful faces!

Deacon, and Fl. Doub. Marriage.

Ru'THFULLY. adv. [from ruthful.]

1. Woful; sadly.

The flower of horse and foot, lost by the valour of the enemy, ruthfully perished.

Knolles, Hist. of the Turks.

2. Sorrowfully; mournfully.

Help me, ye baneful birds, whose shrieking sound

Is sign of dreary death, my deadly cries Most ruthfully to tune.

Spenser, Shep. Cal.

3. Wofully. In irony.

By this Minerva's friend bereft Oilleades of that rich bowl, and left his lips, nose, eyes, Ruthfully smear'd.

Chapman, Iliad.

Ru'THLESS. adj. [from ruth.] Cruel; pitiless; uncompassionate; barbarous.

What is Edward but a ruthless sea? What Clarence but a quicksand of deceit? Shaks.

The ruthless flint doth cut my tender feet; And when I start, the cruel people laugh. Shaks.

His archers circle me; my reins they wound, And ruthless shed my gall upon the ground.

Sandys.

Their rage the hostile powers restrain, All but the ruthless monarch of the main. Pope.

Ru'THLESSNESS. n. s. [from ruthless.] Want of pity.

Ru'THLESSLY. adv. [from ruthless.] Without pity; cruelly; barbarously.

Ru'TILANT.* adj. [rutilans, Lat.] Shining.

Coles.

Parchments—coloured with this rutilant mixture.

Evelyn, B. il. ch. 4. § 1.

To Ru'TILATE.* v. n. [rutilo, Lat.] To shine; to appear bright; and, actively, to make bright. Cockeram and Coles. Not in use.

Ru'TTER.* n. s. [ruyter, Teut. rüter, Germ. reître, old French.] A kind of horse-soldier; a rider; a trooper.

Neyther shall they be accompanied with a garde of ruffelynge rutters.

Bale on the Revel, P. II. (1550.)

The prince finding his rutters alert, (as the Italians say,) with advice of his valiant brother, sent his trumpets to the D. d'Alva.

Sir R. Williams, Act. of the L. Countr. (1618), p. 27.

The Flanders rutters, or cavaliers, who now by Magna Charta were expressly, and by name, ordered to be expelled the kingdom, as a nuisance to the realm.

Vindication of Magna Charta, (1704), p. 8.

Ru'TTERKIN.* n. s. A word of contempt.

Perhaps from the old Fr. routier, "one by long practice master of his profession, and in every part an old crafty fox, notable beguiler, ordinary deceiver." Cotgrave.

Such a rout of regular rutterskins, some bellowing in the quire, some muttering, and another sort jutting up and down, to wayte when my Ladie shall be readye to see a cast of theyr office!

Confut. of N. Shaxton, (1546), sign. G. vi.

Ru'TTIER. † n. s. [routiere, Fr.] A direction of the road, or of the course at sea; an old traveller well acquainted with most ways; an experienced soldier.

Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

Ru'TTISH. adj. [from rut.] Wanton; libidinous; salacious; lustful; lecherous.

That is an advertisement to one Diana, to take heed of the allurements of count Roussillon, a foolish idle boy; but for all that very rattish.
Shakspeare, All's Well.

RATTLE.* n. s. [perhaps from the Teut. rotelen, grunne, murmurare; or merely a variation of rattle.] Noise occasioned by difficulty in breathing; rattle in the throat.

The last agonies, the fixed eyes, and the dismal rattle, tell all those about the dying-bed, that he, who is in that plight, is now going to his home.
Burnet, Sermon. (1713.) p. 175.

RYE. n. s. [pýze, Sax.]

1. A coarse kind of bread corn.

Between the acres of the rye,
These pretty country folks would lye. Shakspeare.
Rye is more acrid, laxative, and less nourishing than wheat. Arbutnot on Aliments.

2. A disease in a hawk. Ainsworth.

RYE GRASS. n. s. A kind of strong grass. Some sow ryegrass with the corn at Michaelmas.
Morimer.

S A B

S† Has in English the same hissing sound as in other languages, and unhappily prevails in so many of our words that it produces in the ear of a foreigner a continued sibilation.

In the beginning of words it has invariably its natural and genuine sound: in the middle it is sometimes uttered with a stronger appulse of the tongue to the palate, like z; as rose, roseate, rosy, osier, nosel, resident, busy, business. It sometimes keeps its natural sound; as loose, designation; for which I know not whether any rules can be given.

In the end of monosyllables it is sometimes s, as in this; and sometimes z, as in as, has; and generally where es stands in verbs for eth, as gives. It seems to be established as a rule, that no noun singular should end with s single: therefore in words written with diphthongs, and naturally long, an e is nevertheless added at the end, as goose, house; and where the syllable is short the s is doubled, and was once sse, as asse, anciently asse; wilderness, anciently wildernessse; distress, anciently distressse.
Dr. Johnson.

The change which has happened in our language by the abbreviation of several words that are terminated in eth, by substituting an s in the room of the last syllable, as in drowns, walks, arrives, and innumerable other words, which in the pronunciation of our forefathers were drowneth, walketh, arriveth; has wonderfully multiplied a letter, which was before too frequent in the English tongue, and added to that hissing in our language which is taken so much notice of by foreigners; but at the same time humours our taciturnity, and eases us of many superfluous syllables.
Addison.

The letter S, I here observes, was a peculiar favourite with the ancient Goths; "quâ nulla — cavior, nulla frequentior."
Dr. Jamieson.

SABA'OTH. n. s. [Hebrew.] Signifying an army.

S A B

Holy Lord God of sabbath; that is, Lord of hosts.
Common Prayer.

SABBATA'RIAN.† n. s. [from sabbath.]

One who observes the Sabbath with unreasonable rigour; one who observes the seventh day of the week in opposition to the first.

We have myriads of examples in this kind, amongst those rigid Sabbatarians.
Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 681.

SABBATA'RIAN.* adj. Of or belonging to sabbatarians.

Puritans — were wont to pass their strange determinations, sabbatarian paradoxes, and apocalyptic frenzies, under the name and covert of the true professors of Christian doctrine.

Mountagu, App. to Cas. Ded.
SABBATA'RIANISM.* n. s. The tenets of sabbatarians.

Laws against profanation; I do not mean tending to Judaism or sabbatarianism.
Bp. Ward, Sermon. 30 Jan. (1673.) p. 34.

SA'B'BATH.† n. s. [An Hebrew word signifying rest; Goth. sabbato; French, sabbat; Lat. sabbatum. "From the Hebrew word shabath, it is called sabbath (or rest) day, Levit. xxiii. 32. and xxv. 2. It signifieth not such a rest as wherein one sitteth still and doth nothing, (as the word noûch doth,) but only a resting and ceasing from that which he did before." Leigh's Crit. Sacra, p. 242.]

1. A day appointed by God among the Jews, and from them established among Christians for public worship; the seventh day set apart from works of labour to be employed in piety.

There was a double reason rendered by God why the Jews should keep that sabbath which they did; one special, as to a seventh day, to shew they worshipped that God who was the Creator of the world; the other individual, as to that seventh day, to signify their deliverance from the Egyptian bondage, from which that seventh day was dated. Being then, upon the resurrection of our Saviour, a greater deliverance and far more plenteous redemption was wrought than that of Egypt, and therefore a greater observance was due unto it than to that; the individual determination of the day did pass upon a stronger reason to another day, always to be repeated by a seventh return upon the reference to the Creation. As there was a change in the year at the coming out of Egypt, by the command of God; "this month (the month of Abib) shall be unto you the beginning of months, it shall be the first month of the year to you;" so, at this time of a more eminent deliverance, a change was wrought in the hebdomadal or weekly account; and the first day is made the seventh, or the seventh after that first is sanctified. — And thus the observation of that day, which the Jews did sanctify, ceased, and was buried with our Saviour; and, in the stead of it, the religious observation of that day, on which the Son of God rose from the dead, by the constant practice of the blessed Apostles, was transmitted to the Church of God, and so continued in all ages.

Pearson.

I purpose,
And by our holy sabbath have I sworn,
To have the due and forfeit of my bond. Shaks.

Glad we return'd up to the coasts of light,
Ere sabbath evening. Milton, P. L.

Here every day was sabbath: only free
From hours of prayer, for hours of charity,
Such as the Jews from servile toil releas't,
Where works of mercy were a part of rest:
Such as blest angels exercise above,
Vary'd with sacred hymns and acts of love;
Such sabbaths as that one she now enjoys,
Ev'n that perpetual one, which she employs:
For such vicissitudes in heaven there are,
In praise alternate, and alternate pray'r. Dryden.

2. Intermission of pain or sorrow; time of rest.

Never any sabbath of release
Could free his travels and afflictions deep.
Daniel, Civ. War.

Nor can his blessed soul look down from heav'n,
Or break the eternal sabbath of his rest,
To see her miseries on earth. Dryden.

Peaceful sleep out the sabbath of the tomb,
And wake to raptures in a life to come. Pope.

SA'B'BATHBREAKER. n. s. [sabbath and break.] Violator of the sabbath by labour or wickedness.

The usurer is the greatest sabbathbreaker, because his plough goeth every Sunday. Bacon, Ess.

SA'BATHLESS.* adj. [sabbath and less.] Without intermission of labour; without interval of rest.

Although men should refrain themselves from injury and evil acts, yet this incessant and sabbathless pursuit of a man's fortune leaveth not tribute, which we owe to God, of our time.

SABBA'TICAL.† adj. [sabbaticus, Lat. sabba'tick.] batique, Fr. from sabbath.]

1. Resembling the sabbath; enjoying or bringing intermission of labour.

In accounting the sabbatical years, this rule is to be observed, that the same year which endeth one jubilee, beginneth the next.

Gregory, Posthum. (1640.) p. 138. The appointment and observance of the sabbatical year, and after the seventh sabbatical year, a year of jubilee, is a circumstance of great moment.

Forbes.

2. Belonging to the sabbath.

This salutary view is only and effectually pursued by due attendance on sabbatic duty. This is the true method to make an impression on the heart. They that go not to divine worship, cannot know the morality of actions; and have no impulse on their minds to do what is good, to abstain from what is evil.

SA'BEBATISM.† n. s. [from sabbatum, Lat.] Observance of the sabbath superstitiously rigid. This is Dr. Johnson's definition of the word, without any example; of which, indeed, in this sense I can find none. Nor is the word thus so proper as sabbatarianism. But sabbatism, as denoting rest, is a good and true word.

This is that sabbatism, or rest, that the author to the Hebrews exhorts them to strive to enter into through faith and obedience.

More, Conj. Cabb. (1653.) p. 210.

SA'BINE. n. s. [sabine, Fr. sabina, Lat.] A plant.

Sabine or savin may make fine hedges, and may be brought into any form by clipping, much beyond trees.

Mortimer.

SA'BLE. n. s. [zibella, Lat.] Fur.

Sable is worn of great personages, and brought out of Russia, being the fur of a little beast of that name, esteemed for the perfectness of the colour of the hairs, which are very black. Hence sable, in heraldry, signifies the black colour in gentlemen's arms.

Peacham on Blazoning.

Furiously running in upon him, with tumultuous speech, he violently raught from his head his rich cap of sables.

Knolles.

The peacock's plumes thy tackle must not fail, Nor the dear purchase of the sable's tail.

Gay.

SA'BLE. adj. [Fr.] Black. A word used by heralds and poets.

By this the drooping daylight can to fade, And yield his room to sad succeeding night, Who with her sable mantle can to shade The face of earth, and ways of living light.

Spenser, F. Q.

With him inthron'd
Set sable-vested night, eldest of things,
The consort of his reign.

Milton, P. L.

They soon begin that tragick play,
And with their smoky cannons banish day:
Night, horror, slaughter, with confusion meet,
And in their sable arms embrace the fleet.

Waller.

Adoring first the genius of the place,
And night, and all the stars that gild her sable throne.

Dryden.

SA'BILIÈRE. n. s. [French.]

1. A sandpit.

2. [In carpentry.] A piece of timber as long, but not so thick, as a beam.

Bailey.

SABO'T.* n. s. [French; zapato, Span. a shoe.] A sort of wooden shoe.

A fustian language, like the clattering noise of sabots. Bramhall against Hobbes, (1655.) p. 20.

They wear large clumsy shoes, almost as bad as the French sabot.

Swinburne, Trav. through Spain, Lett. 44.

SABRE.† n. s. [sabre, Fr. I suppose, of Turkish original. Dr. Johnson.—The Cossacks use sabla, and the Poles sabel, for a sabre. Clarke's Trav. p. 233.] A cymetar; a short sword with a convex edge; a faulchion.

To me the cries of fighting fields are charms;
Keen be my sabre, and of proof my arms;
I ask no other blessing of my stars,
No prize but fame, no mistress but the wars.

Dryden.

Seam'd o'er with wounds, which his own sabre gave,

In the vile habit of a village slave,
The foe deceiv'd.

Pope, Odys.

To SA'BRE. v. a. [from the noun.] To strike with a sabre.

You send troops to sabre and bayonet us into submission.

Burke.

SABULO'SITY. n. s. [from sabulous.] Grittiness; sandiness.

SABULOUS. adj. [sabulum, Lat.] Gritty; sandy.

SAC.* n. s. [jac, Saxon.] One of the ancient privileges of the lord of a manor. See Soc.

SACCA'DE. n. s. [French.] A violent check the rider gives his horse, by drawing both the reins very suddenly: a correction used when the horse bears heavy on the hand.

Bailey.

SACCHAR'FEROUS.* adj. [saccharum, and fero, Lat.] Producing sugar.

Sacchariferous trees. Hist. R. Soc. iv. 380.

SAC'CHARINE.† adj. [saccharin, Fr. Cotgrave; saccharum, Latin.] Having the taste or any other of the chief qualities of sugar.

Manna is an essential saccharine salt, sweating from the leaves of most plants.

Arbutnot on Aliments.

SACERDO'TAL.† adj. [sacerdotal, French, Cotgrave; sacerdotalis, Lat.] Priestly; belonging to the priesthood.

They have several offices and prayers, especially for the dead, in which functions they use sacerdotal garments.

Stillingfleet.

He fell violently upon me, without respect to my sacerdotal orders.

Dryden, Span. Friar.

If ample powers, granted by the rulers of this world, add dignity to the persons intrusted with these powers, behold the importance and extent of the sacerdotal commission.

Atterbury.

SA'CHEL.† n. s. [sacculus, Lat. Dr. Johnson, under satchel, observes that perhaps sachel is the better form of this word. Mr. Nares, on the other hand, prefers satchel, considering the t necessary to shorten the a. But this is contrary to ancient custom, and to the etymology. Chaucer, sachelles. Sacculus is the diminutive of the Lat. saccus; as secke is of the German seckel, a little sack.] A small sack or bag.

Puckered together like a sachell.

Junius, Sin. Stigm. (1639.) p. 19.

SACK.† n. s. [פֶּשֶׁ Hebrew; sakk, Goth. racc, Sax. sac, Fr. sacque, Gr. saccus, Lat. sacco, Ital. and Span. It is observable of this word, that it is found in all languages, and it is therefore conceived to be antediluvian.]

1. A bag; a pouch; commonly a large bag.

Our sacks shall be a mean to sack the city, And we be lords and rulers over Roan.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

Vastius caused the authors of that mutiny to be thrust into sacks, and in the sight of the fleet cast into the sea.

Knolles.

2. The measure of three bushels.

3. A woman's loose robe.

This strait bodied city attire will stir a courtier's blood, more than the finest loose sacks the ladies use to be put in.

B. Jonson, Postaster.

To SACK.† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To put in bags.
Now the great work is done, the corn is ground,
The grist is sack'd, and every sack well bound.

Betterton.

2. [From sacar, Spanish. Dr. Johnson.—The Spanish word means to tear or pluck away by force; and saco is the plunder of a town. Some have considered the Sax. pece, battle, as the origin of the term. See Lye's Dict. edit. Manning, in V. Secce.] To take by storm; to pillage; to plunder.

Edward Bruce spoiled all the old English-pale inhabitants, and sacked and rased all cities and corporate towns.

Spenser.

I'll make thee stoop and bend thy knee,
Or sack this country with a mutiny.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

What armies conquer'd, perish'd with thy sword?

What cities sack'd?

Fairfax.

Who sees these dismal heaps but would demand

What barbarous invader sack'd the land? Denham.

The pope himself was ever after unfortunate,

Rome being twice taken and sacked in his reign.

South.

The great magazine for all kinds of treasure is the bed of the Tiber: when the Romans lay under the apprehensions of seeing their city sacked by a barbarous enemy, they would take care to bestow such of their riches this way as could best bear the water.

Addison.

SACK.† n. s.

1. Storm of a town; pillage; plunder. [saco, Span. See the second sense of To SACK.]

If Saturn's son bestows

The sack of Troy, which he by promise owes,
Then shall the conquering Greeks thy loss restore.

Dryden.

2. A kind of sweet wine, now brought chiefly from the Canaries. [Sec, French, of uncertain etymology; but derived by Skinner, after Mandesto, from Xequ, a city of Morocco. The sack of Shakespeare is believed to be what is now called Sherry. Dr. Johnson.—Mr. Malone and others have considered it as a dry wine, and thence to have been named in French vin sec; and Mr. Douce has added that the old way of writing it, both in French and English, is secke. Dr. Neumann says that the term dry, or sec, is proper, because the wine is made from half-dried grapes. In Minsheu's Eng. and Span. Dict. 1599,

"sacke" is called "a wine that commeth out of Spaine," and is rendered merely "vino blanco," white wine. This Spanish wine, however, according to a citation made by Mr. Douce from a late publication of Travels, is said to owe its name to "goatskin sacks in which it is carried:—a practice so common in Spain, as to give the name of sack to a species of white wine once highly prized in Great Britain." See Illustr. of Shakspeare, i. 417. Where also reference is made to the low Lat. saccatum, in Du Cange, which describes a liquor made from water and the dregs of wine passed or strained through a sack.]

Please you, drink a cup of sack. Shakspeare.
The butler hath great advantage to allure the maids with a glass of sack. Swift.

SACKBUT. † n. s. [sacabuche, Spanish; sambuca, Lat. sambuque, Fr. Dr. Johnson. —Our word is from the old French sacquebutte, which Lacombe defines "espèce de serpent d'église, ou instrument musique;" and assigns to this term the date of 1200. The Fr. sambuque, and Lat. sambuca, which Dr. Johnson mentions, are not the sackbut. Nor is the sackbut a kind of pipe, as he has defined it. "It is usually eight feet long, without reckoning two circles in the middle of the instrument, and without being drawn out:—it serves as a bass in concerts of wind music." Mus. Dict. Skinner thus explains the Spanish word sacabuche, "tuba ductilis, à saca del buche, i. e. ab extrahendo è stomacho, vel ventriculo usque; quia scilicet, qui hoc tubæ genere utuntur, magnâ vi spiritum trahunt et vehementer proflant." A kind of trumpet.
The trumpets, sackbuts, psalteries and fife, Make the sun dance. Shakspeare, Coriol.

SACKCLOTH. n. s. [sack and cloth.] Cloth of which sacks are made; coarse cloth sometimes worn in mortification.

Coarse stuff made of goats' hair, of a dark colour, worn by soldiers and mariners; and used as a habit among the Hebrews in times of mourning. Called sackcloth, either because sacks were made of this sort of stuff, or because haircloths were straight and close like a sack. Calmet.

To augment her painful penance more,
Thrice every week in ashes she did sit,
And next her wrinkled skin rough sackcloth wore. Spenser.

Thus with sackcloth I invest my woe,
And dust upon my clouded forehead throw. Sandys.

Being clad in sackcloth, he was to lie on the ground, and constantly day and night to implore God's mercy for the sin he had committed. Ayliffe, Parergon.

SACKCLOTHED. * adj. Wearing sackcloth.

To be jovial, when God calls to mourning; to glut our maw, when he calls to fasting; to glitter, when he would have us sackcloth'd and squalid; he hates it to the death. Eph. Hall, Rem. p. 69.

SACKER. † n. s. [from sack.] One that takes a town. Barret.

SACKFUL. n. s. [sack and full.] A full bag. Wood goes about with sackfuls of dross, odiously misrepresenting his prince's countenance. Swift.

Snuff the candles at supper on the table, because the burning snuff may fall into a dish of soup or sackposset. Swift.

SACRAMENT. † n. s. [sacrament, Fr. sacramentum, Lat.]

1. An oath; any ceremony producing an obligation.

Here I begin the sacrament to all.

2. An outward and visible sign of an inward and spiritual grace.

As often as we mention a sacrament, it is improperly understood; for in the writings of the ancient fathers all articles which are peculiar to Christian faith, all duties of religion containing that which sense or natural reason cannot of itself discern, are most commonly named sacraments; our restraint of the word to some few principal divine ceremonies, importeth in every such ceremony two things, the substance of the ceremony itself, which is visible; and besides that, somewhat else more secret, in reference whereunto we conceive that ceremony to be a sacrament. Hooker.

3. The eucharist; the holy communion.
Ten thousand French have ta'en the sacrament
To rive their dangerous artillery
Upon no Christian soul but English Talbot. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

As we have ta'en the sacrament,
We will unite the white rose with the red. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

Before the famous battle of Cressy, he spent the greatest part of the night in prayer; and in the morning received the sacrament, with his son, and the chief of his officers. Addison.

To SACRAMENT. * v. a. [from the noun.]
To bind by an oath. Not in use.

When desperate men have sacramented themselves to destroy, God can prevent and deliver. Abp. Laud, Serm. p. 86.

SACRAMENTAL. adj. [sacramental, Fr. from sacrament.] Constituting a sacrament; pertaining to a sacrament.

To make complete the outward substance of a sacrament, there is required an outward form, which form sacramental elements receive from sacramental words. Hooker.

The words of St. Paul are plain; and whatever interpretation can be put upon them, it can only vary the way of the sacramental efficacy, but it cannot evacuate the blessing. Bp. Taylor.

SACRAMENTAL. * n. s. That which relates to a sacrament.

These words, cup and testament,—be sacramentals. Bp. Morton, Discharge, &c. p. 80.
The fees of sacraments, sacramentals, diriges.

H. Wharton on Burnet's Hist. of the Ref. p. 66.

SACRAMENTALLY. adv. [from sacramental.] After the manner of a sacrament.

My body is sacramentally contained in this sacrament of bread. Bp. Hall.

The law of circumcision was meant by God sacramentally to impress the duty of strict purity. Hammond.

SACRAMENTARIAN. * n. s. One who differs in opinion, as to the sacraments, from the Romish church; a name reproachfully applied by papists to protestants.

They resolved to accuse him [Cranmer] of being the head and protector of the sacramentarians.

Tindal, Rapin's Hist. of Eng.
SACRAMENTARY. * n. s. [sacramentarium, low Lat.]

1. An ancient book of prayers and directions respecting sacraments.
As in the Egyptian liturgy;—and that in Grimoaldus's sacramentary.

Abp. Usher, Answ. to the Jes. Malone, p. 147.

2. [from sacrament.] A term of reproach given by papists to protestants. See SACRAMENTARIAN.

So ye be no papist, ye may be a sacramentary, an anabaptist, or a Lutheran.

Stapleton, Fort. of the Faith, fol. 86.
SACRAMENTARY. * adj. Of or belonging to sacramentarians.

He would have not only the papists, but the Lutherans, the anabaptists, and all other divided sects of protestants, to joyne in his sacramentary congregation. Stapleton, Fort. of the Faith, fol. 25.

To SACRATE. * v. a. [sacro, Lat.] To consecrate; to dedicate.

The marble of some monument sacrated to learning.

Waterhouse, Apol. for Learn. (1653), p. 51.
SACRED. adj. [sacre, Fr. sacer, Lat.]

1. Immediately relating to God.
Wolves shall succeed for teachers, grievous wolves,
Who all the sacred mysteries of heaven
To their own vile advantages shall turn. Milton, P. L.

Before me lay the sacred text,
The help, the guide, the balm of souls perplex'd. Arbutnot.

2. Devoted to religious uses; holy.
Those who came to celebrate the sabbath, made a conscience of helping themselves for the honour of that most sacred day. 2 Macc. vi. 11.
They with wine-offerings pour'd, and sacred feast,
Shall spend their days with joy unblam'd. Milton, P. L.

This temple and his holy ark,
With all his sacred things. Milton, P. L.

3. Dedicated; consecrate; consecrated; with to.

5. Entitled to reverence; awfully venerable.

Bright officious lamps,
In thee concentrating all their precious beams
Of sacred influence. Milton, P. L.

Poet and saint, to thee alone were giv'n,
The two most sacred names of earth and heav'n. Cowley.

6. Inviolable, as if appropriated to some superiour being.

The honour's sacred, which he talks on now,
Supposing that I lackt it. Shaks. Ant. and Cleop.
How hast thou yielded to transgress
The strict forbiddance? how to violate
The sacred fruit? Milton, P. L.
Secrets of marriage still are sacred held;
Their sweet and bitter by the wise conceal'd. Dryden.

SA'CREDLY. adv. [from sacred.] Inviolably; religiously.

When God had manifested himself in the flesh, how sacredly did he preserve this privilege! South.
SA'CREDNES. n. s. [from sacred.] The state of being sacred; state of being consecrated to religious uses; holiness; sanctity.

In the sanctuary the cloud, and the oracular answers, were prerogatives peculiar to the sacredness of the place. South.

This insinuates the sacredness of power, let the administration of it be what it will. L'Estrange.

SACRIFICAL. † adj. [sacrificious, Latin.]

SACRIFIC. } Employed in sacrifice.

The former of these words, which is overpassed by Dr. Johnson, is old. Cockeram gives it.

SACRIFICABLE. adj. [from sacrificior, Lat.] Capable of being offered in sacrifice.

Although Jephtha's vow ran generally for the words, whatsoever shall come forth; yet might it be restrained in the sense, to whatsoever was sacrificable, and justly subject to lawful immolation, and so would not have sacrificed either horse or dog. Brown, Vulg. Err.

SACRIFICANT.* n. s. [sacrificans, Latin.] One who offers a sacrifice.

Homer did believe there were certain evil demons, who took pleasure in fumes and nidours of sacrifices; and that they were ready, as a reward, to gratify the sacrificants with the destruction of any person, if they so desired it.

Hallywell, Melampr. p. 102.
SACRIFICATOR. n. s. [sacrificateur, Fr. from sacrificior, Lat.] Sacrificer; offerer of sacrifice.

Not only the subject of sacrifice is questionable, but also the sacrificator, which the picture makes to be Jephtha. Brown.

SACRIFICATORY.† adj. [sacrificatoire, Fr.] Offering sacrifice. Sherwood.

To SA'CRIFICE. v. a. [sacrifier, Fr. sacrificior, Lat.]

1. To offer to heaven; to immolate as an atonement or propitiation: with to.

This blood, like sacrificing Abel's, cries
 To me for justice, Shakespeare, Rich. II.
 Alarbus' limbs are lopt,
 And intrails feed the sacrificing fire.

Titus Andronicus.
I sacrifice to the Lord all that openeth the matrix, being males. Ex. xiii. 15.

Men from the herd or flock
Of sacrificing bullock, lamb, or kid. Milton, P. L.

2. To destroy or give up for the sake of something else; with to.

'Tis a sad contemplation, that we should sacrifice
 the peace of the church to a little vain curiosity.

Dec. of Chr. Piety.
 The breach of this rule, To do as one would be done to, would be contrary to that interest men sacrifice to when they break it. Locke.

Syphax loves you, and would sacrifice
 His life, nay more, his honour to your service.

Addison.
 A great genius sometimes sacrifices sound to sense. Broomer.

3. To destroy; to kill.

4. To devote with loss.

Condemn'd to sacrifice his childish years
 To babbling ignorance, and to empty fears. Prior.

To SA'CRIFICE. v. n. To make offerings; to offer sacrifice.

He that sacrificeth of things wrongfully gotten,
 his offering is ridiculous. Ecclesi. xxiv. 18.
 Let us go to sacrifice to the Lord. Ex. xiii. 18.
 VOL. III.

Some mischief is befallen

To that meek man who well had sacrific'd.

Milton, P. L.
SA'CRIFICE.† n. s. [sacrifice, Fr. sacrificium, Latin.]

1. The act of offering to heaven.

God will ordain religious rites

Of sacrifice.

Milton, P. L.
 2. The thing offered to heaven, or immolated by an act of religion.

Upon such sacrifice

The gods themselves throw incense.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

Go with me like good angels to my end,
 And as the long divorce of steel falls on me,
 Make of your prayers one sweet sacrifice,
 And lift my soul to heav'n.

Shakespeare.

Moloch—besmear'd with blood

Of human sacrifice.

Milton, P. L.

My life if thou preserv'st, my life

Thy sacrifice shall be;

And death, if death must be my doom,
 Shall join my soul to thee. Addison, Spect.

3. Any thing destroyed, or quitted for the sake of something else: as, he made a sacrifice of his friendship to his interest.

Supposing a man to be in the talking world one-third part of the day, whoever gives another quarter of an hour's hearing, makes him a sacrifice of more than the four hundred thousandth part of his conversable life! Taiter, No. 264.

4. Any thing destroyed.

SA'CRIFICER. n. s. [from sacrifice.] One who offers sacrifice; one that immolates.

Let us be sacrificers, but not butchers. Shaks.

When some brawny sacrificer knocks,

Before an altar led, an offer'd ox. Dryden.

A priest pours wine between the horns of a bull: the priest is veiled after the manner of the old Roman sacrificers. Addison.

SACRIFICIAL. adj. [from sacrifice.] Performing sacrifice; included in sacrifice.

Rain sacrificial whisp'rings in his ear;

Make sacred even his stirrup. Shakespeare, Timon.

Tertullian's observation upon these sacrificial rites, is pertinent to this rule.

By. Taylor, Worth. Commun.

SA'CRILEGE. n. s. [sacrilege, Fr. sacrilegium, Lat.] The crime of appropriating to himself what is devoted to religion;

 the crime of robbing Heaven; the crime of violating or profaning things sacred.

By what eclipse shall that sun be defac'd,

What mine hath erst thrown down so fair a tower!

What sacrilege hath such a saint disgrac'd? Sidney.

Then can a cursed hand the quiet womb

Of his great-grandmother with steel to wound,

And the hid treasures in her sacred tomb

With sacrilege to dig. Spenser, F. Q.

We need not go many ages back to see the vengeance of God upon some families, raised upon the ruins of churches, and enriched with the spoils of sacrilege. South.

SACRILEGIOUS. adj. [sacrilegus, Lat. from sacrilege.] Violating things sacred; polluted with the crime of sacrilege.

To sacrilegious perjury should I be betrayed, I should account it greater misery. King Charles.

By vile hands to common use debas'd,

With sacrilegious taunt, and impious jest. Prior.

Still green with bays each ancient altar stands,

Above the reach of sacrilegious hands. Pope.

detraction from the Godhead. Ayliffe, Parergon.

SACRILEGIOUSLY. adv. [from sacrilegious.]

With sacrilege.

When these evils befall him, his conscience tells him it was for sacrilegiously pillaging and invading God's house. South.

SACRILEGIOUSNESS.* n. s. [from sacrile- gious.] Sacrilege; a disposition to sacrilege.

Scott.
SA'CRILEGIST.* n. s. [from sacrilege.] One who commits sacrilege.

The hand of God is still upon the posterity of Antiochus Epiphanes the sacrilegist.

Spelman, Hist. of Sacrilege, § 6.
 Several of the brass-plates were most sacrilegiously torn up, and taken away:—but, with shame be it spoken, not one of them did resent the matter, or enquire after the sacrilegists.

Life of A. Wood, p. 142.

SA'CRING.† part. [This is a participle of the French sacrer. The verb is not used in English. Dr. Johnson.—It is, however, an obsolete verb; though Dr. Johnson has denied its existence as such:

"Sacring my song to every deity." Chapman, of Homer's Hymn to Diana. It was very early applied to the little bell, used in elevating the host, and other offices of the Romish church; as in an ancient song, written about the year 1400, given in Ritson's Anc. Songs, p. 56. "Ryng the belle, that these forsaiden may come to the sacring," i. e. to the elevation of the host. "What made the people to runne from their seates to the altar, and from altar to altar, and from sakeryng (as they called it) to sakeryng, peeping, tootyng, and gasyng at that thyngg whiche the priest helde up in his handes?" Abp. Cranmer, Answ. to Bp. Gardiner, p. 271.] Consecrating.

I'll startle you,

Worse than the sacring bell. Shaks. Hen. VIII.

The sacring of the kings of France is the sign of their sovereign priesthood as well as kingdom, and in the right thereof they are capable of holding all vacant benefices. Temple.

SA'CRIST. } n. s. [sacristain, Fr.] He

Addison.

SA'CROSANCT.* adj. [sacrosanctus, Lat.] Inviolable; sacred.

The Roman church—makes itself so sacrosanct and infallible.

More, Ant. against Idolatry, (1669,) ch. 3.

SAD.† adj. [Of this word, so frequent in the language, the etymology is not known. It is probably a contraction of sagged, heavy, burthened, overwhelmed, from To sag, to load. Dr. Johnson.—In the Prompt. Parv. "to saggy" is also written "to satelym," and rendered into the barbarous Latin basso; as sagging also is into bassatura. Perhaps our earliest usage of sad is in the sense of settled, steady, firm. "We ben made parcerenis of Christ, if netheles we holden the bigynnyng of his substance sad in to the ende." Wicliffe, Heb. iii. So Chaucer, unsad, for unsettled. "O stormy peple, unsad, and ever untrewē." Cl. Tale. Nor had this sense been overpassed by Milton: "In his face I see sad resolution, and secure," i. e. firm, steady.]

1. Sorrowful; full of grief.

Do you think I shall not love a sad Pamela so well as a joyful? Sidney.

One from sad dismay
Recomforted, and after thoughts disturb'd
Submitting to what seem'd remedies.

Milton, P. L.

The hapless pair
Sat in their sad discourse and various plaint.

Milton, P. L.

Up into heaven, from Paradise in haste
The angelick guards ascended, mute and sad.

Milton, P. L.

I now must change
Those notes to tragick: — sad task! Milton, P. L.
Six brave companions from each ship we lost:
With sails outspread we fly the unequal strife,
Sad for their loss, but joyful of our life.

Pope, Odyssey.

2. Habitually melancholy; heavy; gloomy; not gay; not cheerful.

It ministreth unto men, and other creatures, all celestial influences: it dissipateth those sad thoughts and sorrows, which the darkness both begetteth and maintaineth.

Raleigh.

See in her cell sad Eloisa spread,
Propp'd on some tomb, a neighbour of the dead.

Pope.

3. Gloomy; shewing sorrow or anxiety by outward appearance.

Be not as the hypocrites of a sad countenance.

St. Matthew.

Earth trembled from her entrails, as again
In pangs, and Nature gave a second groan;
Sky lour'd, and, muttering thunder, some sad
drops

Wept at completing of the mortal sin
Original.

Milton, P. L.

4. Serious; not light; not volatile; grave.

He with utterance grave, and countenance sad,
From point to point discours'd his voyage.

Spenser.

The lady Katharine, a sad and religious woman, when Henry VIII.'s resolution of a divorce from her was first made known, said that she had not offended; but it was a judgment of God, for that her former marriage was made in blood.

Bacon.

If it were an embassy of weight, choice was made of some sad person of known judgment and experience, and not of a young man, not weighed in state matters.

Bacon.

A sad vice valour is the brave complexion
That leads the van, and swallows up the cities:
The gigler is a milk-maid, whom infection,
Or a fir'd beacon, frighteth from his dities.

Herbert.

5. Affective; calamitous.

Thoughts in my unquiet breast are risen,
Tending to some relief of our extremes,
Or end, though sharp and sad, yet tolerable.

Milton, P. L.

6. Bad; inconvenient; vexatious. A word of burlesque complaint.

These qualifications make him a sad husband.

Addison.

7. Dark coloured.

Crystal, in its reduction into powder, hath a vail and shadow of blue; and in its coarse pieces is of a sad hue than the powder of Venice glass.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

I met him accidentally in London in sad coloured clothes, far from being costly.

Walton, Life of Bp. Sanderson.

Scarce any tinging ingredient is of so general use as wood, or glastum; for though of itself it dye but a blue, yet it is used to prepare cloth for green, and many of the sadder colours, when the dyers make them last without fading.

Boyle.

Wood or wade is used by the dyers to lay the foundation of all sad colours.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

8. Heavy; weighty; ponderous.

With that his hand, more sad than lump of lead,
Uplifting high, he weened with Morddure,
His own good sword, Morddure, to cleave his head.

Spenser, F. Q.

therefore require warm applications and light compost.

Mortimer.

To SA'DDEN.† v. a. [from sad.]

1. To make sad; to make sorrowful.

Pr. Parv.

2. To make melancholy; to make gloomy.

Her gloomy presence saddens all the scene,
Shades every flower, and darkens every green;
Deepens the murmurs of the falling floods,
And breathes a browner horror on the woods.

Pope.

3. To make dark coloured.

4. To make heavy; to make cohesive.

The very soft water, lying long upon the bottoms of the sea or pools, doth so compress and sadden them by its weight.

Ray, p. 369.

Marl is binding, and saddening of land is the great prejudice it doth to clay lands.

Mortimer.

To SA'DDEN.* v. n. To become sad.

Troy sadden'd at the view.

Pope, Il. 14.

SA'DDLE.† n. s. [rabel, rabl, Sax. sadel, Teut. Su. and Danish.] The seat which is put upon the horse for the accommodation of the rider.

His horse hipped, with an old moth-eaten saddle,
and the stirrups of no kindred.

Shakespeare, Tam. of the Shrew.

The law made for apparel, and riding in saddles, after the English fashion, is penal only to Englishmen.

Davies.

The vent'rous knight is from the saddle thrown;
But 'tis the fault of fortune, not his own.

Dryden.

To SA'DDLE.† v. a. [from the noun; Sax.
raban.]

1. To cover with a saddle.

I will saddle me an ass, that I way ride thereon.

2 Sam.

Rebels, by yielding, do like him, or worse,
Who saddled his own back to shame his horse.

Cleaveland.

No man, sure, e'er left his house,
And saddled Ball, with thoughts so wild,
To bring a midwife to his spouse,
Before he knew she was with child.

Prior.

2. To load; to burthen.

Resolv'd for sea, the slaves thy baggage pack,
Each saddled with his burden on his back;
Nothing retards thy voyage.

Dryden.

SA'DDLEBACKED. adj. [saddle and back.]

Horses, saddlebacked, have their backs low, and a raised head and neck.

Farrier's Dict.

SA'DDLEBOW.* n. s. [rabel-boza, Saxon.]
The bows of a saddle are two pieces of wood laid arch-wise, to receive the upper part of a horse's back. See the sixth sense of Bow.

Alight thy steed,
And rein his proud head to the saddle-bow.

Shakespeare, Ven. and Adon.

One hung a pole-axe at his saddle-bow.

Dryden, Kn. Tale.

SA'DDLEMAKER.† n. s. [from saddle.] One SA'DDLER. } whose trade is to make

The utmost exactness in these belongs to farriers, saddlers, and smiths.

Digby.

The smith and the saddler's journeyman ought to partake of your master's generosity.

Swift, Dir. to the Groom.

SA'DDUCEE.* n. s. [from the sad which signifies justice; or from a certain teacher among the Jews, called Sadoc. Bp. Percy.] One of the most ancient sect among the Jews: which sect, at the time of our Saviour, is reputed to have held doctrines that were thoroughly impious. For they are said to have denied the resurrection of the dead, the being of angels, and all existence of the spirits or souls of men departed. It was their opinion, that there is no spiritual being but God only;
and that as to man, this world is his all.

Bp. Percy.

The Sadducees say that there is no resurrection, neither angel, nor spirit.

Acts, xxiii. 8.

The true, zealous, and hearty persecutors of Christianity at that time were the Sadducees, whom we may truly call the free-thinkers among the Jews. They believed neither resurrection, nor angel, nor spirit, i. e. in plain English, they were deists at least, if not atheists.

Guardian, No. 99.

SA'DDUCEISM.* n. s. The tenets of the Sad- ducees.

That earthly and cold disease of sadducism and atheism.

More, Song of the Soul, (1647), Pref.

Infidelity, or modern deism, is little else but reviv'd sadducism, &c.

Waterland, Charge, (1732), p. 75.

SA'DLY.† adv. [from sad.]

1. Sorrowfully; mournfully.

My father is gone wild into his grave;
For in his tomb lie my affections;
And with his spirit sadly I survive,
To mock the expectations of the world.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

He griev'd, he wept, the sight an image brought
Of his own filial love; a sadly pleasing thought.

Dryden.

He sadly suffers in their grief,
Outweeps an hermit, and outpays a saint.

Dryden.

2. Calamitously; miserably.

We may at present easily see, and one day sadly feel.

South.

3. Gravely; seriously.

To tell thee sadly, shepherd, without blame
Or our neglect, we lost her as we came.

Milton, Comus.

Think sadly of what hath been spoken.

Wh. Duty of Man, S. 8. § 14.

4. In a dark colour.

A gloomy obscure place, and in it only one light, which the genius of the house held, sadly attired.

B. Jonson, Ent. at Theobalds.

SA'DNESS.† n. s. [from sad.]

1. Sorrowfulness; mournfulness; dejection of mind.

The soul receives intelligence
By her near genius of the body's end,
And so imparts a sadness to the sense.

Daniel, Civ. War.

In the midst of these sadnesses God remembered his own creature.

Bp. Taylor, Sermon on Ps. lxxvi. 5.

And let us not be wanting to ourselves,
Lest so severe and obstinate a sadness

Tempt a new vengeance.

Denham, Sophy.

A passionate regret at sin, a grief and sadness of its memory, enter into God's roll of mourners.

Decay of Chr. Piety.

2. Melancholy look.

What hinders, that paleness, sadness, and deadness may not be remedied? since God hath given to mankind not only bread to strengthen, and wine to cheer, man's heart; but also oil, and other things proper, to make him a serene and cheerful countenance.

Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 105.

Dim sadness did not spare
Celestial visages.

Milton, P. L.

3. Seriousness; sedate gravity. This is perhaps the oldest usage.

In alle things gye thisilf ensample of goodde works, in techyng, in hoolnesse, in sadness.

Wicliffe, Tū. ii.

Mighty lord, this merry inclination
Accords not with the sadness of my suit.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI. P. III.

If the subject be mournful, let every thing in it have a stroke of sadness.

Dryden.

SAFE.† adj. [sauv; French; salvus, Lat. Dr. Johnson.—The old French has also sauv; following closely the Latin. Morin, under sauv; refers both sauv and the Latin word to the Gr. σῶς, safe, Eol. σῶς. But Mr. Horne Tooke pronounces safe the past participle of save. Our old word is sauve: "So that they mighten, sauve and sounde, the water passe." Gower, Conf. Am. B. 2.]

1. Free from danger.

Our separated fortune

Shall keep us both the safes; where we are,

There's daggers in men's smiles. Shaks. Macb.

But Trivia kept in secret shades alone,

Her care, Hypopolitus, to fate unknown;

And call'd him Virbinius in th' Egerian grove,

SALAMANDER. n. s. [salamandre, Fr. salamandra, Lat.] An animal supposed to live in the fire, and imagined to be very poisonous. Ambrose Parey has a picture of the salamander, with a receipt for her bite; but there is no such creature, the name being now given to a poor harmless insect.

The salamander liveth in the fire, and hath force also to extinguish it.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

According to this hypothesis, the whole lunar world is a torrid zone, and may be supposed uninhabitable, unless they are salamanders which dwell therein.

Glanville, Scepis.

Whereas it is commonly said that a salamander extinguisheth fire, we have found by experience, that on hot coals it dieth immediately.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

The artist was so encompassed with fire and smoke, that one would have thought nothing but a salamander could have been safe in such a situation.

Addison, Guardian.

SALAMANDER'S Hair. } n. s. A kind of SALAMANDER'S Wool. } asbestos or mineral flax.

There may be such candles as are made of salamander's wool, being a kind of mineral, which whiteneth in the burning, and consumeth not.

Bacon.

Of English tale, the coarser sort is called plaster or parget; the finer, spade, earth flax, or salamander's hair.

Woodward.

SALAMANDRINE. adj. [from salamander.] Resembling a salamander.

Laying it into a pan of burning coals, we observed a certain salamandrine quality, that made it capable of living in the midst of fire, without being consumed or singed.

Spectator.

SALARY.* n. s. [salaire, Fr. salarium, Lat. Salarium, or salary, is derived from sal. Arbuthnot. Sal, i. e. salt, was a part of the pay of the Roman soldiers. Malone.] Stated hire; annual or periodical payment.

This is hire and salary, not revenge.

Shaks.

Several persons, out of a salary of five hundred pounds, have always lived at the rate of two thousand.

Swift.

SALE.* n. s. [Icel. sal, venditio; M. Goth. saljan, Sax. gyllan, dare, tradere; Icel. selja, transmittre, vendere. Serenius.]

1. The act of selling.

2. Vent; power of selling; market.

Nothing doth more enrich any country than many towns; for the countrymen will be more industrious in tillage, and rearing of all husbandry commodities, knowing that they shall have ready sale for them at those towns.

Spenser.

3. A publick and proclaimed exposition of goods to the market; auction.

Those that won the plate, and those thus sold, ought to be marked, so as they may never return to the race, or to the sale.

Temple.

4. State of being venal; price.

The other is not a thing for sale, and only the gift of the gods.

Shakespeare, Cymbeline.

Others more moderate seeming, but their aim Private reward; for which both God and state They'd set to sale.

Milton, S. A.

The more money a man spends, the more must he endeavour to increase his stock; which at last sets the liberty of a commonwealth to sale.

Addison.

5. It seems in Spenser to signify a wicker basket; perhaps from sallow, in which fish are caught.

To make baskets of bulrushes was my wont;

Who to entrap the fish in winding sale

Was better seen?

Spenser.

SALEABLE. adj. [from sale.] Vendible; fit for sale; marketable.

I can impute this general enlargement of saleable things to no cause sooner than the Cornishman's want of vent and money.

Carew.

This vent is made quicker or slower, as greater or less quantities of any saleable commodity are removed out of the course of trade.

Locke.

SALEABLENESS.* n. s. [from saleable.]

The state of being saleable.

You might probably give him a better notion of the value, that is, the saleableness of the work.

Jp. Secker to Dr. Birch, Ill. of Lit. iii. 492.

SALEABLY. adv. [from saleable.] In a saleable manner.

SALEBROSITY.* n. s. [salebrosus, Lat.] A rugged path.

Nature rises to sovereignty, and there is a blaze of honour gilding the briers, and inciting the mind; yet is it not this without its thorns and salebrosity.

Feltham on Eccles. ii. 11.

SALEBROUS.* adj. [salebrosus, Lat.] Rough; uneven; rugged.

We now again proceed

Thorough a vale that's salebrous indeed;

— bruising our flesh and bones;

To throut betwixt massy and pointed stones.

Cotton, Wonders of the Peake, (1681,) p. 54.

SALEP.* See SALOOP.

SAL'SMAN. n. s. [sale and man.] One who sells clothes ready made.

Poets make characters, as salesmen clothes;

We take no measure of your fops and beaus.

Swift.

SAL'ET.* See SALLET.

SAL'EWOR.* n. s. [sale and work.] Work for sale; work carelessly done.

I see no more in you than in the ordinary Of Nature's salework.

Shakespeare, As you like it.

SAL'LIANT. adj. [French.] In heraldry, denotes a lion in a leaping posture, and standing so that his right foot is in the dexter point, and his hinder left foot in the sinister base point of the escutcheon, by which it is distinguished from rampant.

Harris.

Saliant, in heraldry, is when the lion is sporting himself.

Penckam.

SAL'IENT. adj. [saliens, Latin.]

1. Leaping; bounding; moving by leaps.

The legs of both sides moving together, as frogs, and salient animals, is properly called leaping.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

2. Beating; panting.

A salient point so first is call'd the heart,
By turns dilated, and by turns compress'd,
Expels and entertains the purple guest.

Blackmore.

3. Springing or shooting with a quick motion.

Who best can send on high

The salient spout, far streaming to the sky. Pope.

SAL'IGOT.* n. s. [tribulus aquaticus; Fr. saligot, Cotgrave.] Water-thistle.

SAL'ICK.* adj. [French.] "Epithète don-SAL'IQUE." née à une loi ancienne et fondamentale de la France; de Sala, fleuve d'Allemagne, parce que, selon Borel, Pharamond, premier roi de France, étoit venu de Franconie en Allemagne." Roquefort.] Belonging to the French law, by virtue of which, males only inherit.

Religiously unfold,

Why the law Salique, that they have in France,
Or should, or should not, bar us in our claim.

Shakespeare, Hen. V.

[We] terrify'd into an awe
Pass on ourselves a Salic law.

Hudibras, Lady's Answer to the Knight.

SALINA'TION.* n. s. [salinator, Lat. a salt-maker.] Act of washing with salt liquor.

We read in Plutarch, that Philippus Libertus washed the body of Pompey with salt water, which perhaps might be either because it was more abstersive, or that it helped to prevent putrefaction; and it is not improbable the Egyptians might have been accustomed to wash the body with the same pickle they used in salination, — in order to preserving and embalming it.

Greenhill, Art of Embalming, p. 59.

SALI'NE. } adj. [salinus, Lat.] Consist-
SALI'NOUS. } ing of salt; constituting salt.

We do not easily ascribe their induration to cold; but rather unto salinous spirits and concrete juices.

Brown.

This saline sap of the vessels, by being refused reception of the parts, declares itself in a more hostile manner, by drying the radical moisture.

Harvey on Consumptions.

If a very small quantity of any salt or vitriol be dissolved in a great quantity of water, the particles of the salt or vitriol will not sink to the bottom, though they be heavier in specie than the water; but will evenly diffuse themselves into all the water, so as to make it as saline at the top as at the bottom.

Newton, Opt.

As the substance of coagulations is not merely saline, nothing dissolves them but what penetrates and relaxes at the same time.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

SALI'VA. n. s. [Latin.] Every thing that is spit up; but it more strictly signifies that juice which is separated by the glands called salival.

Quincy.

Not meeting with disturbance from the saliva, I the sooner extirpated them.

Wiseman, Surgery.

SALI'VAL. } adj. [from saliva, Lat.] Re-
SALI'VARY. } lating to spittle.

The woodpecker, and other birds that prey upon flies, which they catch with their tongue, in the room of the said glands have a couple of bags filled with a viscous humour, which, by small canals, like the salival, being brought into their mouths, they dip their tongues herein, and so with the help of this natural birdlime attack the prey.

Crew.

The necessity of spittle to dissolve the aliment appears from the contrivance of nature in making the salivary ducts of animals which ruminates, extremely open: such animals as swallow their aliment without chewing watery salivary glands.

Arbutnot.

To SALIVATE. v. a. [from saliva, Latin.] To purge by the salival glands.

She was prepossessed with the scandal of salivating, and went out of town. Wiseman, Surgery.

SALIVATION. n. s. [from salivate.] A method of cure much practised of late in venereal, scrophulous, and other obstinate cases, by promoting a secretion of spittle.

Holding of ill-tasted things in the mouth will make a small salivation. Quincy, Grew, Cosmol.

SALIVOUS. adj. [from saliva.] Consisting of spittle; having the nature of spittle.

There happeneth an elongation of the uvula, through the abundance of salivous humour flowing upon it. Wiseman.

SALLET. n. s. [salade, Fr. a helmet; perhaps from the Teut. schale, cortex, concha, squama; Germ. schale: whence our shell.] A helmet.

Salad ne spere, garbrace ne page. Chauc. Dr. Two steel caps, i harquebut, and i morion or salet. Styrpe, Life of Abp. Parker, (under 1569.) p. 274. But for a sallet my brainpan had been cleft with a brown bill. Shakspeare, Hen. VI. P. II.

SALLET. } n. s. [corrupted by pro-
SALLETING. } nunciation from salad.]
I tried upon sallet oil. Boyle.

Sow some early salletting. Mortimer, Husbandry.

SALLIANCE. n. s. [from sally.] The act of issuing forth; sally. A word not inelegant, but out of use.

Now note I weat,
Sir Guyon, why with so fierce salliance
And fell intent, ye did at earst me meet.

Spenser, F. Q.

SALLOW.† n. s. [saule, Fr. sal, Sax. salix, Lat. The Sax. sal, black, has been considered by Thwaites as the root: "but this idea," Dr. Jamieson observes, "must be rejected, unless we can suppose that this was also the origin of the Latin name." Morin remarks that the Lat. salix is properly selix, having for its origin the Greek word ἑλῆξ, signifying the same thing.] A tree of the genus of willow.

Sallows and reeds on banks of rivers born,
Remain to cut to stay thy vines. Dryden.

The more particular explication of willows and sallows, and distinguishing them into ten species.

Worthington to Hartlib, (1661.) Ep. 10.

SALLOW.† adj. [sal, Germ. black; sale, Fr. foul. Dr. Johnson.—Serenius rejects the French word, which applies, he says, merely to soil; and produces the Icel. soelur, pale, flaccid. Yet sale is used in French to denote colour: as in Cotgrave, under the word, "le gris sale, a darke or duskie gray." Sickly; yellow.

What a deal of brine

Hath wash't thy sallow cheeks for Rosaline!

Shakspeare.

The scene of beauty and delight is chang'd:

No roses bloom upon my fading cheek,
Nor laughing graces wanton in my eyes;
But haggard Grief, lean-looking sallow Care,
And pining Discontent, a rueful train,
Dwell on my brow, all hideous and forlorn. Rowe.

SALLOWNESS. n. s. [from sallow.] Yellowness; sickly paleness.

A fish-diet would give such a sallowness to the celebrated beauties of this island, as would scarce make them distinguishable from those of France.

Addison.

SALLY. n. s. [sallie, Fr.]

1. Eruption; issue from a place besieged; quick egress.

The deputy sat down before the town for the space of three winter months; during which time sallies were made by the Spaniards, but they were beaten in with loss. Bacon.

2. Range; excursion.

Every one shall know a country better, that makes often sallies into it, and traverses it up and down, than he that, like a mill-horse, goes still round in the same track. Locke.

3. Flight; volatile or sprightly exertion.

These passages were intended for sallies of wit; but whence comes all this rage of wit? Stillingfleet.

4. Escape; levity; extravagant flight; frolick; wild gaiety; exorbitance.

At his return all was clear, and this excursion was esteemed but a sally of youth. Wotton.

'Tis but a sally of youth. Denham, Sophy.

We have written some things which we may wish never to have thought on: some sallies of levity ought to be imputed to youth. Swift.

The episodal part, made up of the extravagant sallies of the prince of Wales and Falstaff's humour, is of his own invention. Shakspeare Illustrated.

To SALLY. v. n. [from the noun.] To make an eruption; to issue out.

The Turks sallying forth, received thereby great hurt. Knolles.

The noise of some tumultuous fight:

They break the truce, and sally out by night.

Dryden.

The summons take of the same trumpeter's call,

To sally from one port, or man one publick wall.

Tate.

SALLYPORT. n. s. [sally and port.] Gate at which sallies are made.

My slippery soul had quit the fort,
But that she stopp'd the sallyport. Cleaveland.

Love to our citadel resorts

Through those deceitful sallyports;

Our sentinels betray our forts. Denham.

SALMAGUNDI.† n. s. [It is said to be corrupted from selon mon goût, or salé à mon goût. Dr. Johnson.—The French write it salmigondis; and the author of La Vie Privée des François, says, it originally signified an entertainment among tradesmen, or low artisans, where each person brought a different dish. Cotgrave calls it a hash, made of cold meat sliced and heated in a chafingdish, with crumbs of bread, wine, verjuice, vinegar, nutmeg, and orange peel. Malone.—It is probably a corruption of the Latin salgama, salted meats, preserved fruits.] A mixture of chopped meat and pickled herrings with oil, vinegar, pepper, and onions.

SALMON. n. s. [salmo, Latin; saumon, French.] A fish.

The salmon is accounted the king of fresh-water fish, and is bred in rivers relating to the sea, yet so far from it as admits no tincture of brackishness. He is said to cast his spawn in August: some say that then they dig a hole in a safe place in the gravel, and there place their eggs or spawn, after the melter has done his natural office, and then cover it over with gravel and stones, and so leave it to their Creator's protection; who, by a gentle heat which he infuses into that cold element, makes it brood and beget life in the spawn, and to become saulets early in the spring: they haste to the sea before winter, both the melter and spawner. Sir Francis Bacon observes the age of a salmon exceeds not ten years. After he is got into the sea he becomes, from a saulet, not so big as a gudgeon, to be a salmon, in as short a time as a gosling becomes a goose.

Walton, Angler.

They poke them with an instrument somewhat like the salmon spear. Caveau, Surv. of Cornwall.

They take salmon and trouts by groping and tickling them under the bellies in the pools, where they hover, and so throw them on land. Caveau.

Of fishes, you find in arms the whale, dolphin, salmon, and trout. Peacham.

SALMONTROUT. n. s. A trout that has some resemblance to a salmon.

There is in many rivers that relate to the sea salmontrouts as much different from others, in shape and spots, as sheep differ in their shape and bigness. Walton, Angler.

SALOO.† n. s. [salon, salle, Fr. from the Germ. sal.] A spacious hall or room; a sort of state-room.

The principal apartment of these buildings consists of one or more large saloons. Chambers.

SALOO.† n. s. [Turkish, salep. The people of the East are very fond of it.] A preparation from the root of a species of orchis: properly salep, but commonly called saloo.

It is from the root of this, [orchis mascula,] and other species of this genus, that the sweetish, mucilaginous, and highly nutritive power, called salep, is prepared.

Synopsis of the Materia Alimentaria, &c.

SALPICON. n. s. [In cookery.] A kind of farce put into holes cut in legs of beef, veal, or mutton. Bailey.

SALSAMENTARIOUS. adj. [salsamentarius, Lat.] Belonging to salt things. Dict.

SALSIFY. n. s. [Latin.] A plant.

Salsify, or the common sort of goats-beard, is of a very long oval figure, as if it were cods all over streaked, and engraven in the spaces between the streaks, which are sharp pointed towards the end. Mortimer, Husbandry.

SALSOACID. adj. [salsus and acidus, Lat.] Having a taste compounded of saltness and sourness.

The salsoacids help its passing off; as sal prunel. Floyer.

SALSGINOUS.† adj. [salsuginex, Fr. Cotgrave; from salsugo, Lat.] Saltish; somewhat salt.

The distinction of salts, whereby they are discriminated into acid, volatile, or salsuginous, if I may so call the fugitive salts of animal substances, and fixed or alcalize, may appear of much use in natural philosophy. Boyle.

SALT.† n. s. [salt, Goth. pealt, Sax. sal, Lat. sel, French.]

1. Salt is a body whose two essential properties seem to be, dissolubility in water, and a pungent sapor: it is an active incombustible substance: it gives all bodies consistence, and preserves them from corruption, and occasions all the variety of tastes. There are three kinds of salts, fixed, volatile, and essential:

fixed salt is drawn by calcining the matter, then boiling the ashes in a good deal of water : after this the solution is filtrated, and all the moisture evaporated, when the salt remains in a dry form at the bottom : this is called a lixivious salt. Volatile salt is that drawn chiefly from the parts of animals, and some putrified parts of vegetables : it rises easily, and is the most volatile of any. The essential salt is drawn from the juice of plants by crystallization.

Harris.

Is not discourse, manhood, learning, gentleness, virtue, and liberality, the spice and salt that seasons a man ?

Shakspeare.

He perfidiously has given up,

For certain drops of salt, your city Rome,

To his wife and mother.

Shakspeare, Coriol.

Since salts differ much, some being first so volatile, some acid, and some urinous, the two qualities wherein they agree are, that it is easily dissolvable in water, and affects the palate with a sapour, good or evil.

Boyle.

A particle of salt may be compared to a chaos, being dense, hard, dry, and earthy in the centre, and rare, soft, and moist in the circumference.

Newton, Opt.

Salts are bodies friable and brittle, in some degree pellicid, sharp or pungent to the taste, and dissolvable in water ; but after that is evaporated, incorporating, crystallizing, and forming themselves into angular figures.

Woodward.

2. Taste ; smack.

Though we are justices and doctors, and churchmen, Mr. Page, we have some salt of our youth in us ; we are the sons of women.

Shakspeare, M. W. of Windsor.

3. Wit ; merriment.

Salt and smartness,

Tillotson, Serm. i. 79.

SALT. adj.

1. Having the taste of salt : as, salt fish.

We were better parch in Africk sun,
Than in the pride and salt scorn of his eyes.

Shakspeare.

Thou old and true Menenius,

Thy tears are saller than a younger man's,
And venomous to thine eyes.

Shakspeare, Coriol.

2. Impregnated with salt.

Hang him, mechanical salt butter rogue : I will awe him with my cudgel.

Shakspeare, M. W. of Windsor.

It hath been observed by the ancients, that salt water will dissolve salt put into it in less time than fresh water.

Bacon.

A leap into salt water very often gives a new motion to the spirit, and a new turn to the blood.

Addison.

In Cheshire they improve their lands by letting out the water of the salt springs on them, always after rain.

Mortimer.

3. Abounding with salt.

He shall inhabit the parched places in the wilderness, in a salt land and not inhabited.

Jer. xvii. 6.

4. [Salax, Lat.] Lecherous ; salacious.

Be a whore still :

Make use of thy salt hours, season the slaves

For tubs and baths ; bring down the rose-cheek'd youth

To the tub fast, and the diet.

Shakspeare, Timon.

All the charms of love,

Salt Cleopatra, soften thy woe lip !

Shakspeare.

This new-married man, approaching here,

Whose salt imagination yet hath wrong'd

Your well-defended honour, you must pardon.

Shakspeare.

To SALT.† v. a. [from the noun.] To season with salt.

If she ship have lost its savour, wherewith shall it be salted ?

St. Matt. v. 13.

If the offering was of flesh, it was salted thrice.

Brown.

1. The act of dancing or jumping.

The locusts being ordained for saltation, their hinder legs do far exceed the others.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

2. Beat ; palpitation.

If the great artery be hurt, you will discover it by its saltation and florid colour.

Wiseman, Surgery.

SALTCAT. n. s.

Many give a lump of salt, which they usually call a saltcat, made at the salt-erns, which makes the pigeons much affect the place.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

SALTCELLAR.† n. s. [not from salt and cellar, which Dr. Johnson has given as the etymon ; but from the Fr. saliere, pleonastically used, as that word signifies a saltcellar. See Cotgrave. Our old word, as Mr. Mason also has observed, was simply saler ; as in the Pr. Parv. The pleonasm is also old. Sir H. Wotton uses it in 1633.] Vessel of salt set on the table.

I send you a triangular salt-cellar, and the top of an amber ring.

Wotton, Rem. p. 464.

When any salt is spilt on the table-cloth, shake it out into the salt-cellar.

Swift, Dir. to the Butler.

SALT.† n. s. [from salt.]

1. One who salts.

I return to the embalming of the Egyptians ; — and shall next proceed to speak of the surgeon or embalmer, and all other inferior officers under him, such as the dissector, emboweller, pollinctor, salter, and other dependent servants.

Greenhill on Embalming, p. 283.

2. One who sells salt.

After these local names, the most have been derived from occupations ; as smith, salter, armourer.

Camden, Rem.

SALTERN. n. s. A saltwork.

A saltcat made at the salterns.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

SALTIER. n. s. [saultiere, French.] Term of heraldry.

A saltier is in the form of a St. Andrew's cross, and by some is taken to be an engine to take wild beasts : in French it is called un sautoir : it is an honourable bearing.

Peacham.

SALTINBANCO. n. s. [saltare in banco,] to climb on a bench, as a mountebank mounts a bank or bench.] A quack or mountebank.

Saltinbancoes, quacksalvers, and charlatans, deceive them : were Æsop alive, the Piazza and Pont-neuf could not speak their fallacies.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

He play'd the saltinbanco's part,
Transform'd t' a Frenchman by my art.

Hudibras.

SALTISH.† adj. [from salt.] Somewhat salt.

When billows make a breach and beate the banks adowne,
Doth not the saltish surge then beate the banks adowne ?

Mir. for Mag. p. 219.

Soils of a saltish nature improve sandy grounds.

Mortimer.

SALTLESS. adj. [from salt.] Insipid ; not tasting of salt.

SALTLY. adv. [from salt.] With taste of salt ; in a salt manner.

SALTNESS.† n. s. [from salt.]

1. Taste of salt.

Salt water passing through earth, through ten vessels, one within another, hath not lost its saltness, so as to become potable ; but drained through twenty, becomes fresh.

Bacon.

Some think their wits have been asleep, except they dart out somewhat that is piquant and to the quick : men ought to find the difference between saltiness and bitterness.

Bacon.

2. State of being salt.

If I had buried him in a wave at sea,

I would not to the saltiness of his grave

Have added the least tear.

Beaumont and Fl. Fair Maid of the Inn.

SALT-PAN.† n. s. [salt and pan, or pit.]

SALT-PIT.† n. s. Pit where salt is got.

Moab and Ammon shall be as the breeding of nettles, salt-pits, and a perpetual desolation.

Zeph. ii. 9.

Cicero prettily calls them salinas salt-pans, that you may extract salt out of, and sprinkle where you please.

Bacon.

The stratum lay at about twenty-five fathom, by the duke of Somerset's salt-pans near Whitehaven.

Woodward on Fossils.

SALPETRE. n. s. [sal petre, Latin ; sal petre, Fr.] Nitre.

Nitre, or salpetre, having a crude and windy spirit, by the heat of the fire suddenly dilateth.

Bacon.

Locke.

SALT-WORK.* n. s. A saltern ; a place where salt is made.

These salt-works, and a mint that is established at the same place, have rendered this town [Hall] almost as populous as Inspruck itself.

Addison on Italy.

SALTY.* adj. [from salt.] Somewhat salt.

Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

SALVABILITY.† n. s. [from salvable.] Possibility of being received to everlasting life.

The main principle of his religion, as a papist, is more destructive of the comfort of a conjugal society, than are the principles of most heretics, yea than those of pagans or atheists : for, holding that there is no salvability, but in the church ; and that none is in the church, but such as acknowledge subjection to the see of Rome.

Sanderson, C. of Consc. p. 3.

Why do we Christians so fiercely argue against the salvability of each other, as if it were our wish that all should be damned, but those of our particular sect ?

Decay of Chr. Piety.

SALVABLE.† adj. [salvable, old Fr. Roq. but merely in the sense of salutary ; salvo, Lat. to save.] Possible to be saved.

Our wild fancies about God's decrees have in event reprobated more than those decrees, and have bid fair to the damning of many whom those left salvable.

Decay of Chr. Piety.

SALVAGE.† adj. [sauvage, old French ; selvaggio, Ital. from silva, Lat.] Wild ; rude ; cruel. It is now spoken and written savage : which see.

SALVAGE.* n. s. [salvaige, old Fr. "Ce qui revient de droit à ceux qui ont aidé à sauver des marchandises du naufrage d'un vaisseau échoué, ou des flammes." Roq.] Recompense allowed by the law for saving goods from a wreck.

If any ship be lost on the shore, and the goods come to land, they shall presently be delivered to the merchants, they paying only a reasonable reward to those that saved and preserved them, which is intitled salvage. Blackstone.

SALVATION.† n. s. [salvatio, old Fr. pardon. Kelham: salvatio, low Lat. vita æterna: from salvo, Lat.] Preservation from eternal death; reception to the happiness of heaven.

As life and death, mercy and wrath, are matters of understanding or knowledge, all men's salvation, and all men's endless perdition, are things so opposite, that whosoever doth affirm the one must necessarily deny the other. Hooker.

His most High,
Wrapp'd in a balmy cloud with winged steeds,
Did, as thou saw'st, receive; to walk with God
High in salvation, and the climes of bliss,
Exempt from death. Milton, P. L.

SALVATORY. n. s. [salvatoire, Fr.] A place where any thing is preserved.

I consider the admirable powers of sensation, phantasy, and memory, in what salvatories or repositories the species of things past are conserved.

SALUBRIOUS. adj. [salubris, Latin.] Wholesome; healthful; promoting health.

The warm limbeck draws Salubrious waters from the nocent brood. Philips.

SALUBRIOUSLY.* adv. [from salubrious.] So as to promote health.

Does not the sweat of the mason and carpenter, who toil in order to partake the sweat of the peasant, flow as pleasantly and as salubriously, in the construction and repair of the majestic edifices of religion, as in the painted booths and sordid sties of vice and luxury.

Burke on the Fr. Revolution.
SALUBRITY.† n. s. [salubrité, Fr. Cotgrave.] Wholesomeness; healthfulness. Bullockar, ed. 1656.

SALVE.† n. s. [This word is originally and properly salv, which having salves in the plural, the singular in time was borrowed from it; realf, Saxon; undoubtedly from salvus, Lat. Dr. Johnson.—The Latin word means merely safe; but the Goth. salbon is to anoint; salbona, an ointment; salbe, German, the same. The change of b into v is not infrequent.]

1. A glutinous matter applied to wounds and hurts; an emplaster.

Let us hence, my sov'reign, to provide
A salve for any sore that may betide.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.
Sleep is pain's easiest salve, and doth fulfil
All offices of death, except to kill. Donne.

Go study salve and treacle; ply
Your tenant's leg, or his sore eye. Cleaveland.

The royal sword thus drawn has cur'd a wound,
For which no other salve could have been found. Waller.

Though most were sorely wounded, none were slain;
The surgeons soon despoil'd them of their arms,
And some with salves they cure. Dryden.

2. Help; remedy.
If they shall excommunicate me, hath the doctrine of meekness any salve for me then? Hammond.

To SALVE.† v. a. [salbon, Goth. salben, Germ. realfan, Saxon, to anoint.]

1. To cure with medicaments applied.
Many skilful leeches him abide,
To salve his hurts. Spenser, F. Q.

It should be to little purpose for them to salve the wound, by making protestations in disgrace of their own actions. Hooker.

The which if I perform, and do survive,
I do beseech your majesty may salve
The long-grown wounds of my intemperance. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

2. To help; to remedy.

Some seek to salve their blotted name
With others' blot, till all do taste of shame. Sidney.

Our mother-tongue, which truly of itself is both full enough for prose, and stately enough for verse, hath long time been counted most bare and barren of both; which default, when as some endeavoured to salve and recure, they patched up the holes with rags from other languages. Ep. to Spenser's Shep. Cal.

3. To help or save by a salvo, an excuse or reservation.

Ignorant I am not how this is salved: they do it but after the truth is made manifest. Hooker.

The schoolmen were like the astronomers, who, to salve phenomena, framed to their conceit eccentricities and epicycles; so they, to salve the practice of the church, had devised a great number of strange positions. Bacon.

There must be another state to make up the inequalities of this, and salve all irregular appearances. Atterbury.

This conduct might give Horace the hint to say, that when Homer was at a loss to bring any difficult matter to an issue, he laid his hero asleep, and this salved all difficulty. Broome.

4. [From salvo, Latin.] To salute. Obsolete.

That stranger knight in presence came,
And goodly salved them, who nought again
Him answered as courtesy became. Spenser, F. Q.

SALVER. n. s. [A vessel, I suppose, used at first to carry away or save what was left.] A plate on which any thing is presented.

He has printed them in such a portable volume, that many of them may be ranged together on a single plate; and is of opinion, that a salver of Spectators would be as acceptable an entertainment for the ladies, as a salver of sweetmeats. Addison.

Between each act the trembling salvers ring,
From soup to sweet wine. Pope.

SALVO. n. s. [from salvo jure, Latin, a form used in granting any thing: as, salvo jure pater.] An exception; a reservation; an excuse.

They admit many salves, cautions, and reservations, so as they cross not the chief design. King Charles.

It will be heard if he cannot bring himself off at last with some salvo or distinction, and be his own confessor. L'Estrange.

If others of a more serious turn join with us deliberately in their religious professions of loyalty, with any private salves or evasions, they would do well to consider those maxims in which all casuists are agreed. Addison.

SALUTARINESS. n. s. [from salutary.] Wholesomeness; quality of contributing to health or safety.

SALUTARY. adj. [salutaire, Fr. salutaris, Lat.] Wholesome; healthful; safe; advantageous; contributing to health or safety.

The gardens, yards, and avenues are dry and clean; and so more salutary as more elegant. Ray.
It was want of faith in our Saviour's countrymen, which hindered him from shedding among them the salutary emanations of his divine virtue; and he did not many mighty works there, because of their unbelief. Beniley.

SALUTATION. n. s. [salutation, Fr. salu- tatio, Lat.] The act or style of saluting; greeting.

The early village cock
Hath twice done salutation to the morn. Shakespeare, Rich. III.

Thy kingdom's peers
Speak my salutation in their minds;
Whose voices I desire aloud with mine,
Hail, king of Scotland! Shakespeare, Macbeth.

On her the angel hail
Bestow'd, the holy salutation used
Long after to blest Mary. Milton, P. L.

In all public meetings, or private addresses, use those forms of salutation, reverence, and decency, usual amongst the most sober persons.

Ep. Taylor, Rule of Living Holy.
Court and state he wisely shuns;
Nor brib'd, to servile salutations runs. Dryden, Hor.

SALUTATORY.* n. s. [salutatorium, low Lat.] Place of greeting. Not in use.

Coming to the bishop with supplication into the salutatory, some out porch of the church.

Milton, Of Ref. in Eng. B. 2.
To SALUTE.† v. a. [saluto, Lat. saluer, Fr. Our old writers accordingly follow the French, and write salue, or saluw; as Gower and Chaucer. Salew is also used by Spenser, F. Q. iv. vi. 25.]

1. To greet; to hail.
One hour hence
Shall salute your grace of York as mother. Shakespeare, Rich. III.

When ye come into an house, salute it. St. Matthew, x. 12.

2. To please; to gratify.
Would I had no being,
If this salute my blood a jot: it faints me,
To think what follows. Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.
The golden sun salutes the morn,
And, having gilt the ocean with his beams,
Gallops the zodiack in his glist'ring coach. Titus And.

3. To kiss.
You have the prettiest tip of a finger — I must take the freedom to salute it. Addison, Drummer.

SALUTE. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Salutation; greeting.
The custom of praying for those that sneeze is more ancient than these opinions hereof: so that not any one disease has been the occasion of this salute and deprecation. Brown.

O, what avails me now that honour high,
To have conceiv'd of God; or that salute,
Hail, highly favour'd, among women blest! Milton, P. R.

Continual salutes and addresses entertaining him all the way, kept him from saving so great a life, but with one glance of his eye upon the paper, till he came to the fatal place where he was stabbed. South.

I shall not trouble my reader with the first salutes of our three friends. Addison.

2. A kiss.
There cold salutes, but here a lover's kiss. Roscommon.

SALUTE.† n. s. [from salute.] He who salutes.

SALUTIFEROUS.† adj. [salutifer, Lat.] Healthy; bringing health.

We may judge of the malice and subtlety of the grand deceiver, who would render that salutiferous food unwholesome.

Ricaut, State of the Gr. Ch. (1679.) p. 437.
The king commanded him to go to the south of France, believing that nothing would contribute more to the restoring of his former vigour than the gentle salutiferous air of Montpellier.

Dennis, Letters.

SAMA'RITAN.* n. s. One of an ancient sect among the Jews, still subsisting in some parts of the Levant, under the same name.

Chambers.

A certain Samaritan, as he journeyed, came where he was.

St. Luke, x. 93.

Esdras changed the old [Hebrew] character into that we now use, leaving the other to the Samaritans.

Walton, Consid. Considered, p. 278.

SAMA'RITAN.* adj. Pertaining to the Samaritans; denoting the ancient sort of Hebrew characters, or alphabet.

All agree in this, that the present Samaritan characters were anciently used among the Jews.

Walton, Consid. Considered, p. 279.

SAMARRA.* See SIMAR.

SAME.† adj. [Serenius and Dr. Jamieson consider the Su. Goth. sam, con, a particle denoting unity, equality, or identity, as the origin of the word, which is the Icel. same; M. Goth. sama, samo.]

1. Not different; not another; identical; being of the like kind, sort, or degree.
Miso, as spitefully as her rotten voice could utter it, set forth the same sins of Amphialtus.

Sidney.

The tenour of man's woe

Holds on the same.

Milton, P. L.

Th' eternal vigour is in all the same,

And ev'ry soul is fill'd with equal flame.

Dryden, Æn.

If itself had been coloured, it would have transmitted all visible objects tinged with the same colour; as we see whatever is beheld through a coloured glass, appears of the same colour with the glass.

Ray on the Creation.

The merchant does not keep money by him; but if you consider what money must be lodged in the banker's hands, the case will be much the same.

Locke.

The same plant produceth as great a variety of juices as there is in the same animal.

Arbutnot on Aliments.

2. That which was mentioned before.

Do but think how well the same he spends,
Who spends his blood his country to relieve.

Daniel.

SAME.* adv. [ram, Saxon; often used in composition; as, ram-mæle, agreeing together; ram-pýpcan, to work together; from the Su. Goth. sam, con. See the etym. of the adjective. Spenser writes this word sam for the sake of his rhyme.] Together. Obsolete.

What concord had light and darke sam?

Or what peace has the lion with the lamb?

Spenser, Shep. Cal. May.

SAM'ENESS. n. s. [from same.]

1. Identity; the state of being not another; not different.

Difference of persuasion in matters of religion may easily fall out, where there is the sameness of duty, allegiance, and subjection.

King Charles.

2. Undistinguishable resemblance.

If all courts have a sameness in them, things may be as they were in my time, when all employments went to parliament-men's friends.

Swift.

SAM'ITE.* n. s. [samet, samit, old Fr. "éttoffe de soie." Roq. sammét, Germ. velvet. Morin traces it to the low Lat. samitum, or examitum; and that to the Gr. ἐξάμιτρος, used by Nicetas for a sort of silk; which is formed of $\frac{1}{2}$, six, and μίτρος, a thread; meaning therefore composed of six threads.] A sort of silk stuff. Obsolete.

In an over gilt samite

Yclad she was. Chaucer, Rom. R. 873.

In silken samite she was light array'd,

And her fayre lockes were woven up in gold.

Spenser, F. Q. iii. xii. 13.

SAM'LET. n. s. [salmonet, or salmonlet.] A little salmon.

A salmon after he is got into the sea, becomes, from a salmet, not so big as a gudgeon, to be a salmon, in as short a time as a gosling becomes a goose.

Walton, Angler.

SAM'PHIRE.† n. s. [saint Pierre, Fr. q. d. herba sancti Petri. Minsheu. It is in our old books sampire, or sampier; as in Barret, Minsheu, and Sherwood; the last of whom also terms it, herbe de S. Pierre.] A plant preserved in pickle.

This plant grows in great plenty upon the rocks near the sea-shore, where it is washed by the salt-water. It is greatly esteemed for pickling, and is sometimes used in medicine.

Miller.

Half way down

Hangs one that gathers samphire: dreadful trade!
Methinks he seems no bigger than his head.

Shakespeare.

SAMPLE.† n. s. [from example.]

1. A specimen; a part of the whole shown that judgement may be made of the whole.

He entreated them to tarry but two days, and he himself would bring them a sample of the oar.

Raleigh.

I have not engaged myself to any: I am not loaded with a full cargo: 'tis sufficient if I bring a sample of some goods in this voyage.

Dryden.

I design this but for a sample of what I hope more fully to discuss.

Woodward, Nat. Hist.

Determinations of justice were very summary and decisive, and generally put an end to the vexations of a law-suit by the ruin both of plaintiff and defendant: travellers have recorded some samples of this kind.

Addison.

From most bodies

Some little bits ask leave to flow;

And, as through these canals they roll,

Bring up a sample of the whole.

Prior.

2. Example.

Thus he concludes: and every hardy knight

His sample follow'd.

Fairfax.

TO SAM'PLE.† v. a. To show something similar; to example.

1. A pattern of work; a specimen.

The sampleris of heavenly things.

Wicliffe, Heb. ix.

O love, why do'st thou in thy beautiful sampler set such a work for my desire to set out, which is impossible?

Sidney.

We created with our needles both one flower,
Both on one sampler, sitting on one cushion;
Both warbling of one song, both in one key,
As if our hands, our sides, voices and minds
Had been incorporate.

Shakespeare.

Fair Philomela, she but lost her tongue,
And in a tedious sampler sew'd her mind.

Titus Andronicus.

You have samplers how to fit yourselves with personal prayers upon any private occurrences.

Ep. Priderux, Euchol. p. 116.

2. A piece worked by young girls for improvement.

Coarse complexions,
And cheeks of sorry grain, will serve to ply
The sampler, and to tease the housewife's wool.

Milton, Comus.

I saw her sober over a sampler, or gay over a jointed baby.

Pope.

SANABLE.† adj. [sanable, old French; sanabilis, Latin.] Curable; susceptible of remedy; remediable.

The Holy Ghost sanctificating.

Barrow, vol. ii. S. 34.

SANCTIFICA'TION. n. s. [sanctification, Fr. from sanctifico, low Latin.]

1. The state of being freed, or act of freeing from the dominion of sin for the time to come.

The grace of his sanctification and life, which was first received in him, might pass from him to his whole race, as malediction came from Adam unto all mankind.

Hooker.

2. The act of making holy; consecration.

The bishop kneels before the cross, and devoutly adores and kisses it: after this follows a long prayer for the sanctification of that new sign of the cross.

Sittingfleet.

SANCTIFIER. n. s. [from sanctify.] He that sanctifies or makes holy.

To be the sanctifier of a people, and to be their God, is all one.

Derham, Phys. Theol.

TO SANCTIFY. v. a. [sanctifier, French; sanctifico, Lat.]

1. To free from the power of sin for the time to come.

For if the blood of bulls, sprinkling the unclean, sanctifieth to the purifying of the flesh, how much more shall the blood of Christ? Heb. ix. 13.

2. To make holy.

What actions can express the intire purity of thought, which refines and sanctifies a virtuous man?

Addison.

3. To make a means of holiness.

The gospel, by not making many things unclean, as the law did, hath sanctified those things generally to all, which particularly each man to himself must sanctify by a reverend and holy use.

Hooker.

Those judgments God hath been pleased to send upon me, are so much the more welcome, as a means which his mercy hath sanctified so to me as to make me repent of that unjust act. King Charles.

Those external things are neither parts of our devotion, or by any strength in themselves direct causes of it; but the grace of God is pleased to move us by ways suitable to our nature, and to sanctify these sensible helps to higher purposes.

South.

4. To make free from guilt.

The holy man, amaz'd at what he saw,
Made haste to sanctify the bliss by law. Dryden.

5. To secure from violation.

Truth guards the poet, sanctifies the line. Pope.

SANCTIMONIOUS.† adj. [from sanctimonia, Lat.] Sainly; having the appearance of sanctity.

All sanctimonious ceremonies. Shaks. Tempest.

A grave and reverend gluttony, a sanctimonious avarice. Milton, Reas. of Ch. Gov. B. 1.

A sanctimonious pretence, under a pomp of form, without the grace of an inward integrity, will not serve the turn. L'Estrange.

SANCTIMONIOUSLY.* adv. [from sanctimonious.] With sanctimony.

Ye know, dear lady, since ye are mine,
How truly I have lov'd you, how sanctimoniously
Observ'd your honour!

Bacon, and Fl. Sea Voyage.

SANCTIMONIOUSNESS.* n. s. [from sanctimonious.] State or quality of being sanctimonious. Ash.

SANCTIMONY. n. s. [sanctimonia, Latin.] Holiness; scrupulous austerity; appearance of holiness.

If sanctimony, and a frail vow between an errant barbarian and a supersubtle Venetian, be not too hard for my wit, and all the tribe of hell, thou shalt enjoy her. Shaks. Othello.

Her pretence is a pilgrimage, which holy undertaking, with most austere sanctimony, she accomplished. Shakspeare.

There was great reason why all discreet princes should beware of yielding hasty belief to the robes of sanctimony. Raleigh.

SANCTION.† n. s. [sanction, Fr. sanctio, Lat.—“Sanction is essential to contracts; which, among the ancients, was done by killing a sacrifice.—We read in Tacitus, Suetonius, Plutarch, and others, of leagues sealed by drinking of blood. So Servius, the grammarian, will have sanctio to come a sanguine.” Bp. Reynolds, Serm. 1668. p. 17.]

1. The act of confirmation which gives to any thing its obligatory power; ratification.

I have kill'd a slave,
And of his blood caus'd to be mixt with wine:
Fill every man his bowl. There cannot be
A fitter drink to make this sanction in.

B. Jonson, Catil.

Against the publick sanctions of the peace,
With fates averse, the rout in arms resort,
To force their monarch. Dryden, Æn.

There needs no positive law or sanction of God to stamp an obliquity upon such a disobedience.

South.

By the laws of men, enacted by civil power, gratitude is not enforced; that is, not enjoined by the sanction of penalties, to be inflicted upon the person that shall not be found grateful. South.

The satisfactions of the Christian life, in its present practice and future hopes, are not the mere raptures of enthusiasm, as the strictest professors of reason have added the sanction of their testimony. Watts.

This word is often made the sanction of an oath: it is reckoned a great commendation to be a man of honour. Swift.

Wanting sanction and authority, it is only yet a private work. Baker on Learning.

2. A law; a decree ratified. Improper.

'Tis the first sanction nature gave to man,

Each other to assist in what they can. Denham.

TO SANCTION.* v. a. [from the noun.]

To give a sanction to.

Tests against old principles, sanctioned by the laws. Burke, Appeal from the new to the old Whigs.

SANCTITUDE. n. s. [from sanctus, Latin.]

Holiness; goodness; saintliness.

In their looks divine

The image of their glorious Maker shone,

Truth, wisdom, sanctitude, serene and pure. Milton, P. L.

SANCTITY. n. s. [sanctitas, Latin.]

1. Holiness; the state of being holy.

At his touch,

Such sanctity hath heaven given his hand,

They presently amend. Shakspeare.

God attributes to place

No sanctity, if none be thither brought

By men who there frequent. Milton, P. L.

2. Goodness; the quality of being good; purity; godliness.

This youth

I reliev'd with such sanctity of love,

And to his image, which methought did promise

Most venerable worth, did I devotion. Shaks.

It was an observation of the ancient Romans, that their empire had not more increased by the strength of their arms than the sanctity of their manners. Addison.

3. Saint; holy being.

About him all the sanctities of heaven

Stood thick as stars, and from his sight receiv'd

Beatitude past utterance. Milton, P. L.

TO SANCTUARIZE. v. a. [from sanctuary.]

To shelter by means of sacred privileges. Not in use.

No place indeed should murder sanctuarize.

Shakspeare.

SANCTUARY. n. s. [sanctuaire, French; sanctuarium, Lat.]

1. A holy place; holy ground. Properly the penetralia, or most retired and awful part of a temple.

Having waste ground enough,

Shall we desire to raze the sanctuary,

And pitch our evils there? Shakspeare.

They often plac'd

Within his sanctuary itself his shrines.

Milton, P. L.

Let it not be imagined, that they contribute nothing to the happiness of the country who only serve God in the duties of a holy life, who attend his sanctuary, and daily address his goodness.

Rogers, Serm.

2. A place of protection; a sacred asylum: whence a sanctuary man, one who takes shelter in a holy place.

Come, my boy, we will to sanctuary.

Shakspeare, Rich. III.

I'll hence forthwith unto the sanctuary,

To save at least the heir of Edward's right.

Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

Oft have I heard of sanctuary men;

But sanctuary children, ne'er till now.

Shakspeare, Rich. III.

He fled to Beverly, where he and divers of his company registered themselves sanctuary men.

Bacon, Hen. VII.

Howsoever the sanctuary man was protected from his creditors, yet his goods out of sanctuary should not.

Bacon, Hen. VII.

3. Shelter; protection.

What are the bulls to the frogs, or the lakes to the meadows? Very much, says the frog; for he that's worsted will be sure to take sanctuary in the fens. L'Estrange.

The admirable works of painting were made fuel for the fire; but some reliques of it took sanctuary under ground, and escaped the common destiny. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

SAND.† n. s. [sand, Saxon; sand, Danish and Dutch.]

1. Particles of stone not conjoined, or stone broken to powder.

That finer matter called sand, is no other than very small pebbles. Woodward.

Here 't' the sands

Thence I'll rake up, the post unsanctified.

Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Hark, the fatal followers do pursue!

The sands are number'd that make up my life:

Here must I stay, and here my life must end.

Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

Sand bath always its root in clay, and there be no veins of sand any great depth within the earth.

Bacon.

Calling for more paper to describe, king Philip shewed him the difference betwixt the ink box and sand box.

Howell.

If quicksilver be put into a convenient glass vessel, and that vessel exactly stopped, and kept for ten weeks in a sand furnace, whose heat may be constant, the corpuscles that constitute the quicksilver will, after innumerable revolutions, be so connected to one another, that they will appear in the form of a red powder.

Boyle.

Engag'd with money bags, as bold

As men with sand bags did of old. Hudibras.

The force of water casts gold out from the bowels of mountains, and exposes it among the sands of rivers. Dryden.

wich. Woodward.

Celia and I, the other day,

Walk'd o'er the sand hills to the sea. Prior.

2. Barren country covered with sands.

Most of his army being slain, he, with a few of his friends, sought to save themselves by flight over the desert sands.

Knolles.

Her sons spread

Beneath Gibraltar to the Libyan sands.

Milton, P. L.

So, where our wild Numidian wastes extend,

Sudden the impetuous hurricanes descend,

Wheel through the air, in circling eddies play,

Tear up the sands, and sweep whole plains away,

The helpless traveller, with wild surprise,

Sees the dry desert all around him rise,

And smother'd in the dusty whirlwind dies.

Addison.

TO SAND.* v. a. [from the noun.] To force or drive upon the sands.

Travellers and seamen, when they have been sanded or dashed on a rock, for ever after fear not that mischance only, but all such dangers whatsoever.

Burton, Anat. of Med. p. 148.

SANDAL. n. s. [sandale, Fr. sandalium, Lat.] A loose shoe.

Thus sung the uncouth swain to the oaks and rills,

While the still morn went out with sandals gray.

Milton, Lycidas.

From his robe

Flows light ineffable: his harp, his quiver,

And Lycian bow are gold: with golden sandals

His feet are shod. Prior.

The sandals of celestial mold,

Fledg'd with ambrosial plumes, and rich with gold,

Surround her feet. Pope, Odys.

But I should think of shallows and of flats. Shaks.
Safer shall he be on the sandy plains,
Than where castles mounted stand.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

A region so desert, dry, and sandy, that travellers are fain to carry water on their camels.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

Rough unwieldy earth, nor to the plough
Nor to the cattle kind, with sandy stones
And gravel, o'er-abounding.

Philips.

O'er sandy wilds where yellow harvests spread.

Pope.

2. Consisting of sand; unsolid.

Favour, so bottomed upon the sandy foundation of personal respects only, cannot be long lived.

Bacon to Villiers.

SANE.† adj. [sanus, Lat.] Sound; healthy. Baynard wrote a poem on preserving the body in a sane and sound state. It is also opposed to insane.

Its termination [that of delirium] is various. Even those, who have a strong hereditary taint, often remain perfectly sane for some years after the first attack.

Crichton on Mental Derangement, vol. i. p. 162.

SANG. The preterit of sing.

Then sang Moses and Israel this song unto the Lord.

Ezod. xv.

The next they sang, of all creation first.

Milton, P. L.

SANG-FROID.* n. s. [Fr.] Coolness; freedom from agitation: an affected phrase.

He could with the most perfect sang froid look up this admirable piece in his desk, and wait with philosophic patience for a favourable season to produce it.

Sheridan, Life of Swift, § 2.

He talks of his union, just as he does of his taxes and his savings, with as much sang-froid and ease, as if his wish and the enjoyment were exactly the same thing.

Burke on the State of the Nation.

SANGUIFEROUS. adj. [sanguifer, Lat.]

Conveying blood.
The fifth conjugation of the nerves is branched to the muscles of the face, particularly the cheeks, whose sanguiferous vessels it twists about.

Derham, Phys. Theol.

SANGUIFICA'TION. n. s. [sanguification, Fr. sanguis and facio, Latin.] The production of blood; the conversion of the chyle into blood.

Since the lungs are the chief instrument of sanguification, the animal that has that organ faulty can never have the vital juices, derived from the blood, in a good state.

Arbuthnot.

Asthmatic persons have voracious appetites, and consequently, for want of a right sanguification, are leucophlegmatic.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

SA'NGUIFER. n. s. [sanguis and facio, Lat.]

Producer of blood.

Bitters, like choler, are the best sanguifiers, and also the best febrifuges. Floyer on the Humours.

To SA'NGUIFY. v. n. [sanguis and facio, Lat.] To produce blood.

At the same time I think, I command; in inferior faculties, I walk, see, hear, digest, sanguify, and carnify, by the power of an individual soul.

Hale.

SA'NGUINARY. adj. [sanguinarius, Lat. sanguinaire, Fr. from sanguis, Lat.] Cruel; bloody; murderous.

We may not propagate religion by wars, or by sanguinary persecutions to force consciences.

Bacon.

The scene is now more sanguinary, and fuller of actors: never was such a confused mysterious civil war as this.

Howell.

Passion transforms us into a kind of savages, and makes us brutal and sanguinary.

Broome.

SA'NGUINARY.† n. s. [sanguinaire, Fr. Cotgrave; from sanguis, Lat.] An herb.

Ainsworth.

SA'NGUINE. adj. [sanguin, Fr. sanguineus, from sanguis, Lat.]

1. Red; having the colour of blood.

This fellow

Upbraided me about the rose I wear;
Saying, the sanguine colour of the leaves
Did represent my master's blushing cheeks.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

A stream of nectarous humour issuing flow'd Sanguine.

Milton, P. L.

Dire Tisiphone there keeps the ward,
Girt in her sanguine gown.

Dryden.

Her flag aloft, spread ruffling to the wind,
And sanguine streamers seem the flood to fire:
The weaver, charm'd with what his loom design'd,

Goes on to sea, and knows not to retire.

Dryden.

2. Abounding with blood more than any other humour; cheerful.

The choleric fell short of the longevity of the sanguine.

Brown.

Though these faults differ in their complexion as sanguine from melancholy, yet they are frequently united.

Gov. of the Tongue.

3. Warm; ardent; confident.

A set of sanguine tempers ridicule, in the number of fopperies, all such apprehensions.

Swift.

SA'NGUINE.† n. s. [from sanguis.]

1. Blood colour.

A griesly wound,

From which forth gush'd a stream of gore, blood thick,

That all her goodly garments stain'd around,

And in deep sanguine dy'd the grassy ground.

Spenser, F. Q.

2. The blood-stone, with which cutlers sanguine their hilts. [sanguine, Fr.]

Cotgrave.

To SA'NGUINE.* v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To taint of a sanguine colour; to varnish with sanguine. See BROWNELL.

What rapier? gilt, silvered, or sanguined?—

None but that varnish rapier, lest it should rain.

Minsheu, Span. Dict. Dialog. (1599), p. 3.

I would send

His face to the cutler's then, and have it sanguin'd;

'Twill look a great deal sweeter.

Beaumont, and Fl. Captain.

2. To stain with blood.

Nor you, ill sanguin'd with an innocent's blood!

Which my dear mistress' side so rudely rent,

Brothers in ill, shall 'scape your punishment.

Fanshew, Tr. of Past. Fid. p. 149.

SA'NGUINELY.* adv. [from sanguine.]

With sanguineness; ardently; confidently.

Statesmen and beauties are very rarely sensible of the gradations of their decay; and too sanguinely hoping to shine on in their meridian, often set with contempt and ridicule.

Ld. Chesterfield.

SA'NGUINEOUS. } n. s. [from sanguine.]

SANGUINITY. } Ardour; heat of expectation; confidence. Sanguinity is perhaps only used by Swift.

Rage, or phrensy it may be, in some perhaps natural courage, or sanguineness of temper in others; but true valour it is not, if it knows not as well to suffer as to do. That mind is truly great, and only that, which stands above the power of all extrinsic violence; which keeps itself a distinct principality, independent upon the outward man.

Decay of Chr. Piety.

I very much distrust your sanguinity.

Swift.

SA'NGUINEOUS. adj. [sanguineus, Latin;

sanguis, Fr.]

1. Constituting blood.

This animal of Plato containeth not only sanguineous and reparable particles, but is made up of veins, nerves, and arteries. Brown, Vulg. Err.

2. Abounding with blood.

A plethorick constitution, in which true blood abounds, is called sanguineous. Arbutnot.

SANHEDRIM.† n. s. [Hebrew: סנהדרין, Gr. synedrion, Lat.] The chief council among the Jews, consisting of seventy elders, over whom the high priest presided.

It may be probably hence gathered, that there was no such sanhedrim in these days, as the Jews conceive there always was in the most early times; for why should they go to her for judgement, if there were a court of seventy eminent persons then sitting at Shiloh? Patrick on Judges, iv. 5.

SANICLE. n. s. [sanicle, Fr. sanicula, Lat.] A plant.

SANIES. n. s. [Latin.] Thin matter; serous excretion.

It began with a round crack in the skin, without other matter than a little sanies. Wiseman, Surgery.

SANIOUS. adj. [from sanies.] Running a thin serous matter, not a well digested pus.

Observing the ulcer sanious, I proposed digestion as the only way to remove the pain. Wiseman.

SANITY. n. s. [sanitas, Lat.] Soundness of mind.

How pregnant, sometimes, his replies are! A happiness that often madness hits on, Which sanity and reason could not be So prosperously delivered of. Shaks. Hamlet.

SANK. The preterit of sink.

As if the opening of her mouth to Zelmane had opened some great floodgate of sorrow, whereof her heart could not abide the violent issue, she sank to the ground. Sidney.

Our men followed them close, took two ships, and gave divers others of their ships their death's wounds, whereof soon after they sank and perished. Bacon, War with Spain.

SANS. prep. [French.] Without. Out of use.

Last scene of all, That ends this strange eventful history, Is second childishness and mere oblivion, Sans teeth, sans eyes, sans taste, sans every thing. Shakspeare.

For nature so preposterously to err, Being not deficient, blind, or lame of sense, Sans witchcraft could not. Shaks. Othello.

SANSCRIT.* n. s. [Written sanskrit, sanskrit, sanskreet, sanskerrit, and shanskrit, by Europeans; and said to be compounded of san or sam, a preposition signifying completion, and skreet, for kreet, done, made, finished. See Wilkins's Heetopades, 1787. p. 294. The Indians write it samskrit, samskret, samscrudam, or samscred, as we learn from the Voyage of Paulino to the East Indies, where he resided several years till 1789.] The learned language of the bramins of India; the parent of all the Indian languages.

One Burzuvis, a physician, who had a surprising talent in learning several languages, particularly the sanskerrit, was introduced to him as the properest person to be employed to get a copy thereof.

Fraser, Cat. of Orient. MSS. cited by Wilkins. The translator is conscious, that this short account of the shanskrit is very defective.

Halhed, Code of Gent. Laws, Pref. p. xxxv.

SANTER.* See SAUNTER.

SANTO.N.* n. s. One of the Turkish priests; a kind of dervis, regarded by the vulgar as a saint. Santoun, old Fr. petit saint. Lacombe.

The dervis and other santouns or enthusiasts, being in the crowd, express their zeal by turning round so long together, and with such swiftness, as will hardly be credited.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 326.

There was formerly a santo, whose name was Barsia; which for the space of an hundred years very fervently applied himself to prayers.

Guardian, No. 148.

SAP. n. s. [jæpe, Saxon; sap, Dutch.] The vital juice of plants; the juice that circulates in trees and herbs.

Now sucking of the sap of herbs most sweet, Or of the dew, which yet on them does lie, Now in the same bathing his tender feet. Spenser.

Though now this grained face of mine be hid In sap consuming winter's drizzled snow, And all the conduits of my blood froze up, Yet hath my night of life some memory. Shaks.

Wound the bark of our fruit trees, Lest, being over-proud with sap and blood, With too much riches it confound itself. Shakspeare, Rich. II.

His presence had infused Into the plant scintil sap. Milton.

The sap which at the root is bred In trees, through all the boughs is spread. Waller. Vegetables consist of the same parts with animal substances, spirit, water, salt, oil, earth; all which are contained in the sap they derive from the earth. Arbutnot.

TO SAP. v. a. [sapper, Fr. zappare, Ital.] To undermine; to subvert by digging; to mine.

Their dwellings were sapp'd by floods, Their houses fell upon their household gods. Dryden.

TO SAP. v. n. To proceed by mine; to proceed invisibly.

For the better security of the troops, both assaults are carried on by sapping. Tuller.

In vain may heroes fight, and patriots rave, If secret gold saps on from knave to knave. Pope.

SAP.* n. s. [from the verb.] In military language, a sort of mine.

SAPHIRE. See SAPPHIRE.

SAP'ID. adj. [sapidus, Lat.] Tasteful; palatable; making a powerful stimulation upon the palate.

Thus camels, to make the water sapid, do raise the mud with their feet. Brown, Vulg. Err.

The most oily parts are not separated by a slight decoction, till they are disentangled from the salts; for if what remains of the subject, after the infusion and decoction be continued to be boiled down with the addition of fresh water, a fat, sapid, odorous, viscous, inflammable frothy water, will constantly be found floating a-top of the boiling liquor. Arbutnot.

SAP'IDITY.† [n. s. [from sapid.] Tasteful. SAP'IDNESS. ness; power of stimulating the palate.

As for their taste, if their nutriment be air, neither can it be an instrument thereof; for the body of that element is ingustible, and void of all sapidity. Brown, Vulg. Err.

When the Israelites fancied the sapidness and relish of the fleshpots, they longed to taste and to return. Bp. Taylor, Sermon. (1651.) p. 216.

If sapidness belong not to the mercurial principle of vegetables and animals, it will scarce be discriminated from their phlegm. Boyle.

SAPIENCE. n. s. [sapience, Fr. sapientia, Lat.] Wisdom; sagemess; knowledge.

By sapience, I mean what the ancients did by philosophy; the habit or disposition of mind which importeth the love of wisdom. Grew.

Ne only they that dwell in lowly dust, The sons of darkness and of ignorance; But they whom thou, great Jove, by doom unjust, Did'st to the top of honour erst advance: They now, pufft up with sdeignful insolence, Despise the brood of blessed sapience. Spenser.

King James, of immortal memory, among all the lovers and admirers of divine and human sapience, accomplished at Theobalds his own days on earth. Wotton.

Because enterprises guided by ill counsels have equal success to those by the best judgement conducted, therefore had violence the same external figure with sapience. Raleigh.

Sapience and love Immense, and all the Father in him shone. Milton, P. I.

O sovran, virtuous, precious of all trees In Paradise! of operation blest To sapience. Milton, P. I.

Many a wretch in Bedlam, Though perhaps among the rout He wildly flings his filth about, Still has gratitude and sapience, To spare the folks that give them ha'pence. Swift.

SAP'IENT.† adj. [sapiens, Lat. sapient, old Fr. Rog. Gloss. Suppl.] Wise; sage. Where the sapient king held dalliance. Milton, P. L.

SAP'IENTIAL.* adj. [from sapientia, Lat.] Affording lessons of wisdom.

Solomon's sapiential tractate of the sovereign good. Bp. Richardson on the O. Test. p. 309.

Open your bibles, where you will, in all the sapiential or prophetic books. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 66.

SAP'LESS.† adj. [jæplear, Saxon; saploos, Dutch.]

1. Wanting sap; wanting vital juice. Pitiless arms, like to a wither'd vine, That droops his sapless branches to the ground. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

The tree of knowledge, blasted by disputes, Produces sapless leaves instead of fruits. Denham.

No less are they out of the way in philosophy, pestering their heads with the sapless dotages of old Paris and Salamanca. Milton, Apol. for Smectymn. § 10.

This single stick was full of sap; but now in vain does art tie that withered bundle of twigs to its sapless trunk. Swift.

In these sapless pages he has scattered a mark of his great learning! Bentley, Phil. Lips. § 41.

2. Dry; old; husky. If by this bribe, well plac'd, he would ensnare Some sapless usurer that wants an heir. Dryden, Juv.

SAP'LING. n. s. [from sap.] A young tree; a young plant.

Look how I am bewitch'd; behold, mine arm Is, like a blasted sapling, wither'd up. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

Nurse the saplings tall, and curl the grove With ringlets quaint. Milton, Arcades.

A sapling pine he wrench'd from out the ground, The readiest weapon that his fury found. Dryden.

What planter will attempt to yoke A sapling with a falling oak? Swift.

Slouch turn'd his head, saw his wife's vigorous hand

Wielding her oaken sapling of command. King.

SAPONA'CEOUS. adj. [from sapo, Latin, SAPONARY. sap.] Soapy; resembling soap; having the qualities of soap.

By digesting a solution of salt of tartar with oil of almonds, I could reduce them to a soft sapony substance. Boyle.

SA'RDDEL.
SA'RDINE Stone. } n. s. A sort of precious stone.
SA'RDIOUS.

He that sat was to look upon like a jasper and a sardine stone. Rev. iv. 3.

Thou shalt set it in four rows of stones; the first row shall be a sardius. Exod. xxviii. 17.

SARDO'NIAN, or SARDO'NICK.* adj. [from sardon, a herb of Sardinia, resembling smallage; which, being eaten by men, is said to contract the muscles and excite painful and dangerous laughter.] Forced, or feigned, as applied to laughter, smiles, or grin.

The villain — with Sardonian smile
 Laughing on her, his false intent to shade,
 Gan forth to lay his bayte her to beguile.

It is then but a Sardonian laughter that my refute trank up at our complete antichrist.

By. Hall, Hon. of the Marr. Clerg. p. 282.
 Quivering fears, heart-tearing cares,

Anxious sighs, untimely tears,
 Fly, fly to courts;
 Fly to fond worldling's sports,
 Where strain'd sardonick smiles are glosing still,
 And grief is forc'd to laugh against her will.

The scornful, ferocious, sardonick grin of a bloody ruffian. Wolton, Rem. p. 391.
Burke on a Regicide Peace.

SA'RDONYX. n. s. A precious stone.

The onyx is an accidental variety of the agat kind: 'tis of a dark horny colour, in which is a plate of a bluish white, and sometimes of red:
 when on one or both sides the white there happens to lie also a plate of a reddish colour, the jewellers call the stone a sardonyx. Woodward.

SARK.† n. s. [γάρκ, γήρκ, Sax. saerck, Su.
 Goth.] A common word, in our northern counties, for a shirt or shift.

Flaunting beaus gang with their breasts open,
 and their sarks over their waistcoats.

SARN. n. s. A British word for pavement or stepping-stones, still used in the same sense in Berkshire and Hampshire.

SA'RPLIER. n. s. [sarpilliere, French.] A piece of canvas for wrapping up wares;
 a packing-cloth. Bailey.

SA'RASINE. n. s. [In botany.] A kind of birthwort. Bailey.

SA'RSA. } n. s. Both a tree and SARSAPARE'LLA. } an herb. Ainsworth.

SARSE.† n. s. [Perhaps because made of sarcenet. Dr. Johnson. — Rather from the Fr. sassure, which Cotgrave renders a searce.] A sort of fine lawn sieve.

Barret, 1580.
To SARSE. v. a. [sasser, Fr.] To sift through a sarse or searse. Bailey.

SART. n. s. [In agriculture.] A piece of woodland turned into arable. Bailey.

SARTORIUS.* n. s. [from sartor, Latin, a tailor.] The muscle which serves to throw one leg across the other.

The sartorius, or tailor's muscle, rising from the spine, running diagonally across the thigh, and taking hold of the inside of the main bone of the leg, a little below the knee, enables us, by its contraction, to throw one leg and thigh over the other; giving effect, at the same time, to the ball and socket joint at the hip, and the hinge-joint at the knee. Paley, Nat. Theol. ch. 9.

SASH.† n. s. [Of this word the etymologists give no account: I suppose it comes from spache, of scavoir, to know, a sash worn being a mark of distinction; and a sash-window being made particularly for the sake of seeing and being seen. Dr. Johnson. — The word has certainly no such origin as what Dr.

 Johnson has given. We have adopted the word, in the first instance, from the wrapper or turban of the East, which Sir Thomas Herbert calls the shash:
 "Their [the Indian Mahometans'] habit is a quilted coat of calico tyed under the left arm, a small shash, small in comparison of that worn by Turk and Persian, upon their heads, &c." Trav.
 p. 44. "Their head is wreathed with a small shash, which usually is white."
 p. 45. "About their heads [in Java] they sometimes wreath a valuable shash."
 p. 365. The word continued to be thus written long afterwards: "Shashes and broad hats came into fashion." Echard, Observ. on the Answ. to the Cont. of the Clergy, 1696, p. 169. This last use of the word denotes the sash, which a clergyman, in full dress, still wears. —
 To the second use of sash, the old French word chassis perhaps gave rise; which, Cotgrave says, is "a frame of wood for a window." And this also was written shash. "Casements — where now whole shashes are, &c." Cotton,
 Wonders of the Peake, 1681, p. 82.]

1. A belt worn by way of distinction; a silken band worn by officers in the army, and by the clergy over their cassocks; a riband worn round the waist
 by ladies.

The epheod — did gird the tunick like a sash.

Stackhouse, Hist. of the Bible, B. 4. ch. 2.

She sees him now in sash and solitaire
 March in review with Milo's strut and stare.

Neville, Imit. of Juvenal, p. 70.

2. A window so formed as to be let up and down by pulleys.

She ventures now to lift the sash;

The window is her proper sphere. Swift.

She broke a pane in the sash window that looked into the yard. Swift.

To SASH.* v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To dress with a sash.

They are — so sashed and plumed, that they are grown infinitely more insolent in their fine clothes, even than they were in their rags.

Burke on a Regicide Peace.

2. To furnish with sash windows.

SA'SHOON. n. s. A kind of leather stuffing put into a boot for the wearer's ease. Ainsworth.

SA'SSAFRAS. n. s. A tree. The wood is medicinal.

SASSE.* n. s. [sas, Dutch.] A kind of sluice, or lock, on navigable rivers.
 The word occurs in our old statutes.

Sir Richard Brown is much concerned against Sir N. Crisp's project of making a great sasse in the king's lands about Deptford, (1662.)

Pepys's Mem. and Diary, vol. i. p. 129.

SAT. The preterite of sit.

The picture of fair Venus, that
 For which, men say, the goddess sat,
 Was lost; till Lely from your look
 Again that glorious image took.

I answered not the Rehearsal, because I knew the author sat to himself when he drew the picture, and was the very Bays of his own farce. Dryden.

SAT'AN.* n. s. [Hebrew; meaning an enemy, a persecutor, an accuser.] The devil.

The great dragon was cast out, that old serpent, called the devil and Satan, which deceived the whole world. Rev. xii. 9.

The Hebrews call Satan the old serpent.

SATA'NICAL.* adj. [from Satan.] Be-SATA'NICK. } longing to the devil;
 proceeding from the devil; evil; false;
 malicious.

Drawn to yield to Satanical temptations.

Cataker, Spirit. Watch, (1622,) p. 58.
 The faint Satanick host.

Milton, P. L.
 His weakness shall overcome Satanick strength.

Milton, P. R.

Magical and Satanical delusions.

Hallywell, Sav. of Souls, p. 60.

Now we are upon the subject of tortures, it is impossible to forget that depth of Satan, the Inquisition. For Satanical it is, by the conjunction of three qualities: indefatigable diligence, profound subtilty, and inhuman cruelty.

Trapp, Popery Truly Stated, P. ii. § 12.

SATA'NICAL.* adv. [from satanical.]
 With malice or wickedness suiting the devil; diabolically.

Instead of a sense of the wickedness of the treason, they fell rather satanically to argue for the justification of the same.

Proceed. against Garnet, (1606,) S. 4. b.
 This spiritual assassnacy, this deepest dye of blood being most satanically designed on souls.

Hammond, Works, iv. 470.

SA'TANISM.* n. s. [from Satan.] A diabolical disposition.

So mild was Moses' countenance, when he pray'd
 For them whose Satanism his power gainsaid.

Eleg. on Donne's Death, (Poems, 1650,) C. c. 3.

SA'TANIST.* n. s. [from Satan.] A wicked person.

There shall be fantastical babblers, and deceitful Satanists, in these last times, whose words and deeds are all falsehood and lies.

Granger on Eccl. (1621,) p. 343.

SA'TCHEL. n. s. [sackel, Germ. sacculus,
 Lat. Perhaps better sachel.] A little bag; commonly a bag used by schoolboys.

The whining schoolboy with his satchel,
 And shining morning face, creeping like snail
 Unwillingly to school. Shakspeare, As you like it.

Schoolboys lag with satchels in their hands.

To SATE. v. a. [satio, Lat.] To satiate; to glut; to pall; to feed beyond natural desires.

Sated at length, ere long I might perceive Strange alteration in me. Milton, P. L.

How will their bodies stript
 Enrich the victors, while the vultures sate

Their maws with full repast? Philips.

Thy useless strength, mistaken king, employ,
Sated with rage, and ignorant of joy. Prior.

SA'TELESS.* adj. [sate and less.] Insatiable.

His sateless thirst of pleasure, gold, and fame,
 Declares him born for blessings infinite.

Young, Night Th. 7.

SA'TELLITE. n. s. [satelles, Lat. satellite,
 French. This word is commonly pronounced in prose with the e mute in the plural, as in the singular, and is therefore only of three syllables; but Pope has in the plural continued the Latin form, and assigned it four; I think, improperly.] A small planet revolving round a larger.

Four moons move about Jupiter, and five about Saturn, called their satellites. Locke.

The smallest planets are situated nearest the sun and each other; whereas Jupiter and Saturn, that are vastly greater, and have many satellites about them, are wisely removed to the extreme regions of the system. Bentley.

Ask of yonder argent fields above,
Why Jove's satellites are less than Jove? Pope.
SATELLITIOUS. adj. [from satelles, Lat.]
Consisting of satellites.

Their solidity and opacity, and their satellitious attendance, their revolutions about the sun, and their rotations about their axis, are exactly the same. Cheyne, Phil. Princip.

TO SATIATE. v. a. [satio, Lat.]

1. To satisfy; to fill.

Those smells are the most grateful where the degree of heat is small, or the strength of the smell allayed; for these rather woo the sense than saturate it. Bacon.

Buying of land is the result of a full and satiated gain; and men in trade seldom think of laying out their money upon land, till their profit has brought them in more than their trade can well employ. Locke.

The loosen'd winds
Hur'd high above the clouds; till all their force Consum'd, her ravenous jaws th' earth saturate
clos'd. Philips.

2. To glut; to pall; to fill beyond natural desire.

Whatever novelty presents, children are presently eager to have a taste, and are as soon satiated with it. Locke.

He may be satiated, but not satisfied. Norris.

3. To gratify desire.

I may yet survive the malice of my enemies, although they should be satiated with my blood. King Charles.

4. To saturate; to impregnate with as much as can be obtained or imbibed.

Why does not salt of tartar draw more water out of the air, than in a certain proportion to its quantity, but for want of an attractive force after it is satiated with water? Newton.

SATIATE. adj. [from the verb.] Glutted; full to satiety. When it has with, it seems a participle; when of, an adjective.

Our generals, retir'd to their estates,
In life's cool evening, saturate of applause,
Nor think of bleeding ev'n in Brunswick's cause. Pope.

Now may'r's and shrieves all hush'd and saturate lay,
Yet eat, in dreams, the custard of the day. Pope.

SATIATION.* n. s. [from satiare.] The state of being filled.

This term Quantity offereth me a discourse with Lessius, which seemeth to prefer a quantity ad pondus of diet, as most conducing to the preservation of health and extension of life, as if satiation were the usher of diseases and mortality, as a corruptive cause, which I cannot conceive reasonable. Whitaker, Blood of the Grape, p. 7.

SATÍETE. n. s. [satiētas, Lat. satiété, Fr.] Fullness beyond desire or pleasure; more than enough; wearisomeness of plenty; state of being pallied or glutted.

He leaves a shallow plash to plunge him in the deep,

And with satiety seeks to quench his thirst. Shaks.
Nothing more jealous than a favourite, especially towards the waining-time and suspect of satiety. Wotton.

In all pleasures there is satiety; and after they be used, their verdure departeth. Hakevill.

They saturate and soon fill.
Though pleasant; but thy words, with grace divine
Imbued, bring to their sweetness no satiety. Milton, P. L.

No action, the usefulness of which has made it the matter of duty, but a man may bear the continual pursuit of, without loathing or satiety. South.

The joy unequal'd, if its end it gain,
Without satiety, though e'er so blest,
And but more relish'd if the more mistress'd. Pope.

SATIN. n. s. [satín, Fr. drapo di setan, Ital. sattin, Dutch.] A soft close and shining silk.

Upon her body she wore a doublet of sky-colour satín, covered with plates of gold, and as it were nailed with precious stones, that in it she might seem armed. Sidney.

The ladies dress'd in rich symars were seen,
Of Florence satín, flower'd with white and green,
And for a shade betwixt the bloomy griddlein. Dryden.

Her petticoat, transform'd apace,
Became black satín flounc'd with lace. Swift.

Lay the child carefully in a case, covered with a mantle of blue satín. Arbutnot and Pope.

SATINET.* n. s. [from satín.] A sort of slight satín.

SATÍRE.† n. s. [sátira, anciently satura, Lat. not from satyrus, a satyr; sátire, Fr. Dr. Johnson.—The satura has been traced to satur, and has been explained as meaning full, and abundant, and full also of variety, in which nothing is wanting to its due perfection; applied to lanx, a large dish, and so filled with all sorts of fruits or meats; and to leges, laws, when they were of several heads and titles. See Dryden on the Orig. and Progr. of Satire. Morin has noticed these applications; "d'où plusieurs concluent," he says, "que l'on a donné le nom de satyre à cette sorte de poésie, à cause de la variété des choses qu'on y fait entrer. Mais cette raison est assurément des plus faibles, puisqu'il entre dans plusieurs autres sortes de poèmes une bien plus grande variété de choses. Ainsi il y a apparence que la simple ressemblance des mots a donné lieu à cette dérivation. Le mot satyre vient du nom des Satyres compagnons de Bacchus, Gr. Σάτυροι, Lat. Satyri, lesquels attaquoient par des railleries, et des paroles piquantes, tous ceux qu'ils rencontroient. Aussi, chez les Grecs, la satyre, dans son origine, consistoit en des jeux champêtres en l'honneur de Bacchus, des railleries grossières, des vers faits à la hâte et récités en dansant. Dans la suite, les dieux ou demi-dieux, et les héroïnes, comme Omphale, en firent le principal sujet. Ce fut Lucilius, chez les Romains, qui fixa l'état de la satyre, et la présenta telle que nous l'ont donnée Horace, Perse, Juvénal, et telle que nous la connoissons aujourd'hui."—Excellence in writing satire has been ascribed, in a spirited publication, to but few: "I may be singular perhaps; but if I except Lucilius, (who is known to us only by detached lines and short passages,) in my opinion the fulness of that glory never shone but on six poets; Horace, Juvenal, Persius, Boileau, Dryden, and Pope." Progress of Satire, 1798.] A poem in which wickedness or folly is censured. Proper satire is distinguished, by the generality of the reflections, from a lampoon which is aimed against a particular person; but they are too frequently confounded: it has on before the subject.

It is not for every one to relish a true and natural satire, being of itself, besides the nature and inbred bitterness and tartness of particulars, both hard of conceit and harsh of style; and therefore cannot but be unpleasant both to the unskilful and over-musical ear.

Bp. Hall, Postscr. to his Satires.

He dares to sing thy praises in a time
Where vice triumphs, and virtue is a crime;
Where ev'n to draw the picture of thy mind,
Is satyr on the most of human kind. Dryden.

The owls, bats, and several other birds of night, were one day got together in a thick shade, where they abused their neighbours in a very sociable manner. Their satire at last fell upon the sun, whom they all agreed to be very troublesome, impertinent, and inquisitive. Tatler, No. 229.

My verse is satire, Dorset lend your ear,
And patronise a muse you cannot fear. Young.

SATÍRICAL. [adj. (satiricus, Lat. satirique, SATÍRIQUE, } Fr. from satire.)]

1. Belonging to satire; employed in writing of invective.

You must not think, that a satyrick style
Allows of scandalous and brutish words. Roscommon.

What human kind desires, and what they shun,
Rage, passions, pleasures, impotence of will,
Shall this satirical collection fill. Dryden, Jew.

2. Censorious; severe in language.

Slanders, sir; for the satirical slave says here, that old men have grey beards; that their faces are wrinkled. Shakspeare.

He that hath a satirical vein, as he maketh others afraid of his wit, so he had need be afraid of others memory. Bacon.

On me when dunces are satirick,
I take it for a pangrick. Swift.

SATÍRICALLY. adv. [from satirical.] With invective; with intention to censure or vilify.

He applies them satirically to some customs, and kinds of philosophy, which he arraigns. Dryden.

SATÍRIST. n. s. [from satire.] One who writes satires.

I first adventure, follow me who list,
And be the second English satirist. Bp. Hall.

Wycherly, in his writings, is the sharpest satyr-ist of his time; but, in his nature, he has all the softness of the tenderest dispositions: in his writings he is severe, bold, undertaking; in his nature gentle, modest, inoffensive. Granville.

All vain pretenders have been constantly the topics of the most candid satyrists, from the Codrus of Juvenal to the Damon of Boileau. Cleland.

Yet soft his nature, though severe his lay;
His anger moral, and his wisdom gay:
Blest *satyr*ist! who touch'd the mean so true,
As show'd vice had his hate and pity too. Pope.

TO SATÍRIZE. v. a. [satirizer, Fr. from satire.] To censure as in a satire.

Covetousness is described as a veil cast over the true meaning of the poet, which was to satirize his prodigality and voluptuousness. Dryden.

Should a writer single out and point his railery at particular persons, or satirize the miserable, he might be sure of pleasing a great part of his readers, but must be a very ill man if he could please himself. Addison.

I insist that my lion's mouth be not defiled with scandal; for I would not make use of him to revile the human species, and satirize his betters. Addison, Spect.

It is as hard to saturate well a man of distinguished vices, as to praise well a man of distinguished virtues. Swift.

SATISFACTION. n. s. [satisfactio, Lat. satisfaction, Fr.]

1. The act of pleasing to the full, or state of being pleased.

Run over the circle of earthly pleasures, and had not God secured a man a solid pleasure from his own actions, he would be forced to complain that pleasure was not satisfaction. South.

2. The act of pleasing.

The mind, having a power to suspend the execution and satisfaction of any of its desires, is at liberty to consider the objects of them. Locke.

3. The state of being pleased.

'Tis a wretched satisfaction a revengeful man takes, even in losing his life, provided his enemy go for company. L'Estrange.

There are very few discourses so short, clear, and consistent, to which most men may not, with satisfaction enough to themselves, raise a doubt. Locke.

4. Release from suspense, uncertainty, or uneasiness; conviction.

Wilt thou leave me so unsatisfied?

—What satisfaction can you have? Shakespeare.

5. Gratification; that which pleases.

Of every nation each illustrious name, Such toys as these have cheated into fame; Exchanging solid quiet to obtain

The windy satisfaction of the brain. Dryden, Juv.

6. Amends; atonement for a crime; recompense for an injury.

Die he or justice must; unless for him

Some other able, and as willing, pay

The rigid satisfaction, death for death. Milton, P. L.

SATISFACTIVE. adj. [satisfactus, Latin.] Giving satisfaction.

By a final and satisfactive discernment of faith, we lay the last effects upon the first cause of all things. Brown.

SATISFACTORYLY. adv. [from satisfactory.] So as to content.

Bellonius hath been more satisfactorily experimental, not only affirming that chameleons feed on flies, but upon exenteration he found these animals in their bellies. Brown.

They strain their memory to answer him satisfactorily unto all his demands. Digby.

SATISFACTORINESS. n. s. [from satisfactory.] Power of satisfying; power of giving content.

The incompleteness of the seraphick lover's happiness in his fruitions, proceeds not from their want of satisfactoriness, but his want of an entire possession of them. Boyle.

SATISFACTORY. adj. [satisfactoire, French; satisfactus, Latin.]

1. Giving satisfaction; giving content.

An intelligent American would scarce take it for a satisfactory account, if, desiring to learn our architecture, he should be told that a pillar was a thing supported by a basis. Locke.

2. Atoning; making amends.

A most wise and sufficient means of redemption and salvation, by the satisfactory and meritorious death and obedience of the incarnate Son of God, Jesus Christ. Sanderson.

SATISFIER.* n. s. [from satisfy.] One who makes satisfaction.

For the transgressions of man, man ought to make satisfaction; but he could not. God could; but he ought not. And therefore, that he might satisfy both that ought and could, it was fit that the satisfier should be God and man. Sheridan, Sermon iii. 97.

TO SATISFY. v. a. [satisfaire, French; satisfacio, Latin.]

VOL. III.

1. To content; to please to such a degree as that nothing more is desired.

A good man shall be satisfied from himself.

I'm satisfy'd. My boy has done his duty. Proverbs.
Addison.

2. To feed to the full.

Who hath caused it to rain on the earth, to satisfy the desolate and waste ground, and to cause the bud of the tender tree to spring forth? Job.
I will pursue and divide the spoil: my lust shall be satisfied upon them. Ezekiel.

The righteous catheth to the satisfying of his soul. Proverbs.

3. To recompense; to pay to content.

He is well paid that is well satisfied; And I, delivering you, am satisfied, And therein do account myself well paid. Shaks.

4. To appease by punishment.

Will he draw out, For anger's sake, finite to infinite In punish'd man, to satisfy his rigour, Satisfy'd never? That were to extend His sentence beyond dust and nature's law. Milton, P. L.

5. To free from doubt, perplexity, or suspense.

Of many things useful and curious you may satisfy yourselves in Leonardo de Vinci. Dryden.

This I would willingly be satisfied in, whether the soul, when it thinks thus, separate from the body, acts less rationally than when conjointly with it? Locke.

6. To convince.

He declares himself satisfied to the contrary, in which he has given up the cause. Dryden.

When come to the utmost extremity of body, what can there put a stop and satisfy the mind that it is at the end of space, when it is satisfied that body itself can move into it? Locke.

The standing evidences of the truth of the Gospel are in themselves most firm, solid, and satisfying. Atterbury.

TO SATISFY. v. n.

1. To give content.

2. To feed to the full.

3. To make payment.

By the quantity of silver they give or take, they estimate the value of other things, and satisfy for them: thus silver becomes the measure of commerce. Locke.

SATISFACTIVE.* adj. [sativus, Latin.] Sown in gardens.

Preferring the domestick or sative for the fuller growth. Evelyn, ii. § 4.

SATRAP.* n. s. [Persian; σατραπης, Gr. satrapes, satraps, satrapa, Latin.] A governor of a district; a kind of viceroy; a nobleman in power.

His majesty took the petition with a smile of goodness, and delivered it to one of his satrapes that he might make his report on it.

The Student, (1750) vol. i. p. 217. Obsequious tribes

Of satraps, princes. Shenstone, Ruin'd Abbey.

SATRAPY.* n. s. [from satrap.] The government assigned to a satrap.

The angels themselves are distinguished and quartered into their celestial principdoms and satrapies. Milton, Reas. of Ch. Gov. B. i.

The temporal government was likewise divided into satrapies or dukedoms, which contained in them diverse counties.

Spelman, Anc. Gov. of England.

SATURABLE. adj. [from saturate.] Impregnable with any thing till it will receive no more.

Be the figures of the salts never so various, yet if the atoms of water were fluid, they would always so conform to those figures as to fill up all vacuities; and consequently the water would be saturable with the same quantity of any salt, which it is not. Grew, Cosm. Sacra.

SATURANT. adj. [from saturans, Latin.] Impregnating to the full.

TO SATURATE. v. a. [saturō, Latin.] To impregnate till no more can be received or imbibed.

Rain-water is plentifully saturated with terrestrial matter, and more or less stored with it. Woodward.

His body has been fully saturated with the fluid of light, to be able to last so many years without any sensible diminution, though there are constant emanations thereof. Cheyne.

Still night succeeds A soft'n'd shade, and saturated earth Awaits the morning beam. Thomson.

SATURATION.* n. s. [from saturate.] In chymistry. The impregnation of an acid with an alkali, and vice versa, till either will receive no more, and the mixture becomes neutral. Chambers.

SATURDAY. n. s. [ῥατερῆς, or ῥατερῆς, Saxon, according to Verstegan, from raep, a Saxon idiom; more properly from Saturn, dies Saturni.] The last day of the week.

This matter I handled fully in last Saturday's Spectator. Addison.

SATURITY.* n. s. [saturitē, old French; saturitis, from saturō, Latin.] Fulness;

1. e state of being saturated; repletion. He, going to their stately place, did find in every dish

Fat beef, and brewis, and great store of dainty fowl and fish;

Who seeing their saturity, and practising to win His pupils thence, Excess, he said, doth work access to sin. Warner, Albion's England.

In all things for man's use there is not only a mere necessity given of God, but also a satiety permitted; not saturity.

Granger on Eccl. (1621), p. 233.

SATURN. n. s. [Saturne, Fr. Saturnus, Latin.]

1. A remote planet of the solar system: supposed by astrologers to impress melancholy, dullness, or severity of temper.

The smallest planets are placed nearest the sun and each other; whereas Jupiter and Saturn, that are vastly greater, are wisely removed to the extreme regions. Bentley.

From the far bounds Of utmost Saturn, wheeling wide his round. Thomson.

2. [In chymistry.] Lead.

SATURNALIAN.* adj. [from the Latin Saturnalia, feasts in honour of Saturn, during which slaves were allowed to say any thing, and to act as if they were masters.] Sportive; loose, like the feasts of Saturn.

In order to make this saturnalian amusement general in the family, you sent it down stairs. Burke on a Regicide Peace.

SATURNIAN. adj. [saturninus, Latin.] Happy; golden; used by poets for times of felicity, such as are feigned to have been in the reign of Saturn.

Th' Augustus, born to bring Saturnian times. Pope.

SATURNINE. adj. [saturninus, Lat. saturnien, Fr. from Saturn.] Not light; not volatile; gloomy; grave; melancholy; severe of temper: supposed to be born under the dominion of Saturn.

I may cast my readers under two divisions, the mercurial and saturnine: the first are the gay part, the others are of a more sober and solemn turn. Addison.

SA'TURNIST.* n. s. [from Saturn.] One of gloomy or melancholy disposition.

Seating himself within a darksome cave;
Such places heavy Saturnists do crave.

Browne, Brit. Past. B. 1. S. 1.

SA'TYR. n. s. [satyrus, Latin.] A sylvan god: supposed among the ancients to be rude and lecherous.

*Satyr*s, as Pliny testifies, were found in times past in the eastern mountains of India.

Peacham on Drawing.

SA'VAGE. adj. [sauvage, French; salvaggio, Italian; from silva, Lat.]

1. Wild; uncultivated.

These godlike virtues wherefore do'st thou hide,
Affecting private life, or more obscure
In savage wilderness? Milton, P. R.

Cornels, and savage berries of the wood,
And roots and herbs, have been my meagre food. Dryden.

2. Untamed; cruel.

Chain me to some steep mountain's top,
Where roaring bears and savage lions roam. Shakespeare.

Hence with your little ones:
To fright you thus, methinks, I am too savage;
To do worse to you, were fell cruelty.

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

Tyrants no more their savage nature kept,
And foes to virtue wonder'd how they wept. Pope.

3. Uncivilized; barbarous; untaught; wild; brutal.

Thus people lived altogether a savage life, till Saturn arriving on those coasts, devised laws to govern them by. Raleigh.

The savage clamour drown'd
Both harp and voice. Milton, P. L.

A herd of wild beasts on the mountains, or a savage drove of men in caves, might be so dis-ordered; but never a peculiar people. Sprat, Sermons.

SA'VAGE. n. s. [from the adjective.] A man untaught and uncivilized; a barbarian.

Long after these times were they but savages.

The seditious lived by rapine and ruin of all the country, omitting nothing of that which savages, enraged in the height of their unruly behaviour, do commit. Hayward.

To deprive us of metals is to make us mere savages; to change our corn for the old Arcadian diet, our houses and cities for dens and caves, and our clothing for skins of beasts; 'tis to bereave us of all arts and sciences, nay, of revealed religion. Bentley.

To SA'VAGE.† v. a. [from the noun.] To make barbarous, wild, or cruel. A word not well authorized. Dr. Johnson.—Dr. Johnson found the word only in Thomson. It was in our language, however, a century and a half before his time, and is also used by that learned author Henry More.

Whose bloodie breast so savag'd out of kind,
That Phalaris had ne'er so foul a mind.

Mir. for Mag. p. 442.

If this sort once possess the arteries
Of forlorn man, madness and stupor seize
His savag'd heart, and death dwells in his eyes.

More, Pre-ex. of the Soul, (1647), st. 38.
Friends, relations, Love himself,
Savag'd by woe, forget the tender tie.

Thomson, Summer.

SA'VAGELY. adv. [from savage.] Barbarously; cruelly.

Your castle is surpris'd, your wife and babes
Savagely slaughter'd. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

SA'VAGENESS. n. s. [from savage.] Barbarousness; cruelty; wildness.

A savageness in unreclaimed blood
Of general assault. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

Wolves and bears, they say,
Casting their savageness aside, have done
Like offices of pity. Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

The Cyclops were a people of Sicily, remarkable for savageness and cruelty. Broome.

SA'VAGERY. n. s. [from savage.]

1. Cruelty; barbarity.

This is the bloodiest shame,
The wildest savagery, the vilest stroke,
That ever wall-ey'd Wrath, or staring Rage,
Presented to the tears of soft Remorse.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

2. Wild growth.

Her fallow lees
The darnel, hemlock, and rank fumitory,
Doth root upon; while that the culter rusts,
That should deracinate such savagery.

Shakespeare, Hen. V.

SAVA'NNA. n. s. [Spanish, according to Bailey.] An open meadow without wood; pasture-ground in America.

He that rides post through a country may tell how, in general, the parts lie; here a morass, and there a river; woodland in one part, and savannas
in another. Locke.

Plains immense,
And vast savannas, where the wand'ring eye,
Unfix'd, is in a verdant ocean lost.

Thomson, Summer.

SAUCE.† n. s. [sauce, sauze, French; salsa, Italian; from the Lat. participle salsus, of salio, to salt; salzen, Germ. to season with salt; "to sawcyn with powder, condio." Pr. Parv.]

1. Something eaten with food to improve its taste.

The bitter sauce of the sport was, that we had our honours for ever lost, partly by our own faults, but principally by his faulty using of his faults. Sidney.

To feed were best at home;
From thence the sauce to meat is ceremony;
Meeting were bare without it. Shakespeare, Macb.

Epicurean cooks

Sharpen with cloyless sauce his appetite. Shakspr.

Such was the sauce of Moab's noble feast,
Till night far spent invites them to their rest.

Cowley.

He that spends his time in sports, is like him whose meat is nothing but sauces; they are health-less, chargeable, and useless. By. Taylor.

High sauces and rich spices are fetched from the Indies. Baker.

2. To serve one the same SAUCE. A vulgar phrase to retaliate one injury with another.

3. Insolence of speech. A vulgar phrase also, and placed among Mr. Brockett's northern words.

To SAUCE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To accompany meat with something of higher relish.

2. To gratify with rich tastes. Obsolete.

Earth, yield me roots;
Who seeks for better of thee, sauce his palate
With thy most operant poison. Shakspeare.

3. To intermix, or accompany with any thing good, or, ironically, with any thing bad.

Then fell she to sauce her desires with threatenings, so that we were in a great perplexity restrained to so unworthy a bondage, and yet restrained by love, which I cannot tell how, in noble minds, by a certain duty, claims an answering.

Sidney.

All the delights of love, wherein wanton youth walloweth, be but folly mixed with bitterness, and sorrow sauced with repentance. Spenser.

Thou say'st his meat was sau'd with thy upbraillings;

Unquiet meals make ill digestions. Shaks.

SAUCEBOX.† n. s. [from sauce, or rather from saucey.] An impertinent or petulant fellow.

Saucebox go, meddle with your lady's fan,
And prate not here! Brewer, Lingua, (ed. 1657).

The foolish old poet says, that the souls of some women are made of sea-water: this has encouraged my saucebox to be witty upon me.

Addison, Spect.

SAUCEPAN. n. s. [sauce and pan.] A small skillet with a long handle, in which sauce or small things are boiled.

Your master will not allow you a silver saucepan. Swift.

SAUCER. n. s. [sauchiere, Fr. from sauce.] 1. A small pan or platter in which sauce is set on the table.

For spectres, apparitions, ghosts, Hudibras.
With sauce eyes and horns.

2. A piece or platter of china, into which a tea-cup is set.

SAUCILY. adv. [from saucey.] Impudently; impertinently; petulantly; in a saucy manner.

Though this knave came somewhat sauceily into the world before he was sent for, yet was his mother fair. Shakspeare.

A freed servant, who had much power with Claudius, very sauceily, had almost all the words;
and, amongst other things, he asked in scorn one of the examiners, who was likewise a freed servant of Scribonianus, I pray, sir, if Scribonianus had been emperor, what would you have done?
He answered, I would have stood behind his chair,
and held my peace. Bacon.

A trumpet behaved himself very sauceily.

Addison.

SAUCINESS. n. s. [from saucey.] Impudence; petulance; impertinence; contempt of superiors.

With how sweet saws she blam'd their saucesness,
To feel the panting heave, which through her side
Did beat their hands. Sidney.

By his authority he remains here, which he thinks is a patent for his saucesness.

Shakspeare, All's Well.

Being intercepted in your sport,
Great reason that my noble lord be rated
For saucesness. Titus Andronicus.

It is saucesness in a creature, in this case, to reply. Branhall.

Imputing it to the natural saucesness of a pedant,
they made him eat his words. L'Estrange.

You saucesness, mind your pruning-knife, or I may use it for you. Dryden, Don Seb.

This might make all other servants challenge the same liberty, and grow pert upon their masters; and when this sauciness became universal, what less mischief could be expected than an old Scythian rebellion? Collier on Pride.

SAUCISSE. n. s. [French.] In gunnery, a long train of powder sewed up in a roll of pitched cloth, about two inches diameter, in order to fire a bomb-chest. Bailey.

SAUCISSON. n. s. [French.] In military architecture, faggots or fascines made of large boughs of trees bound together. They are commonly used to cover men, to make epaulments, traverses, or breastworks in ditches full of water, to render the way firm for carriages. Bailey.

SAUCY. adj. [I know not how this word can be easily deduced from sauce; it may come more properly from salsus, Latin.] Pert; petulant; contemptuous of superiours; insolent; impudent; impertinent.

You are more saucy with lords than the heraldry of your birth and virtue gives you commission. Shakspeare.

Study is like the heaven's glorious sun, That will not be deep search'd with saucy looks; Small have continual plodders ever won, Save base authority from others' books. Shaks.

And if thou hast the mettle of a king, Being wrong'd as we are by this peevish town, Turn thou the mouth of thy artillery, As we will ours against these saucy walls. Shakspeare.

Power's first pedigree from force derives, And calls to mind the old prerogatives Of free-born man; and with a saucy eye Searches the heart and soul of majesty. Denham, Sophy.

I lose my patience, when with saucy pride By untun'd ears I hear his numbers try'd. Roscommon.

No saucy citizen shall dare To strike a soldier, nor, when struck, resent The wrong. Dryden, Juven.

Homer, to express a man both timorous and saucy, makes use of a kind of point, namely, that he had the eyes of a dog, but the heart of a deer. Addison, Spect.

SA'VABLE.* adj. [from save.] Capable of being saved. I have met with this word, and the substantive savableness, in Chillingworth only.

That those who do subscribe them are in a savable condition. Chillingworth, Pref. Auth. Char. Maint. (ed. 1704.) § 40.

SA'VABLENESS.* n. s. [from savable.] Capability of being saved.

So much as concerns the main question, now in agitation about the savableness of protestants. Chillingworth, Rel. of Prot. Concl.

To SAVE. v. a. [sawver, saulver, French; salvo, Latin.]

1. To preserve from danger or destruction. Let me die ere men can say God save the queen. Shakspeare.

SA'VIOUR. † n. s. [sauveur, Fr. from To save; salvator, Lat. σωτήρ, Gr. "Whatsoever notion the heathen had of their gods or men which they styled saviours, we know this name belongeth unto Christ. in a more sublime and peculiar mannert Neither is there salvation in any other; for there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved. Acts, iv. 12." Pearson on the Creed, Art. 2.] Redeemer: He that has graciously saved mankind from eternal death.

Unto you is born this day in the city of David, a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord.

So judg'd he man, both judge and Saviour sent.

St. Luke, ii. 11.

Milton, P. L.

However consonant to reason his precepts appeared, nothing could have tempted men to acknowledge him as their God and Saviour, but their being firmly persuaded of the miracles he wrought.

Addison.

SAUL.* n. s. [aul, Sax.] The soul: so pronounced in some parts of the north of England, and so anciently written. See SOUL.

To SAUNTER. v. n. [aller à la sainte terre, from idle people who roved about the country, and asked charity under pretence of going à la sainte terre, to the holy land; or sans terre, as having no settled home.]

1. To wander about idly.

The cormorant is still sauntering by the sea-side, to see if he can find any of his brass cast up.

L'Étrange.

Tell me, why saunt'ring thus from place to place

I meet thee, Nérulou, with clouded face?

Dryden, Juv.

So the young 'squire when first he comes From country school to Will's or Tom's Without one notion of his own, He saunters wildly up and down.

Prior.

Here sauntering 'prentices o'er Otway weep.

Gay.

And by my hand, he saunter'd Europe round,

Let gather'd every vice in every ground.

Pope, Dunciad.

2. To loiter; to linger.

Though putting the mind upon an unusual stress that may discourage, ought to be avoided; yet this must not run it into a lazy sauntering about ordinary things.

Locke.

If men were weaned from their sauntering humour, wherein they let a good part of their lives run uselessly away, they would acquire skill in hundreds of things.

Locke.

The brainless stripling Spells uncouth Latin, and pretends to Greek; A sauntering tribe! such born to wide estates,

With yea and no in senates hold debates. Tickell.

SAUNTER.* n. s. [from the verb.] Idle occupation; waste of time. I had applied the following example to the person instead of the practice, in the former edition of this dictionary, and I am obliged by the gentleman who has pointed out the mistake.

The tavern, park, assembly, mask, and play; Those dead destroyers of the tedious day:

That wheel of fops; that saunter of the town.

Young, Love of Fame.

SAUNTERER.* n. s. [from saunter.] An idler; a rambler; a loungeur.

Quit the life of an insignificant saunterer about town for that of an useful country-gentleman.

Bp. Berkeley, Querist, § 413.

A fine lady used to have more charms to a man of study or business, than to a saunterer.

Ld. Chesterfield.

As no man can well enjoy himself, or find sound content in any thing, while business or duty lie unfinished on his hands, so when he has done his best toward the dispatch of his work, he will then comfortably take his ease and enjoy his pleasure; then his food doth taste savourily; then his diversitements and recreations have a lively gustofulness; then his sleep is very sound and pleasant.

Barrow, vol. iii. S. 19.

SA'VOURY. adj. [savoureux, French, from savour.]

1. Pleasing to the smell.

The pleasant savoury smell So quicken'd appetite, that I Could not but taste!

From the boughs a savoury odour blown,

Grateful to appetite, more pleas'd my sense

Than smell of sweetest fennel, or the teats

Of fewe, or goat, dropping with milk at even.

Milton, P. L.

2. Piquant to the taste.

Savoury meat, such as my father loveth. Genesis.

The savoury pulp they chew. Milton, P. L.

I never saw till now

Sight more detestable. Milton, P. L.

SAW.† n. s. [sawe, Danish; řaza, or řřę,

Saxon; scie, Fr.]

1. A dentated instrument, by the attrition of which wood or metal is cut.

The teeth are filed to an angle, pointing towards the end of the saw, and not towards the handle of the saw, or straight between the handle and end; because the saw is designed to act only in its progress forwards, a man having in that more strength than he can have in drawing back his saw, and therefore when he draws it back,

he bears it lightly off the unsawn stuff, which enables him the longer to continue his several progressions of the saw. Mason, Mech. Ex.

The roach is a leather-mouth'd fish, and has saw- like teeth in his throat. Walton, Angler.

Then saws were tooth'd, and sounding axes made. Dryden.

If they cannot cut,

His saws were toothless, and his hatchets lead.

Pope.

2. [řaze, řaza, Sax. a saying, řazan, to say, to relate; saeghe, Teut.] A saying; a maxim; a sentence; an axiom; a proverb.

Good king, that must approve the common saw:

Thou out of Heaven's benediction com'st

To the warm sun! Shakespeare, K. Lear.

From the table of my memory

I'll wipe away all saws of books.

Shakespeare, Hamlet.

His weapons, holy saws of sacred writ. Shaks.

Strict age and sour severity,

With their grave saws in slumber lie.

Milton, Comus.

3. A decree. Obsolete.

Love is lord of all the world by right,

And rules their creatures by his powerful saw.

Spenser, Colin Clout.

To SAW. v. a. part. sawed and sawn. [scier, Fr. from the noun.] To cut timber or other matter with a saw.

They were stoned, they were sawn asunder.

Hebrews.

A carpenter, after he hath sawn down a tree, and wrought it handsomely, sets it in a wall.

Wisd. xiii. 11.

Master-workmen, when they direct any of their underlings to saw a piece of stuff, have several phrases for the sawing of it: they seldom say, saw the piece of stuff; but, draw the saw through it; give the piece of stuff a kerf.

Mozon.

It is an incalcescency, from a swift motion, such as that of running, threshing, or sawing.

Ray on the Creation.

If I cut my finger, I shall as certainly feel pain as if my soul was co-extended with the limb, and had a piece of it sawn through.

Collier.

SA'WDUST. n. s. [saw and dust.] Dust made by the attrition of the saw.

If the membrane be fouled by the sawdust of the bone, wipe it off with a sponge. Wisenan, Surgery.
Rotten sawdust, mixed with earth, enriches it very much.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

SA'WFISH. n. s. [saw and fish.] A sort of fish with a kind of dentated horn.

SA'WPIT. n. s. [saw and pit.] Pit over which timber is laid to be sawn by two men.

Let them from forth a sawpit rush at once

With some diffused song. Shak. M. IV. of Windsor.

They colour it by laying it in a sawpit that hath oak sawdust therein.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

SAW-WORT. n. s. [serratura, Lat.] A plant like the greater centaury, from which this differs in having smaller heads, and from the knapweed in having the borders of the leaves cut into small sharp segments, resembling the teeth of a saw.

Miller.

SAW-WREST. n. s. [saw and wrest.] A sort of tool.

With the saw-wrest they set the teeth of the saw; that is, they put one of the notches of the wrest between the first two teeth on the blade of the saw, and then turn the handle horizontally a little about upon the tooth towards the end of the saw; and that at once turns the first tooth somewhat towards you, and the second tooth from you.

Mozon, Mech. Ex.

SA'WER. } n. s. [scieur, Fr. from saw.] One
SA'WYER. } whose trade is to saw timber into boards or beams.

Mozon.

SA'XIFRAGE.† n. s. [saxifrage, Fr. saxifraga, Lat.] A plant.

Saxifrage, quasi saxum frangere, to break the stone, as applicable to any thing having this property; but is a term most commonly given to a plant, from an opinion of its medicinal virtues to this effect.

Quincy.

Saxifrage is good (and hart's-tongue) for the stone.

Drayton, Polyolb. S. 13.

SA'XIFRAGE, Meadow. n. s. [silanum, Lat.] A plant.

SA'XIFRAGOUS. adj. [saxum and frago, Lat.] Dissolvent of the stone.

Because goat's blood was found an excellent medicine for the stone, it might be conceived to be able to break a diamond; and so it came to be ordered that the goats should be fed on saxifragous herbs, and such as are conceived of power to break the stone.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

SA'XON.* n. s. [Saxo, Lat. Seax, Sax. from reax, a kind of crooked sword, much after the fashion of a sithe, which they used. Justus Lipsius, says Verstegan, put me in mind that a sithe is in the Netherlands called a saisen. Now albeit, he adds, we find these kind of swords anciently written seaxen, or seaxes, yet it is like enough that our ancestors sounded the x as s. We find the seax, he concludes, not to have been used among the other Germans, unless of such as afterward may have followed them in that fashion.] One of the people who inhabited the northern part of Germany, obtained footing in Britain about the year 440, and afterwards subdued great part of the island.

The Saxons did never write or call themselves Saxons; neither did any of the other Germans ever call them so; but they called themselves anciently Seaxen and Seaxena, and by abbreviation Saxna, the a at the end being indeed superfluous.—Of the higher Germans they are written Sachsen, but pronounced just as if they wrote them Saxen; and in all the Netherlands they are, and have of old time been, called Sassen, and their country Sassenland.

Verstegan, Rest. of Dec. Intell. ch. 1.
Hengist and his Saxons, who had obtained by the free vote of the Britains that introduction into this island they had so long in vain attempted by arms, saw that by being necessary they were superior to their allies.

Burke, Abridg. Eng. Hist. B. 2. ch. 1.

SA'XON.* adj. Belonging to the Saxons, to their country, or to their language.

The ground of our own language appertaineth to the old Saxon, little differing from the present Low Dutch.

Camden, Rem. Ex. of the Eng. Language.

That our Saxon ancestors came out of Germany, and made their habitation in Britain, is no question; for that therein all agree.

Verstegan, Rest. of Dec. Intell. ch. 2.

SA'XONISM.* n. s. An idiom of the Saxon language.

This rhyming chronicle [of Robert of Gloucester] is totally destitute of art or imagination.—The language is full of Saxonisms, which indeed abound, more or less, in every writer before Gower and Chaucer.

Warton, Hist. E. P. i. 49.

SA'XONIST.* n. s. One who is well acquainted with the Saxon language or manners.

Elstob, the learned Saxonist.

1. To speak; to pronounce; to utter; to relate.

He said moreover, I have somewhat to say unto thee; and she said, say on.

1 Kings.

The council-table and star-chamber hold, as Thucydides said of the Athenians, for honourable that which pleased, and for just that which profited.

Clarendon.

The lion here has taken his right measures, that is to say, he has made a true judgment.

L'Estrange.

Of some propositions it may be difficult to say whether they affirm or deny; as when we say, Plato was no fool.

Watts.

2. In poetry, say is often used before a question; tell.

Say first what cause

Say, Stella, feel you no content,

Reflecting on a life well-spent?

Swift.

And who more blest, who chain'd his country; say,

Or he whose virtue sigh'd to lose a day?

Pope.

SAY.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A speech; what one has to say.

He no sooner said up his say, but up rises a cunning snap.

L'Estrange.

2. [For assay.] Sample.

So good a say invites the eye,

A little downward to espy

The lively clusters of her breasts.

Sidney.

Since thy outside looks so fair and warlike,

And that thy tongue some 'say of breeding breathes,

By rule of knighthood I disdain.

Shakspeare.

3. Trial by a sample.

This gentleman having brought that earth to the publick 'say masters, and upon their being unable to bring it to fusion, or make it fly away, he had procured a little of it, and with a peculiar flux separated a third part of pure gold.

Beyle.

4. Influence; authority. A northern use of the word. Craven Dial. and Brackett.

5. [Sole, Fr.] A thin sort of silk. Obsolete.

His garment neither was of silke nor say, But painted plumes.

Spenser, F. Q.

6. [Sayette, Fr.] A kind of woollen stuff.

Whether the woollen-manufacture of England is not divided into several parts or branches, appropriated to particular places, where they are only or principally manufactured; fine cloth in Somersetshire, coarse in Yorkshire, long elms at Exeter, saies at Sudbury, crapes at Norwich, linseys at Kendal, blankets at Whitney, and so forth?

Bp. Berkeley, Querist, § 520.

SA'YING.† n. s. [from say; Sax. rægen, dictum, traditio, assertio.] Expression; words; opinion sententiously delivered.

I thank thee, Brutus,
That thou hast prov'd Lucilius' saying true.

Shakespeare.

Moses fled at this saying, and was a stranger in Midian.

Acts.

Many are the sayings of the wise,
Extolling patience as the truest fortitude.

Milton, S. A.

Others try to divert the troubles of other men by pretty and plausible sayings, such as this, that if years are long, they are but light.

Tillotson.

We poetick folks, who must restrain
Our measur'd sayings in an equal chain,
Have troubles utterly unknown to those,
Who let their fancy loose in rambling prose.

The sacred function can never be hurt by their sayings, if not first reproached by our doings.

Atterbury.

SCAB. n. s. [scab, Saxon; scabbia, Ital. scabbie, Dutch; scabies, Lat.]

1. An incrustation formed over a sore by dried matter.

What's the matter, you dissentious rogues,
That rubbing the poor itch of your opinion,
Make yourselves scabs?

Shakespeare, Coriol.

That free from gout thou may'st preserve thy care,
And clear from scabs produc'd by freezing air.

Dryden.

2. The itch or mange of horses.

3. A paltry fellow, so named from the itch often incident to negligent poverty.

I would thou did'st itch from head to foot, and I had the scratching of thee, I would make thee the loathsome'st scab in Greece.

Shakespeare, Tr. and Cress.

Well said, wart, thou art a good scab: there is a tester for thee.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

One of the usurers, a head man of the city, took it in dudgeon to be ranked, cheek by jowl, with a scab of a currier.

L'Estrange.

This vap'ring scab must needs devise

To ape the thunder of the skies.

Swift.

SCABBEAD. † n. s. [schap, German. Junius. Scabbie, Belg. quod operculum denotat. Minsheu.] The sheath of a sword.

Enter fortune's gate,
Nor in thy scabbard sheath that famous blade,
Till settled be thy kingdom and estate.

Fairfax.

What eyes! how keen their glances! you do well to keep 'em veil'd: they are too sharp to be trusted out o' th' scabbard.

Dryden, Span. Friar.

SCABBED. adj. [from scab.]

1. Covered or diseased with scabs.

The briar fruit makes those that eat them scabbied.

Bacon.

2. Paltry; sorry; vile; worthless.

To you such scabb'd harsh fruit is giv'n, as raw Young soldiers at their exercisings gnaw.

Dryden.

SCABBEDNESS. † n. s. [from scabbied.] The state of being scabbied.

Hulot, and Barret.

SCABBINESS. † n. s. [from scabbie.] The quality of being scabby.

Sherwood.

SCABBY. adj. [from scab.] Diseased with scabs.

Her writhled skin, as rough as mapple rind,
So scabby was, that would have loath'd all woman-kind.

Spenser, F. Q.

A scabby tetter on their pelts will stick,
When the raw rain has pierc'd them to the quick.

Dryden.

If the grazier should bring me one wether, fat and well fleeced, and expect the same price for a whole hundred, without giving me security to restore my money for those that were lean, shorn, or scabby, I would be none of his customer.

Swift.

SCABIOUS. adj. [scabiosus, Lat.] Itchy; leprous.

In the spring scabious eruptions upon the skin were epidemic, from the acidity of the blood.

Arbuthnot on Air.

SCABIOUS. † n. s. [scabieuse, Fr. scabiosa, Lat.] A plant.

Stop some of your scabiousness from running to seed the first year.

Evelyn, Kalendar.

Carew.

SCAFFOLD. n. s. [eschafaut, Fr. schavot, Teut. from schawen, to show.]

1. A temporary gallery or stage raised either for shows or spectators.

Pardon

The flat unspirited spirit, that hath dar'd
On this unworthy scaffold to bring forth
So great an object.

Shakespeare, Hen. V.

The throng

On banks and scaffolds under sky might stand.

Milton.

2. The gallery raised for execution of great malefactors.

Fortune smiling at her fortune therein, that a scaffold of execution should grow a scaffold of coronation.

Sidney.

3. Frames of timber erected on the side of a building for the workmen.

These outward beauties are but the props and scaffolds

On which we built our love, which, now made perfect,

Stands without those supports.

Denham, Sophy.

Sylla added three hundred commons to the senate; then abolished the office of tribune, as being only a scaffold to tyranny, whereof he had no further use.

Swift.

To SCAFFOLD. v. a. [from the noun.] To furnish with frames of timber.

SCAFFOLDAGE. n. s. [from scaffold.] Gallery; hollow floor.

A strutting player doth think it rich
To hear the wooden dialogue and sound,
'Twixt his stretch'd footing and the scaffoldage.

Shakespeare.

SCAFFOLDING. n. s. [from scaffold.] 1. Temporary frames or stages.

What are riches, empire, power,
But steps by which we climb to rise, and reach
Our wish? and that, obtain'd, down with the scaffolding

Of sceptres and of thrones.

Congreve.

Sickness, contributing no less than old age to the shaking down this scaffolding of the body, may discover the inward structure.

Pope.

2. Building slightly erected.

Send forth your labouring thought;
Let it return with empty notions fraught,

Of airy columns every moment broke,
Of circling whirlpools and of spheres of smoke:
Yet this solution but once more affords
New change of terms and scaffolding of words.

Prior.

SCA' LABLE.  adj.* [from To scale.] That may be scaled with a ladder.

Bullokar.

SCALA'DE. † n. s. [French; scalada, Span. SCALA'DO.] from scala, Lat. a ladder.]

A storm given to a place by raising ladders against the walls.

What can be more strange than that we should within two months have won one town of importance by scalado, battered and assaulted another, and overthrown great forces in the field?

Bacon.

Thou raisest thy voice to record the stratagems, the arduous exploits, and the nocturnal scalade of needy heroes, the terror of your peaceful citizens.

Arbuthnot, J. Bull.

SCA'LARY. adj. [from scala, Lat.] Proceeding by steps like those of a ladder.

He made at nearer distances certain elevated places and scalary ascents, that they might better ascend or mount their horses.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

To SCALD. v. a. [scaldare, Italian; calidus, Lat.]

1. To burn with hot liquor.

I am scalded with my violent motion,
And spleen of speed to see you.

Shaks. K. John.

When thou do'st pinch thy bearer, thou do'st sit
Like a rich armour worn in heat of day;
That scalds with safety.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

Thou art a soul in bliss; but I am bound
Upon a wheel of fire, that mine own tears
Do scald like molten lead.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

Here the blue flames of scalding brimstone fall,

Involving swiftly in one ruin all.

Cowley.

But 'tis a grief of fury, not despair!
And if a manly drop or two fall down,
It scalds along my cheeks, like the green wood,

That spitt'ring in the flame, works outward into tears.

Dryden, Cleom.

It depends not on his will to persuade himself, that what actually scalds him, feels cold.

Locke.

Warm cataplasms discuss; but scalding hot may confirm the tumour; heat, in general, doth not resolve and attenuate the juices of a human body; for too great heat will produce concretions.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

The best thing we can do with Wood is to scald him;

For which operation there's nothing more proper
Than the liquor he deals in, his own melted copper.

Swift.

2. A provincial phrase in husbandry.

In Oxfordshire the sour land they fallow when the sun is pretty high, which they call a scalding fallow.

Mortimer.

SCALD. † n. s. [from scalded or scaled. See SCALL.]

1. Scurf on the head.

Her head — altogether bald,
Was overgrown with scurf and filthy scald.

Spenser.

2. [From the verb.] A burn; a hurt caused by hot liquor.

SCALD. † adj. [probably from scall; the word piel'd, or bald, and baldhead also, being formerly contemptuous expressions; and, like scab, the word scall might formerly be a term of reproach. See SCAB.] Paltry; sorry; scurvy.

Saucy dictors

Will catch at us like strumpets, and scald rhymers
Ballad us out o' tune.

Shakespeare.

A scabbed horse is fit for a scald squire.

Minsheu, Span. Dict. Dial. p. 28.

SCALD, or SCALDER.* n. s. [Dan. and Su. The word is judged by Torfæus to have signified originally a smoother and polisher of language. Torfæi Præf. ad Oracdes. Mallet's North. Antiq. Note of the Transl. ch. 13.] One of the poets of the northern nations.

The ancient chronicles constantly represent the kings of Denmark, Norway, and Sweden, as attended by one or more scalds; for this was the name they gave their poets.

Bp. Percy's Tr. of Mallet's North Antiq. ch. 13. Sometimes — in conversation a scald, either to shew his happy talent, or to do more honour to the person with whom he conversed, answered in extempore metre. Bp. Percy, ut suprà.

The Gothic scalds enriched their vein of fabling from this new and fruitful source of fiction.

Warton, Hist. E. P. vol. i. Diss. 1.

These practices and opinions co-operated with the kindred superstitions of dragons, dwarfs, fairies, giants, and enchanters, which the traditions of the Gothic scalders had already planted; and produced that extraordinary species of composition which has been called romance.

Warton, Hist. E. P. i. 110.

An extract, which Dr. Hickes has given from the work of one of the Danish scalders, entitled Herværar Saga, containing an evocation from the dead, may be found in the sixth volume of miscellany poems published by Dryden.

Blair on the Poems of Ossian, p. 7.

SCALDHEAD. n. s. [skalladur, bald, Icelandic. Hickes.] A loathsome disease; a kind of local leprosy in which the head is covered with a continuous scab. The serum is corrupted by the infection of the touch of a salt humour, to which the scab, pox, and scaldhead are referable. Floyer.

SCALDICK.* adj. Relating to the poets called scalds or scalders.

It is probable, that many of the scaldic imaginations might have been blended with the Arabian. Warton, Hist. E. P. vol. i. Diss. 1.

It made a part of the scaldic versification.

Tyrwhitt on the Versif. of Chaucer.

SCALE.† n. s. [scale, Saxon; schæl, Dutch; skal, Icelandic. Dr. Johnson. — Scale, in all its various applications, will be found to be merely the past participle of scýlan, to divide, to separate. Mr. Horne Tooke. But see the third definition, and also SHELL.]

1. A balance; a vessel suspended by a beam against another vessel; the dish of a balance.

If thou tak'st more
Or less than just a pound, if the scale turn
But in the estimation of a hair,
Thou diest. Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.
Your vows to her and me, put in two scales,
Will even weigh, and both as light as tales.

Here's an equivocator, that could swear in both the scales, against either scale. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

Long time in even scale

The world's scales are even; what the main

In one place gets, another quits again. Cleaveland.

The scales are turn'd, her kindness weighs no more

Now than my vows. Waller.

In full assemblies let the crowd prevail;
I weigh no merit by the common scale,

The conscience is the test. Dryden.

If we consider the dignity of an intelligent being, and put that in the scales against brute inanimate matter, we may affirm, without overvaluing human nature, that the soul of one virtuous and religious man, is of greater worth and excellency than the sun and his planets.

Bentley, Serm.

2. The sign of Libra in the Zodiac.

Juno pours out the urn, and Vulcan claims
The scales, as the just product of his flames.

Creech.

3. [Skajla, Goth. putamen, cortex, testa; rcæla, Sax. scalæ, putamina.] The small shells or crusts which lying one over another make the coats of fishes.

He puts him on a coat of mail,
Which was made of a fish's scale. Drayton.

Standing aloof, with lead they bruise the scales,
And tear the flesh of the incensed whales. Waller.

4. Any thing exfoliated or desquamated; a thin lamina.

Take jet and the scales of iron, and with a wet feather, when the smith hath taken an heat, take up the scales that fly from the iron, and those scales you shall grind upon your painter's stone.

Peacham.

When a scale of bone is taken out of a wound, burning retards the separation. Sharp, Surgery.

5. [Scala, a ladder, Lat.] Ladder; means of ascent.

Love refinés

The thoughts, and heart enlarges; hath his seat
In reason, and is judicious; is the scale
By which to heavenly love thou may'st ascend.

Milton, P. L.

On the bendings of these mountains the marks of several ancient scales of stairs may be seen, by which they used to ascend them.

Addison on Italy.

6. The act of storming by ladders.

Others to a city strong

Lay siege, encamp'd; by battery, scale, and mine Assaulting. Milton, P. L.

7. Regular gradation; a regular series rising like a ladder.

Well hast thou the scale of nature set,
From centre to circumference; whereon
In contemplation of created things,

By steps we may ascend to God. Milton, P. L.

The scale of the creatures is a matter of high speculation. Grev.

The higher nature still advances, and preserves his superiority in the scale of being. Addison.

All the integral parts of nature have a beautiful analogy to one another, and to their mighty original, whose images are more or less expressive according to their several gradations in the scale of beings. Cheyne, Phil. Princ.

We believe an invisible world, and a scale of spiritual beings all nobler than ourselves.

Bentley, Serm.

Far as creation's ample range extends,
The scale of sensual mental pow'rs ascends. Pope.

8. A figure subdivided by lines like the steps of a ladder, which is used to measure proportions between pictures and the thing represented.

The map of London was set out in the year 1658 by Mr. Newcourt, drawn by a scale of yards.

Graunt.

9. The series of harmonick or musical proportions.

The bent of his thoughts and reasonings run up and down this scale, that no people can be happy but under good governments. Temple.

10. Any thing marked at equal distances.

They take the flow o' the Nile
By certain scale i' the pyramid: they know
By th' height, the lowness, or the mean, if death

Or foison follow. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

To SCALE.† v. a. [scalare, Italian.]

1. [from scala, a ladder.] To climb as by ladders.

Often have I scal'd the craggy oak,
All to dislodge the raven of her nest:
How have I wearied, with many a stroke,
The stately walnut-tree, the while the rest
Under the tree fell all, for nuts at strife! Spenser.
They assailed the breach, and others with their scaling-ladders scaled the walls.

Knolles, Hist. of the Turks.

The way seems difficult and steep to scale
With upright wing against a higher foe.

Milton, P. L.

Heaven with these engines had been scal'd,
When mountains heap'd on mountains fail'd.

Waller.

When the bold Typhæus scal'd the sky,
And forc'd great Jove from his own heaven to fly,
The lesser gods all suffer'd.

Dryden.

2. [from scale, a balance.] To measure or compare; to weigh.

You have found,

Scaling his present bearing with his past,
That he's your fixed enemy. Shakspeare, Coriol.

3. [from scale of a fish.] To strip of scales; to take off in a thin lamina.

Raphael was sent to scale away the whiteness of Tobit's eyes. Tob. iii. 17.

4. To pare off a surface.

If any have counterfeited, clipped, or scal'd his [the king's] monies, or other monies current, this is high treason.

Bacon, Charge at the Sess. of the Forge, p. 9.

If all the mountains were scal'd, and the earth made even, the waters would not overflow its smooth surface. Burnet.

5. To spread, as manure, gravel, or other loose materials. This, as Grose has observed, is a northern expression; but it is not to rake or hoe the ground, as he makes it. In Cumberland, it is also figuratively to disperse or waste: as, to scale goods, money, or any property.

To SCALE.† v. n.

1. To peel off in thin particles.
Those that cast their shell are the lobster and crab: the old skins are found, but the old shells never; so as it is like they scale off, and crumble away by degrees. Bacon.

2. To separate. Obsolete.
They would no longer abide, but scal'd and departed away. Hobinshead, Chron. ii. 499.

SCA'LED. adj. [from scale.] Squamous; having scales like fishes.

So hear the scaly herd when Proteus blows,
And so to pasture follow through the sea.

Dryden.

A scaly fish, with a forked tail.

Woodward.

To SCAMBLE.† v. n. [This word, which is scarcely in use, has much exercised the etymological sagacity of Meric Casaubon; but, as is usual, to no purpose. Dr. Johnson.—In the household book of the fifth earl of Northumberland, there is a particular section, appointing the order of service for the scambling days in Lent; that is, days on which no regular meals were provided, but every one scambled, i. e. scrambled, and shifted for himself as well as he could. Bp. Percy, Note on Shaks. Hen. V.—The etymology, therefore, of Serenius seems worthy of consideration, viz. skyma, Icel. otiosè vagari, to roam about at pleasure, as we may suppose the meal-hunters, on scambling-days, were used to do.]

1. To be turbulent and rapacious; to scramble; to get by struggling with others.

Have fresh chaff in the bin,
And somewhat to scamble for hog and for hen.

Tusser.

Scambling, out-facing, fashion-mongering boys,
That lie, and cog, and flout, deprave and slander.

Shakspeare.

That self bill is urg'd, and had against us past,
But that the scambling and unquiet time

Did push it out of further question.

Shakspeare, Hen. V.

He was no sooner entered into the town, but a scambling soldier clapt hold of his bridle, which he thought was in a begging or a drunken fashion.

Wotton.

2. To shift awkwardly.

Some scambling shifts may be made without them.

More.

To SCAMBLE. v. a. To mangle; to maul.

My wood was cut in patches, and other parts of it scambled and cut before it was at its growth.

Mortimer.

SCAMBLER.† n. s. [Scottish.] A bold intruder upon one's generosity or table.

The Scots' proverb is, It is well kenn'd your father's son was never a scambler. A scambler, in its literal sense, is one who goes about among his friends to get a dinner, by the Irish called a cosherer.

Stevens, Note on Shaks. Much Ado.

SCAMBLINGLY.† adv. [from scambling.] With turbulence and noise; with intrusive audaciousness.

Sherwood.

Wiseman, Surgery.

SCAMMONY. n. s. [Latin; scammonée, Fr.] A concreted resinous juice, light, tender, friable, of a greyish brown colour, and disagreeable odour. It flows upon incision of the root of a kind of convolvulus, that grows in many parts of Asia.

Trevoux.

To SCAMPER.† v. n. [schanpen, Teut. escamper, Fr. scampare, Ital. skumpa, Icel. and Su. Goth. effusè currere, citissimè fugere, ut pecora cestro vel tabano percita, to run like cattle stung with the gadfly. See Serenius and Lye.] To fly with speed and trepidation.

A fox seized upon the fawn, and fairly scampered away with him.

L'Estrange.

You will suddenly take a resolution in your cabinet of Highlanders, to scamper off with your new crown.

Addison.

Be quick, may very quick, or he'll approach, And as you're scampering stop you in your coach.

King.

To SCAN. v. a. [scandre, Fr. scando, Lat.]

1. To examine a verse by counting the feet.

Harry, whose tuneful and well-measur'd song
First taught our English music how to span

Addison.

Words with just note and accent, not to scan.
With Midas' ears, committing short and long.

Milton, Sonnet.

They scan their verses upon their fingers.

Walsh.

2. To examine nicely.

So he goes to heaven,

And so am I reveng'd: that would be scann'd.

Shakspeare, Hamlet.

The rest the great Architect

Did wisely to conceal; and not divulge
His secrets to be scann'd by them, who ought Rather admire.

Milton, P. L.

Every man has guilts, which he desires shall not be rigorously scanned; and therefore, by the rule of charity and justice, ought not to do that which he would not suffer.

Gov. of the Tongue.

At the final reckoning, when all men's actions shall be scanned and judged, the great King shall pass his sentence, according to the good men have done, or neglected to do.

Calamy.

Sir Roger exposing his palm, they crumpled it into all shapes, and diligently scanned every wrinkle that could be made in it.

Addison.

One moment and one thought might let him scan

The favour of proposing there, in convenient sort, whatsoever ye can object, which thing I have known them to grant, of scholastick courtesy unto strangers, never hath nor ever will be denied you. Hooker.

Sir Francis Bacon was wont to say, that those who left useful studies for useless scholastick speculations, were like the Olympic gamesters, who abstained from necessary labours, that they might be fit for those as were not so. Bacon.

Both sides charge the other with idolatry, and that is a matter of conscience, and not a scholastic nicety. Stillinger fleet.

SCHOLA'STICK.* n. s. One who adheres to the niceties or method of the schools. The shallow commenting of scholasticists and canonists. Milton, Doct. and Disc. of Div. Pref.

SCHOLIAST.* n. s. [scholiast, Fr. scholastes, Lat.] A writer of explanatory notes.

Albeit that worde is wanting in the Greek text, yet either that, or some other of the like force, must necessarily be understood, as the Greek scholiast and other writers do well note.

A Fruitful Sermon. (1584.) p. 55. The title of this satyr, in some ancient manuscripts, was the reproach of idleness; though in others of the scholastics 'tis inscribed against the luxury of the rich. Dryden.

What Gellius or Stobæus cook'd before,
Or chew'd by blind old scholastics o'er and o'er.

SCHOLIASTICK.* adj. [from scholiast.] Pertaining to a scholiast.

The true illuminated have met with such numberless commentators, whose scholastic midwifery hath delivered them of meanings that the authors themselves, perhaps, never conceived.

Swift, Tale of a Tub, § 10.

TO SCHOLIAZE.* v. n. [from scholiast.] To write notes.

He thinks to scholiaz upon the Gospel.

Milton, Tetrachordon.

SCHOLICAL.* adj. [scholicus, Lat.] Scholastic. Not in use.

It is a common scholical error to fill our papers and note books with observations of great and famous events:—meanwhile things of ordinary course and common life gain no room in our paper-books. Hales, Rem. p. 275.

SCHOLION. } n. s. [Latin.] A note;
SCHOLIUM. } an explanatory observation.

Hereunto have I added a certain gloss or scholion, for the exposition of old words and harder phrases, which manner of glossing and commenting will seem strange in our language.

Epist. Pref. to Spenser's Shep. Cal.

Some cast all their metaphysical and moral learning into the method of mathematicians, and bring every thing relating to those abstracted or practical sciences under theorems, problems, postulates, scholiums, and corollaries. Watts.

SCHOLY.* n. s. [scholie, Fr. scholium, Lat.] An explanatory note. This word, with the verb following, is, I fancy, peculiar to the learned Hooker.

He therefore, which made us to live, hath also taught us to pray, to the end that, speaking unto the Father in the Son's own prescript form, without scholy or gloss of ours, we may be sure that we utter nothing which God will deny. Hooker.

That scholy had need of a very favourable reader, and a tractable, that should think it plain construction, when to be commanded in the word, and grounded upon the word, are made all one. Hooker.

TO SCHOLY.* v. n. [from the noun.] To write expositions.

The preacher should want a text, whereupon to scholy. Hooker.

SCHOL† n. s. [schola, Lat. ecole, Sax. schule, Germ. schule, Teut. ecole, Fr.]

1. A house of discipline and instruction. Their age the same, their inclinations too,
And bred together in one school they grew. Dryden.

2. A place of literary education; an university.

My end being private, I have not expressed my conceptions in the language of the schools. Digby.

Writers on that subject have turned it into a composition of hard words, trifles, and subtilties, for the mere use of the schools, and that only to amuse men with empty sounds. Watts.

3. A state of instruction. The calf breed to the rural trade, Set him betimes to school, and let him be Instructed there in rules of husbandry. Dryden.

4. System of doctrine as delivered by particular teachers. No craz'd brain could ever yet propound,
Touching the soul, so vain and fond a thought;
But some among these masters have been found,
Which in their schools the self-same thing had taught. Davies.

Let no man be less confident in his faith, concerning the great blessings God designs in these divine mysteries, by reason of any difference in the several schools of Christians, concerning the consequent blessings thereof. Bp. Taylor.

5. The age of the church and form of theology succeeding that of the fathers: so called, because this mode of treating religion arose from the use of academical disputations.

The first principles of Christian religion should not be forced with school points and private tenets. Sanderson.

A man may find an infinite number of propositions in books of metaphysics, school divinity, and natural philosophy, and know as little of God, spirits, or bodies as he did before. Locke.

TO SCHOOL† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To instruct; to train. Una her besought to be so good
As in her virtuous rules to school her knight. Spenser, F. Q.

He's gentle, never school'd, and yet learned. Shak.
He never had the soul to know what conversing means, but as his provender and the familiarity of the kitchen schooled his conceptions. Milton, Colasterium.

2. To teach with superiority; to tutor. Cousin, school yourself; but for your husband, He's noble, wise, judicious. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

Let Gallio give me leave a while
To school him one, or ere I change my style:
O lawless paunch, the cause of much dispute,
Through ranging of a currish appetite!
Ep. Hall, Sat. iv. 4.

School your child,
And ask why God's anointed he revil'd. Dryden.

If this be schooling, 'tis well for the considerer:
I'll engage that no adversary of his shall in this sense ever school him. Atterbury.

SCHOLBOY.* n. s. [school and boy.] A boy that is in his rudiments at school.

Schoolboys' tears take up
The glasses of my sight. Shakespeare.
He grins, smacks, shrugs, and such an itch endures.

As 'prentices or schoolboys, which do know
Of some gay sport abroad, yet dare not go. Donne.

Once he had heard a schoolboy tell
How Semele of mortal race
By thunder died. Swift.

SCHOLDAME.* n. s. [school and dame.] A school-mistress.

Sending little children of two or three years old to a school-dame, without any design of learning one letter, but only to keep them out of the fire and water. Echard, Gr. on the Cont. of the Clergy, p. 136.

SCHOLDAY.* n. s. [school and day.] Age in which youth is sent to school.

Is all forgot?
All schooldays' friendship, childhood, innocence?
Shakespeare.

SCHO'OLERY.* n. s. [from school.] Precepts. Not in use.

To which him needs a guileful hollow heart
Marked with fair dissembling courtsey,
A filed tongue furnish'd with terms of art,
Not art of school, but courier's schoolery. Spenser, Col. Clout.

SCHO'OLFELLOW.* n. s. [school and fellow.] One bred at the same school.

Thy flat'ring method on the youth pursue;
Join'd with his schoolfellow by two and two;
Persuade them first to lead an empty wheel,
In length of time produce the labouring yoke. Dryden.

The emulation of schoolfellows often puts life and industry into young lads. Locke.

SCHO'OLHOUSE.* n. s. [school and house.] House of discipline and instruction.

Fair Una gan Fidelia fair request,
To have her knight unto her schoolhouse plac'd. Spenser.

SCHO'OLING.* n. s. [from school.]

1. Instruction; learning at school.
2. School-hire; stipend paid to a schoolmaster for instruction. Sherwood.
3. A lecture; a sort of reprimand.

You shall go with me;
I have some private schooling for you both. Shakespeare.

Passionate and affectionate words; a sweet schooling, out of a fear and jealousy conceived, and a care had to prevent his miscarrying. Bp. Richardson on the O. Test. p. 306.

SCHO'OLMAID.* n. s. [school and maid.] A girl at school.

As schoolmaids change their names
By vain, though apt, affection. Shakespeare, Meas. for Meas.

SCHO'OLMAN.* n. s. [school and man.]

1. One versed in the niceties and subtilties of academical disputation.

The king, though no good schoolman, converted one of them by dispute.
Unlearn'd, he knew no schoolman's subtle art;
No language, but the language of the heart. Pope.

2. A writer of scholastic divinity or philosophy.

If a man's wit be not apt to distinguish or find differences, let him study the schoolmen. Bacon.

To schoolmen I bequeath my doubtfulness,
My sickness to physicians. Donne.

Men of nice palates could not relish Aristotle, as he was dress'd up by the schoolmen. Baker.

Let subtle schoolmen teach these friends to fight,
More studious to divide than to unite. Pope.

SCHO'OLMASTER.* n. s. [school and master.] One who presides and teaches in a school.

I, thy schoolmaster, have made thee more profit
Than other princes can, that have more time
For vainer hours, and tutors not so careful. Shakespeare.

Adrian VI. was sometime schoolmaster to Charles V. Knolles.

The ancient sophists and rhetoricians lived till they were an hundred years old; and so likewise did many of the grammarians and schoolmasters, as Orbilius. Bacon.

A father may see his children taught, though he himself does not turn schoolmaster. South, Sermon.

SCHO'OLMISTRESS.* n. s. [school and mistress.] A woman who governs a school.

Such precepts I have selected from the most considerable which we have from nature, that exact schoolmistress. Dryden.

My schoolmistress, like a vixen Turk,
Maintains her lazy husband by our work.
Gay, What d'ye Call it.

SCHOONER.* n. s. [schuner, Germ.] A small vessel with two masts.

SCHREIGHT. n. s. [turdus viscivorus.] A fish. Ainsworth.

SCIAGRAPHY. n. s. [sciographie, Fr. σκαγραφία.]

1. Art of sketching.

Let those, who are delighted with sciagraphy, point out, if they please, these shadow-patriarchs. Fuller, Holy War, p. 111.

2. [In architecture.] The profile or section of a building, to shew the inside thereof. Bailey.

3. [In astronomy.] The art of finding the hour of the day or night by the shadow of the sun, moon, or stars. Bailey.

SCIATHE'RICAL.} adj. [sciatérique, Fr. SCIATHE'RIC.} σκαθέρικος.] Belonging to a sun-dial. Dict.

There were also, from great antiquity, sciathe'ric or sun-dials, by the shadow of a stile or gnomon denoting the hours; an invention ascribed unto Anaximenes by Pliny. Brown.

SCIATHE'RICALY.* adv. [from sciathe'ric.] After the manner of a sun-dial.

Let the plane be sciathe'rically prepared, and it shall be necessary for the shadow of the sun to go back. Gregory, Posthum, p. 37.

SCIATICA.} n. s. [sciatique, Fr. ischia- SCIATICK.} dica passio, Latin.] The hip gout.

Which of your hips has the most profound sciatica? Shakespeare.

Thou cold sciatica, Cripple our senators, that their limbs may halt As lamely as their manners. Shaks. Timon.

The Scythians, using continual riding, were generally molested with the sciatica, or hip gout. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Rack'd with sciatick, martyr'd with the stone, Will any mortal let himself alone? Pope.

SCIATICAL. adj. [from sciatica.] Afflicting the hip.

In obstinate sciatical pains, blistering and cauteries have been found effectual. Arbuthnot.

SCIENCE. n. s. [science, Fr. scientia, Lat.]

1. Knowledge.

If we conceive God's sight or science, before the creation, to be extended to all and every part of the world, seeing every thing as it is, his presence or foresight of any action of mine, or rather his science or sight, from all eternity, lays no necessity on any thing to come to pass, more than my seeing the sun move hath to do in the moving of it. Hammond.

The indisputable mathematics, the only science Heaven hath yet vouchsafed humanity, have but few votaries among the slaves of the Stagirate. Glanville, Scop.

2. Certainty grounded on demonstration. So you arrive at truth, though not at science. Berkeley.

3. Art attained by precepts, or built on principles. Science perfects genius, and moderates that fury of the fancy which cannot contain itself within the bounds of reason. Dryden.

4. Any art or species of knowledge. No science doth make known the first principles, whereon it buildeth; but they are always taken as plain and manifest in themselves, or as proved and granted already, some former knowledge having made them evident. Hooker.

Whatever we may learn by them, we only attain according to the manner of natural sciences, which mere discourse of wit and reason findeth out. Hooker.

I present you with a man Cunning in music and the mathematics, To instruct her fully in those sciences. Shaks.

5. One of the seven liberal arts, grammar, rhetoric, logic, arithmetic, music, geometry, astronomy.

Good sense, which only is the gift of Heaven, And though no science, fairly worth the sev'n.

SCI'ENT.* adj. [sciens, Lat. scient, old Fr.] Skilful. Not in use. Cockeram.

SCI'ENTIAL.† adj. [from science.] Producing science.

His light sciential is, and, past mere nature, Can save the rude defects of every creature.

B. Jonson, Masques at Court. Those sciential rules, which are the implements of instruction. Milton, Tetrachordon.

From the tree her step she turn'd; But first low reverence done, as to the power That dwelt within; whose presence had infused Into the plant sciential sap deriv'd From nectar, drink of gods. Milton, P. L.

SCI'ENTIFICAL.† adj. [scientifique, Fr. scientifick.] entia and facio, Lat.

Puttenham, in his Art of Engl. Poesy, published in 1589, apologizes, as Mr. Malone also has observed, for using this adjective.] Producing demonstrative knowledge; producing certainty.

Natural philosophy proceeding from settled principles, therein is expected a satisfaction from scientifical progressions, and such as beget a sure or rational belief. Brown, Vulg. Err.

No where are there more quick, inventive, and penetrating capacities, fraught with all kind of scientifical knowledge. Howell.

No man, who first trafficks into a foreign country, has any scientifick evidence that there is such a country, but by report, which can produce no more than a moral certainty; that is, a very high probability, and such as there can be no reason to except against. South.

The systems of natural philosophy that have obtained, are to be read more to know the hypotheses, than with hopes to gain there a comprehensive, scientifical, and satisfactory knowledge of the works of nature. Locke.

SCI'NTIFICALLY. adv. [from scientifical.] In such a manner as to produce knowledge.

Sometimes it rests upon testimony, because it is easier to believe than to be *scientifical*ly instructed. Locke.

SCI'MITAR. n. s. [See CIMETER.] A short sword with a convex edge.

I'll heat his blood with Greekish wine to-night, Which with my scimitar I'll cool to-morrow. Shakspeare.

SCINK. n. s. A cast calf. Ainsworth. In Scotland and in London they call it slink.

SCI'NTILLANT.* adj. [scintillans, Lat.] Sparkling; emitting sparks.

Who can view the pointed rays, That from black eyes scintillant blaze?

Green's Spleen, ver. 219.

To SCI'NTILLATE.† v. n. [scintillo, Lat.] To sparkle; to emit sparks.

Cockeram. SCI'NTILLA'TION. n. s. [scintillatio, Lat. from scintillare.] The act of sparkling; sparks emitted.

These scintillations are not the accension of the air upon the collision of two hard bodies, but rather the inflammable effluences discharged from the bodies collided. Brown.

He saith the planets' scintillation is not seen, because of their propinquity. Glanville, Scop.

SCI'OLISM.* n. s. [sciolus, Lat.] Superficial knowledge; not sound knowledge.

The beautiful description here given of the state of Europe before the French Revolution, and all that follows, is calculated to raise in every one who peruses it, a spirit equal to the difficulties of the time. Here are painted the mischiefs of the multiplication of political sciolists, and the progress of political sciolism; the decay of profound knowledge; the perversion of what we retain; and the decline of religion.

On Burke's Lett. on Dom. Part. (1797.) B. Crit. xi. 245.

SCI'OLIST.† n. s. [sciolus, Lat. Dr. Johnson.— We may suppose sciolist to have been introduced into our language in the earlier part of the seventeenth century. Cockeram notices it in his vocabulary. But, in 1622, the Latin form was used: "For Hippias, that vain-glorious sciolus, how great his knowledge was, there is no man ever testified but only he himself." Fotherby, Atheom. p. 190.] One who knows many things superficially.

'Twas this vain idolizing of authors which gave birth to that silly vanity of impertinent citations: these ridiculous fooleries signify nothing to the more generous discerners, but the pedantry of the affected sciolists. Glanville, Scop.

These passages were enough to humble the presumption of our modern sciolists, if their pride were not so great as their ignorance. Temple.

SCI'OLOUS. adj. [sciolus, Latin.] Superficially or imperfectly knowing. Not used.

I could wish these sciolous zealotists had more judgement joined with their zeal. Howell.

SCI'OMACHY. n. s. [schiamachie, Fr. σκιαμαχία.] Battle with a shadow. This should be written sciamachy.

To avoid this sciomachy, or imaginary combat of words, let me know, sir, what you mean by the name of tyrant? Cowley.

SCI'ON. n. s. [scion, Fr.] A small twig taken from one tree to be engrafted into another.

Sweet maid, we marry A gentle scion to the wildest stock; And make conceive a bark of baser kind, By bud of nobler race. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale. March is drawn in his left hand blossoms, and scions upon his arm. Peacham.

The scions are best of an old tree. Mortimer.

SCIRE FACIAS. n. s. [Latin.] A writ judicial, in law, most commonly to call a man to shew cause unto the court, whence it is sent, why execution of judgement passed should not be made. This writ is not granted before a year and a day is passed, after the judgement given. Cowel.

SCIRRHOSITY. n. s. [from scirrhous.] An induration of the glands.

The difficulty of breathing, occasioned by scirrhosities of the glands, is not to be cured. Arbuthnot on Diet.

SCIRRHIOUS. adj. [from scirrhous.] Having a gland indurated; consisting of a gland indurated.

How they are to be treated when they are strumous, scirrhous, or cancerous, you may see. Witsman.

SCI'RRHUS. n. s. [schirre, Fr. This should be written scirrhus, not merely because it comes from σχιρρος; but because c in English has before e and i the sound of s. So SKEPTICK.] An indurated gland.

Any of these three may degenerate into a scirrhous, and that scirrhous into a cancer.

Wiseman of Tumours.

SCISCITATION.* n. s. [sciscitatus, Latin.] Enquiry: an unusual word.

Without all sciscitations to go blindfold whither he will lead us.

Bp. Hall, Contemp. B. I.

SCI'SSIBLE. adj. [from scissus, Latin.] Capable of being divided smoothly by a sharp edge.

The differences of impressible and not impressible, scissible and not scissible, and many other passions of matter, are plebeian notions. Bacon.

SCI'SSILE. adj. [scissile, Fr. scissilis, Lat.] Capable of being cut or divided smoothly by a sharp edge.

Animal fat is a sort of amphibious substance, scissile like a solid, and resolvable by heat.

Arbutnot.

SCI'SSION. n. s. [scission, Fr. scissio, Lat.] The act of cutting.

Nerves may be wounded by scission or puncture: the former way they are usually cut through, and wholly cease from action.

Wiseman.

SCI'SSOR. n. s. [This word is variously written, as it is supposed to be derived by different writers; of whom some write cissors, from cædo, or incido; others scissors, from scindo; and some cisars, cizars, or scissars, ciseaux, Fr.] A small pair of sheers, or blades movable on a pivot, and intercepting the thing to be cut.

His beard they have sing'd off with brands of fire;

And ever, as it blaz'd, they threw on him
Great pails of puddled mire to quench the hair:
My master preaches patience to him, and the while
His man with scissars nicks him for a fool.

Shakespeare.

Wanting the scissars, with these hands I'll tear,
If that obstruct my flight, this load of hair. Prior.
When the lawyers and tradesmen brought extravagant bills, sir Roger wore a pair of scissars in his pocket, with which he would snip a quarter of a yard off nicely.

Arbutnot.

SCI'SSURE.† n. s. [scissura, Latin.] A crack; a rent; a fissure.

Thus let out at the saissure, as at the window.

Hammond, Works, iv. 569.

The breach seems like the scissures and ruptures of an earthquake, and threatens to swallow all that attempt to close it, and reserves its cure only for omnipotence.

Dec. of Chr. Piety.

SLAVO'NIAN.* adj. [slavica, glory. T. SLAVO'NICK.] Polycarpowitz's Gr. Lat. and Slavon. Dict. printed at Moscow, in 1704.] Relating to the language or manners of the Slavi, or people of Slavonia.

The Slavonian language has its own letters. One is called the Cyrillic character, from St. Cyril, who converted the Moravians, &c. to Christianity. This character it is plain he borrowed from the Greek. A smaller character was afterwards introduced, called Glogoliticus. A third alphabet, differing from the former, is ascribed to St. Jerome. The Muscovite letters are taken from the Cyrillican. The Poles and Bohemians borrowed their letters from the Latin alphabet.

Masov's Hist. of the Germans, ii. 617.

The alphabet, descended from the Scythians established in Europe, is that used by St. Cyril, called the Servian. The Russian, the Illyrian or Slavonic, and the Bulgarian, are all derived from the Greek.

Astle, Orig. and Progr. of Writing, ch. 4. VOL. III.

SCLERO'TICK. adj. [sclerotique, French; σκληρός, Gr.] Hard: an epithet of one of the coats of the eye.

The ligaments observed in the inside of the sclerotic tunics of the eye, serve instead of a muscle, by their contraction, to alter the figure of the eye.

Ray on the Creation.

Chambers.

To SCOFF.† v. n. [schoppen, Teut. probably from the Greek σκάνδαλον, to treat with insolent language or ridicule.] To treat with insolent ridicule; to treat with contumelious language: with at.

Of two noblemen of the west of England, the one was given to scoff, but kept ever royal cheer in his house; the other would ask of those that had been at his table, Tell truly, was there never a flout or dry blow given?

Bacon.

There is no greater argument of a light and inconsiderate person, than profanely to scoff at religion.

Tillotson.

Such is love,

And such the laws of his fantastick empire,
The wanton boy delights to bend the mighty,
And scoffs at the vain wisdom of the wise. Rowe.

To SCOFF.* v. a. To jeer; to treat with scoffs.

His vain ostentation is worthily scuffed with [the] scorne of the orator.

Hooker.

With scoffs and scorns, and contumelious taunts, In open market-place produce† they me.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

How could men surrender up their reason to flattery, more abusive and reproachful than the rudest scoffs and the sharpest invectives?

South.

Some little souls, that have got a smattering of astronomy or chemistry, for want of a due acquaintance with other sciences, make a scuff at them all, in comparison of their favourite science.

Watts.

SCOFFER. n. s. [from scoff.] Insolent ridiculer; saucy scorner; contumelious reproacher.

Self when you can; you are not for all markets:

Cry the man mercy, love him, take his offer;
Foul is the most foul, being found to be a scoffer.

Shakespeare.

Divers have herded themselves amongst these profane scuffers, not that they are convinced by their reasons, but terrified by their contumelies.

Gov. of the Tongue.

Consider what the apostle tells these scuffers they were ignorant of, not that there was a deluge; but he tells them, that they were ignorant that the heavens and the earth of old were so constituted.

Burnet, Theory.

SCOFFINGLY. adv. [from scuffling.] In contempt; in ridicule.

Aristotle applied this hemistich scufflingly to the sycophants at Athens.

Broome.

4. A fixed seat, or shelf: so used in the north of England.

5. A mulct, or fine.

To SCONCE.† v. a. [A word used in the universities, and derived plausibly by Skinner, whose etymologies are generally rational, from sconce, as it signifies the head; to sconce being to fix a fine on any one's head.] To mulct; to fine. A low word, which ought not to be retained.

Pease-pudding not boiled enough; cook rip-manded, and sconced in my presence.

Warton, Journ. of a Fellow of a Coll. Idler, No. 33.

SCOOP. n. s. [schoepe, Teut.]

1. A kind of large ladle; a vessel with a long handle used to throw out liquor.

They turn upside down hops on malt-kilns, when almost dry, with a scoop. Mortimer, Husbandry.

2. A chirurgion's instrument.

Endeavour with thy scoop, or fingers, to force the stone outwards. Sharp, Surgery.

3. A sweep; a stroke. Perhaps it should be swoop.

Oh hell-kite!

What, all my pretty chickens and their dam,

At one fell scoop! Shakspeare, Macbeth.

To SCOOP.† v. a. [schoepen, Teut.]

1. To lade out.

The savoury pulp they chew, and in the rind,
Still as they thirsted, scoop the brimming stream.

Milton, P. L.

As by the brook he stood,
He scoop'd the water from the crystal flood.

Dryden, Æn.

2. This word seems to have not been understood by Thomson.

Melted Alpine snows

The mountain cisterns fill, those ample stores

Of water scoop'd among the hollow rocks.

Thomson.

3. To empty by lading.

'Tis as easy with a sieve to scoop the ocean, as
To tame Petruchio. Beaumont and Fl. Tam. Tamed.

If some penurious source by chance appear'd,
Scanty of waters, when you scoop'd it dry,
And offer'd the full helmet up to Cato,
Did he not dash th' untasted moisture from him?

Addison.

4. To carry off, so as to leave the place hollow.

A spectator would think this circular mount had been actually scooped out of that hollow space.

Spectator.

Her fore-feet are broad, th' she may scoop away much earth at a time.

Addison.

To his single eye, that in his forehead glar'd
Like a full moon, or a broad burnish'd shield,
A forky staff we dext'rously apply'd,
Which, in the spacious socket turning round,
Scoop out the big round jelly from its orb. Addison.

5. To cut into hollowness or depth.

Whatever part of the harbour they scoop in, it has an influence on all the rest; for the sea immediately works the whole bottom to a level.

Addison on Italy.

Those carbuncles the Indians will scoop, so as to hold above a pint. Arbuthnot on Coins.

It much conduces how to scare

The little race of birds, that hop

From spray to spray, scooping the costliest fruit, Insatiate, undisturb'd. Philips.

The genius of the place

Or helps the ambitious hill the heav'n to scale,
Or scoops in circling theatres the vale. Pope.

SCOOPER. n. s. [from scoop.] One who scoops.

SCOPE. n. s. [scopus, Lat.]

1. Aim; intention; drift.

Your scope is as mine own,

So to enforce or qualify the laws,

As to your soul seems good. Shaks. Mens. for Meas.

His coming hither hath no farther scope

Than for his lineal royalties, and to beg
Infranchisement immediate on his knees.

Shakspeare, Rich. II.

Had the whole scope of the author been answerable to his title, he would have only undertaken to prove what every man is convinced of; but the drift of the pamphlet is to stir up our compassion towards the rebels.

Addison.

2. Thing aimed at; mark; final end.

The scope of all their pleading against man's authority is to overthrow such laws and constitutions in the church, as depending thereupon, if they should therefore be taken away, would leave neither face nor memory of church to continue long in the world.

Hooker.

Now was time

To aim their counsels to the fairest scope.

Spenser, Hubb. Tale.

We should impute the war to the scope at which it aimeth. Raleigh.

He, in what he counsels, and in what excels,
Mistrustful, grounds his courage on despair,
And utter dissolution, as the scope

Milton, P. L.

3. Room; space; amplitude of intellectual view.

An heroic poet is not tied to a bare representation of what is true, but that he might let himself loose to visionary objects, which may give him a freer scope for imagination.

Dryden.

These theorems being admitted into optics, there would be scope enough of handling that science voluminously, after a new manner; not only by teaching those things which tend to the perfection of vision, but also by determining mathematically all kinds of phenomena of colours which could be produced by refraction.

Newton, Opt.

4. Liberty; freedom from restraint.

If this constrain them to grant that their axiom is not to take any place, save in those things only where the church hath larger scope, it resteth that they search out some stronger reason.

Hooker.

Ah, cut my life asunder,
That my pent heart may have some scope to beat,
Or else I swoon with this dead killing news.

Shakspeare.

5. Liberty beyond just limits; licence.

Sith 'twas my fault to give the people scope,
'Twould be my tyranny to strike and gall them,
For what I bid them do.

Shakspeare.

Being moody, give him line and scope,
Till that his passions, like a whale on ground,
Confound themselves with working.

Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

6. Act of riot; sally

As surfeit is the father of much fast,
So every scope, by the immoderate use,
Turns to restraint. Shakspeare.

7. Extended quantity.

The scopes of land granted to the first adventurers were too large, and the liberties and royalties were too great for subjects.

Davies on Ireland.

8. It is out of use, except in the three first senses.

To SCOPPET.* v. a. [from scoop; Teut.
schoepen.] To lade out.

In all either our sense or fear of evils, let us have our recourse to that Almighty hand which ordereth all the events of heaven and earth, and work him by our true repentance to a gracious cessation of vengeance; else, what we with all our endeavours but as that fond man, who wears himself lading out the channel with a shallow dish, whiles the spring runs full and unchecked?
Vain man, can he possibly hope to scoopet it out so fast as it fills!

Ep. Hall, Rem. p. 77.

SCOPTICAL.* adj. [σκοπτικός, Greek, from σκοπεῖν.] See to SCOFF.] Scoffing; a very useful but hitherto unnoticed word.

None but the professed quack, or mountebank, avowedly brings the zany upon the stage with him: such undoubtedly is this scoptical humour.

Hammond, Works, ii. 167.

The Roman orator, discoursing of scoptical urbanity, or jesting, how far it was allowable in speeches and pleadings, lays down an excellent rule.

South, Sermon, vii. 151.

SCOPTICK.* adj. The same as scoptical.
Lucian and other scoptick wits endeavoured to jeer and droll away the credit of them.

Bp. Ward, Sermon. (1670.) p. 57.

SCOPULOUS. adj. [scopulosus, Lat.] Full of rocks. Dict.

SCORBUTE.* n. s. [scorbutus, Lat.] The scurvy. Not in use.

Another observation of this our author, is the scurvie or scorbute, whereunto they are much subject in navigations near the line.

Purchas, Pilgrim. (1617.) p. 1086.

SCORBU'TICAL. } adj. [scorbutique, Fr. from SCORBU'TIC. } scorbutus, Lat.] Diseased with the scurvy.

A person about forty, of a full and scorbutical body, having broke her skin, endeavoured the curing of it; but observing the ulcer sanious, I proposed digestion.

Wiseman.

Violent purging hurts scorbutick constitutions;

lenitive substances relieve. Arbuthnot.

SCORBU'TICALLY. adv. [from scorbutical.]
With tendency to the scurvy; in the scurvy.

A woman of forty, scorbutically and hydropi-cally affected, having a sordid ulcer, put herself into my hand. Wiseman.

SCORCE.† n. s. This word is used by Spenser for discourse, or power of reason. In imitation perhaps of the Italians. Dr. Johnson.—It is neither used, nor written, as Dr. Johnson pretends. The passage is incorrectly cited.
Spenser's word is scorse; and, as Mr.
Church long since observed, means exchange. See SCORSE.

To SCORCH.† v. a. [scrocnēb, Saxon;
burnt. "Sine dubio ab antiquo Goth.
et Pers. skie, skior; ignis; cujus, quanquam deperdit, vestigia complura supersunt, e. g. Sueth. skorsten, caminus;
Su. Goth. skir, skaer, skiaer, clarus.
Serenius.]

1. To burn superficially.

Fire scorcheth in frosty weather.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The ladies gasp'd, and scarcely cou'd respire;
The breath they drew, no longer air, but fire;
The fainty knights were scorcht'd.

Dryden.

2. To burn.

Power was given to scorch men with fire.

Rev. xvi. 8.

The same that left thee by the cooling stream,
Safe from sun's heat; but scorcht'd with beauty's beam.

Fairfax.

You look with such contempt on pain,
That languishing you conquer more:

So lightnings which in storms appear,

Scorch more than when the skies are clear.

Waller.

The same beams that shine, scorch too.

South.

I rave,

And, like a giddy bird in dead of night,

Fly round the fire that scorches me to death.

Dryden.

He, from whom the nations should receive

Justice and freedom, lies himself a slave;

Tortur'd by cruel change of wild desires,

Lash'd by mad rage, and scorcht'd by brutal fires.

Prior.

To SCORCH. v. n. To be burnt superficially; to be dried up.

The swarthy Africans complain

To see the chariot of the sun

So nigh their scorching country run.

Roscommon.

The love was made in autumn, and the hunting followed properly, when the heats of that scorching country were declining.

Dryden.

Scatter a little mungy straw or fern amongst your seedlings, to prevent the roots from scorching, and to receive the moisture that falls.

Mortimer.

SCORCHING Fennel. n. s. A plant.SCORDIUM. n. s. [Latin.] An herb.

Ainsworth.

SCORE.† n. s. [skora, Icelandic, a mark, cut, or notch; from skora, "baculo incidere, annotare; skaera, Su. Goth.
incidere; quoniam inculta vetustas non aliter computabat quam unitates, &c.
incisuris in baculo factis connotando."]

Serenius. "Our forefathers had no other books but the score and the tally."

Shakspeare, Hen. VI. P. II. Mr. Horne
Tooke, deducing score from the Saxon reapn, to separate, has noticed this passage in Shakspeare; and, somewhat like Serenius, observes that "score, when used for twenty, has been well and rationally accounted for, by supposing that our unlearned ancestors, to avoid the embarrassment of large numbers,
when they had made twice ten notches,
cut off the piece or tally (taglie) containing them; and afterwards counted the scores or pieces cut off; and reckoned by the number of separated pieces, or by scores." Div. of Purl. ii.
172.]

1. A notch or long incision.

Our forefathers had no other books but the score and the tally: thou hast caused printing to be used.

Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

2. A line drawn.

3. An account, which, when writing was less common, was kept by marks on tallies, or by lines of chalk.

He's worth no more:

They say he parted well, and paid his score.

Shakspeare, Macbeth.

Does not the air feed the flame? And does not the flame warm and enlighten the air? Does not the earth quit scores with all the elements, in the fruits that issue from it?

South.

4. Account kept of something past; an epoch; an era.

Universal deluges have swept all away, except two or three persons who began the world again upon a new score.

Tillotson.

5. Debt imputed.

That thou do'st love her, strikes some scores away

From the great compt.

Shakspeare, All's Well.

6. Reason; motive.

He had been prentice to a brewer,

But left the trade, as many more

Have lately done on the same score.

Hudibras.

A lion, that had got a politick fit of sickness, wrote the fox word glad he should be of his company, upon the score of ancient friendship.

L'Estrange.

If your terms are moderate, we'll never break off upon that score.

Collier on Pride.

7. Sake; account; relative motive.

You act your kindness in Cydaria's score.

Dryden.

Kings in Greece were deposed by their people upon the score of their arbitrary proceedings.

Swift.

8. Twenty. I suppose, because twenty, being a round number, was distinguished on tallies by a long score. [scop, Saxon.]

How many score of miles may we well ride

'Twixt hour and hour?

Shakspeare, Cymbeline.

The fewer still you name, you wound the more;

Bond is but one; but Harpax is a score.

Pope.

For some scores of lines there is a perfect absence of that spirit of poetry.

Watts.

9. A song or air in SCORE. The disposition of the several parts set on the same leaf;
as upon the uppermost range of lines are found the treble notes; in another, those of the bass; in another the tenor; and so on; that they may be sung or played jointly or separately: commonly called the score.

Mus. Dict.

To SCORE.† v. a.

1. To mark; to cut; to engrave.

Upon his shield the like was also scor'd.

Spenser, F. Q.

Why on your shield, so goodly scor'd,

Bear you the picture of that lady's head?

Spenser, F. Q.

Scoring a man o'er the coxcomb,

Is but a scratch with you.

Beaum. and Fl. Prophetess.

2. To mark by a line.

Hast thou appointed where the moon should rise,

And with her purple light adorn the skies?

Scor'd out the bounded sun's obliquier ways,

That he on all might spread his equal rays?

Sandys.

3. To set down as a debt.

Madam, I know when

Instead of five you scor'd me ten.

Swift.

4. To impute; to charge.

Your follies and debauches change

With such a whirl, the poets of your age

Are tir'd, and cannot score 'em on the stage;

Unless each vice in short-hand they indite,

Ev'n as notch prentices whole sermons write.

Dryden.

SCOR'IA. n. s. [Latin.] Dross; recre-ment.

The scoria, or vitrified part, which most metals, when heated or melted, do continually protrude to the surface, and which, by covering the metals in form of a thin glassy skin, causes these colours, is much denser than water.

Newton, Opt.

SCORIFICA'TION.* n. s. In metallurgy, the art of reducing a body either entirely,

or in part, into scoria.

Chambers.

SCOR'IOUS. adj. [from scoria, Lat.] Drossy; recrementitious.

parts.

Brown.

To SCORN.† v. a. [schernen, Teut. escorner,
Fr. "Optimè Junius à Sax. rceapn, Su.
Goth. skarn, stercus," Serenius. See SCARN.]1. To despise; to slight; to revile; to vi-lify; to contemn.

My friends scorn me; but mine eye poureth out tears unto God.

Job, xvi. 20.

Surely he scorneth the scorner, but he giveth
grace unto the lowly.

Proverbs, iii. 34.

Back to the infernal pit I drag thee chain'd,

And seal thee so, as henceforth not to scorn

The facile gates of hell too slightly barr'd.

Milton, P. L.

2. To neglect; to disregard.

This my long sufferance, and my day of grace,

They, who neglect and scorn, shall never taste;

But hard, be harden'd, blind, be blinded more.

Milton, P. L.

To SCORN.† v. n.

1. To show signs of contempt.

He said mine eyes were black, and my hair
black;

And, now I am remember'd, scor'd at me.

Shakspeare.

2. To disdain; to think unworthy.

I've seen the morning's lovely ray

Hover o'er the new-born day

With rosy wings so richly bright,

As if he scor'd to think of night.

Crashaw.

Fame, that delights around the world to stray,

Scorns not to take to court her Argos in her way.

Pope, Statius.

SCORN. n. s. [escorne, old Fr. from the verb.]1. Contempt; scoff; slight; act of contumely.

We were better parch in Africk's sun,
Than in the pride and salt scorn of his eyes.

Shakspeare.

Why should you think that I should woo in scorns?

Scorn and derision never come in tears.

Shaks.

Diogenes was asked in Scorn, What was the matter that philosophers haunted rich men, and not rich men philosophers? He answered, Because the one knew what they wanted, the others did not.

Bacon.

Whosoever hath any thing in his person that induces contempt, hath also a perpetual spur to rescue himself from scorn: therefore all deformed persons are bold, as being on their own defence as exposed to scorn.

Bacon.

Every sullen frown and bitter scorn

But fann'd the fuel that too fast did burn.

Dryden.

2. Subject of ridicule; thing treated with contempt.

Is it not a most horrid ingratitude, thus to make a scorn of him that made us?

Tillotson.

Numidia's grown a scorn among the nations

For breach of publick vows.

Addison, Cato.

3. To think SCORN. To disdain; to hold unworthy of regard. Not now in use.

If he do fully prove himself the honest shepherd
Menalcas his brother and heir, I know no reason why you should think scorn of him.

Sidney.

Unto thee will I cry, O Lord: think no scorn of me, lest if thou make as though thou hearest not,
I become like them that go down into the pit.

Ps. xxviii. 1.

4. To laugh to SCORN. To deride as contemptible.

He that sitteth in the heavens shall laugh them to scorn; the Lord shall have them in derision.

Ps. Com. Prayer.

If we draw her not unto us, she will laugh us to scorn.
Judith, xii. 12.

SCORNER. n. s. [from scorn.]

1. Contemner; despiser.

They are very active, vigilant in their enterprises, present in perils, and great scorers of death.
Spenser on Ireland.

2. Scoffer; ridiculer.

The scorner should consider, upon the sight of a cripple, that it was only the distinguishing mercy of Heaven that kept him from being one too.

L'Estrange.
They, in the scorner's or the judge's seat,
Dare to condemn the virtue which they hate.
Prior.

SCORNFUL.† adj. [scorn and full.]

1. Contemptuous; insolent; disdainful.

The scornful reproof of the wealthy.

Ps. (Com. Pr.) cxxiii. 4.
The enamour'd deity

The scornful damsel shuns.
Dryden.

2. Acting in defiance.

With him I o'er the hills had run,
Scornful of Winter's frost and Summer's sun.
Prior.

SCORNFULLY. adv. [from scornful.] Contemptuously; insolently.

He us'd us scornfully; he should have shew'd us His marks of merit, wounds receiv'd for's country.
Shakespeare.

The sacred rights of the Christian church are scornfully trampled on in print, under an hypocritical pretence of maintaining them.
Atterbury, Sermon.

SCORNING.* n. s. [from scorn.] Sign or act of contempt or disdain.

Our soul is filled with the scorning of those that are at ease, and with the contempt of the proud.
Ps. cxxiii. 4.

SCORNY.* adj. [from scorn.] Deserving scorn. Not in use.

Ambition — scrapes for scornie drosse.

Mir. for Mag. p. 506.

SCORPION. n. s. [scorpion, French; scorpio, Latin.]

1. A reptile much resembling a small lobster, but that his tail ends in a point with a very venomous sting.

Well, fore-warning winds
Did seem to say, seek not a scorpion's nest.
Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

Full of scorpions is my mind, dear wife.
Shakespeare, Macbeth.

2. One of the signs of the zodiac.

The squeezing Crab and stinging Scorpion shine.
Dryden.

SCORPION Wort. }

To SCORSE.* v. a. [skoja, "Sueth. vulg. commutare, precipue equos." Serenius. The Exmore dialect has scocae, or scorse, to exchange. Grose. Sherwood notices this word as scourse, to exchange, and adds to it "a horse-scourser." Under scourse Dr. Johnson makes a similar statement from Ainsworth, with a reference to the Ital. scorsa, exchange.]

1. To barter; to exchange.

But Paridel, sore bruised with the blow,
Could not arise the counterchange to scorse.

Spenser, F. Q. iii. 9. 16.

Their fortune will'd, that after they should scorse

Blows with the big-bon'd Dane, exchanging force for force. Drayton, Polyolb. S. 12.

2. [Scorso, Ital. pursued.] To chase. Not in use.

Him first from court he to the cities coursed,
And from the cities to the townes him prest,
And from the townes into the countrie forsed,
And from the country backe to private families he scorsed. Spenser, F. Q. vi. ix. 3.

To SCORSE.* v. n. To deal for the purchase of a horse. See the Swedish term, particularly applied to horse-dealers, under the verb active.

Will you scourse with him? you are in Smith-field; you may fit yourself with a fine easy going hackney.
B. Jonson, Barthol. Fair.

SCORSE.* n. s. [from the verb.] Exchange.

Therein sat an old old man, halfe blind,
And all decrepit in his feeble corse,
Yet lively رغور rested in his mind,
And recompenc'd them with a better scorse;
Weake body well is chang'd for mind's redoubled force. Spenser, F. Q. ii. ix. 55.

SCOT.† n. s. [escot, old Fr. skott, Icel. reear, Sax. schat, Teut. See SHOT.]

1. Shot; payment.

2. SCOT and Lot. Parish payments.

'Twas time to counterfeit, or that hot meragant
Scot had paid me scot and lot too. Shaks. Hen. IV.
Proteogenes, historians note,
Liv'd there a Burgess, scot and lot. Prior.

The chief point that has puzzled the freeholders, as well as those that pay scot and lot, for about these six months, is, Whether they would rather be governed by a prince that is obliged by law to be good, or by one who, if he pleases, may plunder or imprison?
Addison.

SCOT.* n. s. [Scotus, Lat. Scote, old Fr. Scotay, Sax. Anciently Ireland was called Scotland, and its inhabitants Scots. pipeyna Scotta ealons. Bede. A native of that part of Great Britain called Scotland.

Darwen stream, with blood of Scots imbrued,
And Dunbar field resounds thy praises loud.

Milton, Sonnet to Cromwell.
SCOT-FREE.† adj. [Sax. scot-freeoh.] Without payment; untaxed; unhurt.

This companion escaped not so scot-free as his fellows.
Wright of Wonders, (1608,) p. 178.

Though hee knew earst, how firme on ground he stood,

And thinke to fixe his seate with better hold;
He cannot scape yet scot-free, uncontrold'd.

Mir. for Mag. p. 159.

To SCOTCH.† v. a. [probably a corruption of the old Fr. eschorcher, to flay, or pluck off the skin; or, as Roquefort gives the word, skorchir; Ital. scorzare, the same.] To cut with shallow incisions.

He was too hard for him directly: before
Corioli, he scotcht and notch't him like a carbonado.
Shakespeare, Coriol.

SCOTCH. n. s. [from the verb.] A slight cut; a shallow incision.

We'll beat 'em into bench-holes: I have yet room for six *scotch*es more.

Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.
Give him four *scotch*es with a knife, and then put into his belly and these *scotch*es sweet herbs.
Walton, Angler.

SCOTCH.* } adj. [from Scot.] Relating to SCOTISH. } Scotland; belonging to Scot-
SCOTTISH. } land.

The French cannot but acknowledge they have seldom achieved any honourable acts without Scottish hands. Camden, Rem.

The Scotch universities hold but one term or session in the year. Johnson, Journ. West. Islands.
An attempt was made, with some success, to change the Saxonism of the Scottish speech, before king James assumed the government of England.
G. Chalmers, Sir D. Lyndsay's Works, iii. 187.

SCOUNDREL.† n. s. [scoundruolo, Italian, a hider. Skinner and Dr. Johnson. — From the Sax. ronbe, disgrace. Serenius. Sconble, base, ignominious, disgraceful; scandlich, Germ. Scoundruolo is formed from "scoundruole, a play that children use; as we say, at hood-man blind, or fox in the hole." Florio, Ital. Dict. 1598. It is from the Lat. abscondo, to hide; and hence perhaps the application of it to our word, as implying one, who, conscious of his baseness, hides himself; if the Saxon be not the true original.] A mean rascal; a low petty villain. A word rather ludicrous.

Now to be baffled by a scoundrel,
An upstart sc'rry, and a mungrel. Hudibras.
Scoundrels as these wretched Ombites be,
Canopus they exceed in luxury. Tate.
Go, if your ancient but ignoble blood
Has crept through scoundrels ever since the flood,

Go, and pretend your family is young;
Nor own your fathers have been fools so long. Pope.
SCOUNDREL.* adj. Base; disgraceful;
denoting a scoundrel.
Stealing, we all know, is the most pitiful, scoun- drel act of injustice.

Hildrop on the Commandm. p. 19.
He was of so scoundrel a temper, that he avoided ever coming into my sight.

Warburton to Hurd, Lett. 93.

SCOUNDRELISM.* n. s. [from scoundrel.]
Baseness; rascality.

Cotgrave, and Sherwood.
TO SCOUR.† v. a. [skauron, M. Goth.
skura, Su. Goth. skure, Danish; schuren, Dutch; escurer, Fr. Serenius considers skyr, skaer, skur, clear, bright, as the root. To scour, in our old books, is sometimes found for scour.]

1. To rub hard with any thing rough, in order to clean the surface.

I were better to be eaten to death with a rust, than to be scour'd to nothing with perpetual motion. Shakespeare.

By dint of sword his crown he shall increase,
And scour his army from the rust of peace. Dryden, En.

Part scour the rusty shields with seam, and part
New grind the blunted ax, and point the dart. Dryden.

Some blamed Mrs. Bull for grudging a quarter of a pound of soap and sand to scour the rooms. Arbutnot.

Poor Vadius, long with learned spleen devour'd,
Can taste no pleasure since his shield was scour'd. Pope.

2. To purge violently.

3. To cleanse; to bleach; to whiten; to blanche.

In some lakes the water is so nitrous, as if foul clothes be put into it, it scoureth them of itself;
and, if they stay, they moulder away. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

A garden-worm should be well scoured eight days in moss, before you fish with them. Walton, Angler.

Beneath the lamp her tawdry ribbons glare,
The new scour'd manteau, and the slattern air. Gay.

4. To remove by scouring.

Never came reformation in a flood
With such a heady current, scouring faults;
Nor ever hydra-headed wilfulness
So soon did lose his seat, and all at once,
As in this king. Shakespeare, Hen. V.

I will wear a garment all of blood,
And stain my favour in a bloody mask,
Which, wash'd away, shall scour my shame with it. Shakespeare.

Then, in the clemency of upward air,
We'll scour our spots, and the dire thunder's scar. Dryden.

5. To range about in order to catch or drive away something; to clear away.
[scorrere, Italian.]

The kings of Lacedemon having set out some galies, under the charge of one of their nephews, scour the sea of the pirates, they met us. Sidney.
Divers are kept continually to scour the seas,
infested greatly by pirates. Sandys.

If with thy guards thou scour'st the streets by night,

And do'st in murders, rapes, and spoils delight,
Please not thyself the flattering crowd to hear. Dryden.

6. To pass swiftly over.

Sometimes
He scours the right hand coast, sometimes the left. Milton, P. L.

Not half the number in their seats are found,
But men and steeds lie groveling on the ground;

The points of spears are stuck within the shield,
The steeds within their riders scour the field,
The knights unhors'd. Dryden.

When Ajax strives some rock's vast weight to throw,

The line too labours, and the words move slow;
Not so when swift Camilla scours the plain,
Flies o'er th' unbending cord, and skims along the main. Pope, Ess. on Criticism.

TO SCOUR.† v. n.

1. To perform the office of cleaning domestick utensils.

I keep his house, and wash, wring, brew, bake,
scour, dress meat, and make the beds. Shakespeare.

2. To clean.

Warm water is softer than cold; for it scoureth better. Bacon.

3. To be purged or lax; to be diseased with looseness.

If you turn sheep into wheat or rye to feed, let it not be too rank, lest it make them scour. Mortimer.

4. To rove; to range.

Barbarossa, scouring along the coast of Italy, struck an exceeding terror into the minds of the citizens of Rome. Knolles.

5. To run here and there.

The enemy's drum is heard, and fearful scouring
Doth chaok the air with dust. Shaks. Timon.

6. To run with great eagerness and swiftness; to scamper.

She from him fled with all her pow'r,
Who after her as hastily gan scour. Spenser, F. Q.
I saw men scour so on their way: I ey'd them
Even to their ships. Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

Word was brought him, in the middle of his schemes, that his house was robbed; and so away
he scours to learn the truth. L' Etrange.

If they be men of fraud, they'll scour off themselves, and leave those that trust them to pay the reckoning. L' Etrange.

So four fierce coursers, starting to the race,
Scour through the plain, and lengthen every pace;
Nor reins, nor curbs, nor threaten'g cries they fear,

But force along the trembling charioteer. Dryden.
As soon as any foreign object presses upon the sense, those spirits, which are posted upon the out-guards, immediately take the alarm, and scour off to the brain, which is the head quarters. Coltier.

Swift at her call her husband scour'd away,
To wreak his hunger on the destin'd prey. Pope.
SCOURER.† n. s. [from scour.]

1. One that cleans by rubbing.

[These] being but new scourers of their olde heresie. Martin, Marr. of Priests, (1554.) sign. B. i.

2. A purge, rough and quick.

3. One who runs swiftly.

SCOURGE.† n. s. [escourgée, Fr. scor- reggia, Italian; corrigia, Lat. Dr. Johnson. — Σκῆπτρον, Græco-barb. scortea;
flagellum è scorto, i. e. corio. Critop.
Emend. in Meursii Glossarium, p. 81.]

1. A whip; a lash; an instrument of discipline.

When he had made a scourge of small cords, he drove them all out of the temple. St. John, ii. 15.

The scourge
Inexorable, and the torturing hour,
Calls us to penance. Milton, P. L.

2. A punishment; a vindictive affliction.

What scourge for perjury
Can this dark monarchy afford false Clarence? Shakespeare.

See what a scourge is laid upon your hate,
That heaven finds means to kill your joys with love. Shakespeare.

Famine and plague are sent as scourges for amendment. 2 Esdras.

3. One that afflicts, harasses, or destroys.
Thus Attila was called flagellum Dei.

Is this the scourge of France?
Is this the Talbot so much fear'd abroad,
That with his name the mothers still their babes?

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.
Such conquerors are not the favourites, but scourges of God, the instruments of that vengeance.

Atterbury, Serm.
In all these trials I have born a part;
I was myself the scourge that caus'd the smart. Pope.

Immortal Jove, scourge of
Let kings no more with gentle mercy sway,
Or bless a people willing to obey,
But crush the nations with an iron rod,
And every monarch be the scourge of God. Pope.

4. A whip for a top.

If they had a top, the scourge stick and leather strap should be left to their own making. Locke.
TO SCOURGE.† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To lash with a whip; to whip.
The gods are just, and of our pleasant vices
Make instruments to scourge us. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

Is it lawful for you to scourge a Roman?

Acts, xxii. 25.
He scourg'd with many a stroke the indignant waves. Milton, P. L.

When a professor of any religion is set up to be laughed at, this cannot help us to judge of the truth of his faith, any better than if he were scourged. Watts.

2. To punish; to chastise; to chasten; to castigate with any punishment or afflic-tion.

Seeing that thou hast been scourged from heaven, declare the mighty power of God. 2 Mac. iii. 84.
He will scourge us for our iniquities, and will have mercy again. Tob. xiii. 5.

SCOURGER.† n. s. [from scourge.]

1. One that scourges; a punisher or chastiser.

2. One of the sect called flagellants, who scourged themselves. See FLAGEL-LANTS.

The sect of the scourgers broached several capital errors. Tindal, Rapin's Hist. of Eng.

SCOURGING.* n. s. [from scourge.] Punishment by the scourge.

Others had trial of cruel mockings and scourg- ings. Heb. xi. 36.

Severe disciplines of the body by excessive fastings and scourgings. Spenser on Vulg. Proph. p. 42.

SCOURING.* n. s. [from scour; old Fr.
escourença, flux de ventre. Lacombe.
A looseness; a flux.

Some apothecaries, upon stamping colicoitida, have been put into a great scouring by the vapour only. Bacon.

Convulsion and scouring, they say, do often cause one another. Graunt, Bills of Mortality.

TO SCOURGE.† v. a. To exchange one thing for another. See To SCORSE.

SCOUT.† n. s. [escout, Fr. from escouter;
auscultare, Lat. to listen; scollia, Italian.
Dr. Johnson. — "A scout has been supposed in some manner, but it is not attempted to be shewn in what manner, to belong to the verb escouter, escouter, aus-cultare, to listen; and this, merely because of a resemblance in the sound and letters of the verb. But is listening the usual business of a scout? Are his ears all, and his eyes nothing? Is he no good scout who returns with intelligence of what he has seen of the enemy, unless he has likewise overheard their delibera-ations?—A scout means (understand some one, any one,) sent out, say before an army, to collect intelligence by any means; but, I suppose, by his eyes rather than by his ears; and to give notice of the neighbourhood or position, &c. of an enemy." Div. of Parl. ii. 142. Such is the reasoning of Mr. Tooke to prove scout the past participle re-at of the Sax. scētan, to throw, to cast forth, to throw it. In a form more easy and convincing Serenius refers to an old Teutonic word, which assigns to the scout, what Mr. Tooke so earnestly contends for, the exercise of his eyes, viz. schouwv, Lat. speculator, as Kilian renders it, which means a viewer, a spy, a watch; schouw, a prospect from the top of any place where things are espied far off; schouwen, to view, to observe. Hence perhaps our northern word scout, a high rock; as overlooking the plain below.]

1. One who is sent privily to observe the motions of the enemy.

Are not the speedy scouts return'd again,
That dogg'd the mighty army of the dauphin?

Shakespeare.

As when a scout,
Through dark and desert ways with peril gone
All night, at last, by break of cheerful dawn,
Obtains the brow of some high-climbing hill.

Milton, P. L.

This great vessel may have lesser cabins, wherein scouts may be lodged for the taking of observations.

Wilkins.

The scouts to sev'ral parts divide their way,
To learn the natives' names, their towns, explore
The coasts.

Dryden, Æn.

2. A high rock. North.

Grose.

To SCOUT. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To go out in order to observe the motions of an enemy privately.

Off on the bordering deep
Encamp their legions; or with obscure wing
Scout far and wide into the realm of night,
Scorning surprise.

Milton, P. L.

Her glaring eyes, and pricks her list'ning ears to scout,
So she, to shun his toils, her cares employ'd.

Dryden.

Command a party out,
With a strict charge not to engage, but scout.

Dryden.

2. To ridicule; to sneer. This is a sense unauthorized, and vulgar.

To SCOWL. v. n. [scēhan, to squint, Saxon; skæla sig, to look sour, Icelandic.] To frown; to pout; to look angry, sour, or sullen.

Miso, her authority increased, came with scowling eyes to deliver a slandering good-morrow to the two ladies.

Sidney.

With bent louring brows, as she would threat,
She scowl'd and frowned with froward countenance.

Spenser, F. Q.

Even so, or with much more contempt, men's eyes

Did scowl on Richard.

Shakespeare, Rich. II.

Not a courtier,
Although they wear their faces to the bent
Of the king's look, but hath a heart that is Glad at the thing they scowl at.

Shakespeare, Cymb.

Fly, fly, prophane fogs! far hence fly away,
With your dull influence; it is for you
To sit and scowl upon night's heavy brow.

Crashaw.

In rueful gaze
The cattle stand, and on the scowling heavens
Cast a deploring eye. Thomson, Summer.
To SCOWL.* v. a. To drive scowlingly.
The louring element
Scowls o'er the darken'd landscape snow, or shower.
Milton, P. L.

SCOWL. n. s. [from the verb.] Look of sullenness or discontent; gloom.

I've seen the morning's lovely ray
Hover o'er the new-born day,
With rosy wings so richly bright,
As if he scorn'd to think of night;
When a ruddy storm, whose scowl
Made heaven's radiant face look foul,
Call'd for an untimely night,
To blot the newly-blossom'd light.

Crashaw.

SCOWLINGLY. adv. [from scowl.] With a frowning and sullen look.

To SCRAMBLE.† v. n. [krabbelen, schrabben, to scrape or scratch, Teut. Dr. Johnson has noticed krabbelen thus far, but has omitted what precisely illustrates the word in our translation of the Bible; and hence he has improperly defined the word "to paw with the hands." Kilian thus renders the Teut. word: "unguibus arare, radere; et inepte pingere, scribere, vel exarare." Thus, in the margin of the Bible, scramble is explained by made marks. And thus bishop Patrick on the passage: "He counterfeited himself to be out of his wits, or to be a fool who never had any: for he wrote upon the gates, and slavered, as fools are wont to do." To make unmeaning or idle marks. He feigned himself mad in their hands, and scrambled on the doors of the gate. 1 Sam. xxi. 13.

To SCRAFFLE.* v. n. [perhaps a corruption of scramble.]

1. To scramble.
2. To be industrious. Both northern expressions, noticed in the Craven Dialect and by Brockett. Grose gives another northern meaning of this verb.
3. To shuffle; to act unfairly.

Grose.

SCRAG.† n. s. [scraghe, Dutch. Dr. Johnson.—This requires explanation. Scraghe denotes fulcrum, tibia, as Kilian renders it, and Skinner allows, expressing at the same time his doubt as to this derivation; and perhaps justly, as a pedestal, a prop, a post, such as the leg of a table, which scraghe means, is at least a far-fetched illustration of what is thin or lean. Schrael, however, is an adjective, meaning slender, lean. V. Kilian. But this is hardly the etymon. Our word is probably a corruption of crag, the neck; or, after all, may be from our old word shrag, to trim, to lop, to thin trees. See To SHRAG.] Any thing thin or lean; as, a scrag of mutton, i. e. the small end of the neck: the man is a scrag, i. e. he is raw-boned.

SCRA'GGED.† adj. [This seems corrupted from cragged.] Rough; uneven; full of protuberances or asperities.

The scragged and thorny lectures of monkish and miserable sophistry.

Milton, Reas. of Ch. Gov. B. 2.

Is there then any physical deformity in the fabric of a human body, because our imagination can strip it of its muscles and skin, and shew us the scragged and knotty back-bone? Bentley, Sermon.

SCRA'GGEDNESS. } n. s. [from scragged.]
SCRA'GGINESS. } [from scraggy.]

1. Leanness; marcour.
2. Unevenness; roughness; ruggedness.

SCRA'GGILY.* adv. [from scraggy.]

Meagerly; leanly.

Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

SCRA'GGY.† adj. [from scrag.]

1. Lean; marcid; thin.

Such a constitution is easily known by the body being lean, warm, hairy, scraggy, and dry, without a disease.

Arbuthnot.

2. [Corrupted from craggy.] Rough; rugged; uneven.

The walls are high, and their foundations on scraggy rocks.

Randolph, State of the Morea, (1686), p. 6.
From a scraggy rock, whose prominence
Half overshades the ocean, hardy men,
Fearless of rending winds and dashing waves,
Cut samphire.

Philips.

To SCRAMBLE.† v. n. [The same with scramble, as Dr. Johnson observes; which see. Teut. schrabben, krabbelen. Hence, I suppose, cramble (if not an error of the press) might be another form of this word. "Up which defatigating hill we crambled, but with difficulty." Sir T. Herbert, Trav. ed. 1677. p. 200.]

1. To catch any thing eagerly and tumultuously with the hands; to catch with haste preventive of another; to contend tumultuously which shall catch any thing.

Of other care they little reckoning make,
Than how to scramble at the shearer's feast,
And shove away the worthy bidden guest.

Milton, Lycidas.

It is not to be supposed, that, when such a tree was shaking, there would be no scrambling for the fruit.

Stillingfleet.

They must have scrambled with the wild beasts for crabs and nuts.

Ray on the Creation.

2. To climb by the help of the hands: as, he scrambled up that rock.

SCRAMBLE. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Eager contest for something, in which one endeavours to get it before another.

As they were in the middle of their gambols, somebody threw a handful of apples among them, that set them presently together by the ears upon the scramble.

L'Estrange.

Because the desire of money is constantly almost every where the same, its vent varies very little, but as its greater scarcity enhances its price, and increases the scramble.

Locke.

2. Act of climbing by the help of the hands.

SCRAMBLER. n. s. [from scramble.]

1. One that scrambles.

All the little scramblers after fame fall upon him.

Addison.

2. One that climbs by help of the hands.

To SCRANCH.† v. a. [scrantsen, Dutch.] To grind somewhat crackling between the teeth. The Scots retain it, Dr. Johnson says; and the people of the north of England, Mr. Brockett adds, do the same.

SCRAN'NEL.† adj. [Of this word I know not the etymology, nor any other example. Dr. Johnson.—Mr. Warton long since observed, that scranell means thin, meager, lean; but without any etymon or further proof. In the Lancashire dialect scranell signifies lean. The Su. Goth. skrinna is also gracilis. But Wachter refers this word, peculiar perhaps to Milton, to the German schreien, clamare, vociferari; and this suggests another probable definition for the "scrannel pipe," namely, that of screaming or harsh.] Slight; poor; worthless. They when they list, their lean and flashy songs Grate on their scrannel pipes of wretched straw.

Milton, Lycidas.

SCRAP.† n. s. [from scrape, a thing scraped or rubbed off. Dr. Johnson.—Formerly written scrape. "He drinks water, and lives on pulse like a hog, or scrapes like a dog." Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 157.]

1. A small particle; a little piece; a fragment.

It is an unaccountable vanity to spend all our time raking into the *scrap*s and imperfect remains of former ages, and neglecting the clearer notices of our own. Glanville.

Trencher esquires spend their time in hopping from one great man's table to another's, only to pick up *scrap*s and intelligence. L'Estrange.

Languages are to be learned only by reading and talking, and not by *scrap*s of authors got by heart. Locke.

No rag, no scrap, of all the beau, or wit, That once so flatter'd, and that once so writ. Pope. I can never have too many of your letters: I am angry at every scrap of paper lost. Pope.

2. Crum; small particles of meat left at the table.

The contract you pretend with that base wretch, One bred of alms, and foster'd with cold dishes, With *scrap*s o' the court, is no contract. Bacon.

The attendants puff a court up beyond her bounds, for their own *scrap*s and advantage. Shakespeare, Cymb.

On bones, on *scrap*s of dogs let me be fed, My limbs uncover'd, and expos'd my head To bleak colds. Granville.

What has he else to bait his traps, Or bring his vermin in, but *scrap*s? The offals of a church distrest, A hungry vicarage at best. Swift.

3. A small piece of paper. This is properly scrap.

Pregnant with thousands flits the scrap unseen, And silent sells a king, or buys a queen. Pope.

To SCRAPE. v. a. [rcpepan, Saxon; schrapen, Dutch; 'sacropitigh, Erse.]

1. To deprive of the surface by the light action of a sharp instrument, used with the edge almost perpendicular.

These hard woods are more properly scraped than planed. Morton.

2. To take away by scraping; to erase.

They shall destroy the walls, and I will scrape her dust, and make her like the top of a rock. Ezek. xxvi. 4.

Bread for a toast lay on the coals; and, if toasted quite through, scrape off the burnt side, and serve it up. Swift.

3. To act upon any surface with a harsh noise.

The chiming clocks to dinner call; A hundred footsteps scrape the marble hall. Pope.

4. To gather by great efforts, or peaurious or trifling diligence.

Let the government be ruined by his avarice, if, by avarice, he can scrape together so much as to make his peace. South.

Unhappy those who hunt for a party, and scrape together out of every author all those things only which favour their own tenets. Watts.

To SCRAPE.† v. n.

1. To make a harsh noise.

Kate —

With edge of steel the square wood shapes, And Dido to it chaunts or scrapes.

Lovelace's Lucasta, p. 119.

2. To play ill on a fiddle.

3. To make an awkward bow. Ainsworth.

4. To SCRAPE Acquaintance. A low phrase. To curry favour, or insinuate into one's familiarity; probably from the scrapes or bows of a flatterer.

SCRAPE.† n. s.

1. Difficulty; perplexity; distress. This is a low word. [skrap, Swedish. "Draga en in i skraeper, to draw any one into difficulties." Lye.]

2. The sound of the foot drawn over the floor. [from the verb.]

3. A bow.

SCRA'PER. n. s. [from scrape.]

1. Instrument with which any thing is scraped.

Never clean your shoes on the scraper, but in the entry, and the scraper will last the longer. Swift.

2. A miser; a man intent on getting money; a scrape-penny.

Be thrifty, but not covetous; therefore give Thy need, thine honour, and thy friend his due: Never was scraper brave man. Get to live; Then live, and use it; else it is not true That thou hast gotten: surely use alone Makes money not a contemptible stone. Herbert.

3. A vile fiddler.

Out! ye sempiternal scrapers. Cowley.

Have wild boars or dolphins the least emotion at the most elaborate strains of your modern scrapers, all which have been tamed and humanized by ancient musicians? Arbutnot.

SCRAT.† n. s. [scritta, Saxon.] An hermaphrodite. Skinner, and Junius. Dr. Johnson makes no other remark on this word.—It is old, in this sense, in our lexicography. See Huloet's Dict. And is a northern expression. Ray, and Grose. Ihre considers it, as Dr. Jamieson has observed, allied to the Icel. skratt, the devil, because an hermaphrodite is "tanquam naturæ infelix monstrum." Hence, it may be added, the popular name of the evil being, "old scratch."

To SCRAT.* v. a. [escreat, Anglo-Norman. Hickes. This form is still preserved in our northern word scraut for scrach; kratsa, Swedish. "To scratyn or cratchyn, scrato, insculpo." Prompt. Parv.] To scratch.

It is an ordinary thing for women to scrat the faces of such as they suspect.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 614.

To SCRAT.* v. n. To rake; to search.

Ambitious mind a world of wealth would have, So scrats, and scrapes, for scorie and scornie drosse.

Mir. for Mag. p. 506.

To SCRATCH.† v. a. [kratzen, Germ. kratsa, Su. See To SCRAT. Welsh, crach, scabies. We had formerly the verb crach, in this sense.]

1. To tear or mark with slight incisions ragged and uneven.

The lab'ring swain

Scratch'd with a rake a furrow for his grain, And cover'd with his hand the shallow seed again. Dryden.

A sort of small sand-coloured stones, so hard as to scratch glass. Grew, Mus.

2. To tear with the nails.

How can I tell but that his talons may Yet scratch my son, or rend his tender hand? Spenser, F. Q.

I should have scratch'd out your unseeing eyes, To make my master out of love with thee. Shakspeare.

I had rather hear my dog bark at a crow, than a man swear he loves me.

— Keep your ladyship still in that mind! so some gentleman or other shall 'scape a predestinate scratch face.

— Scratching could not make it worse, au 'twere such a face as yours were.

Shakspeare, Much Ado.

Scots are like witches: do but what your pen, Scratch till the blood come, they'll not hurt you then. Cleveland.

To wish that there were nothing but such dull tame things in the world, that will neither bite nor scratch, is as childish as to wish there were no fire in nature. Morc.

Unhand me, or I'll scratch your face; Let go, for shame. Dryden.

3. To wound slightly.

4. To hurt slightly with any thing pointed or keen.

Daphne, roaming through a thorny wood, Scratching her legs, that one shall swear she bleeds. Shakspeare.

5. To rub with the nails.

Francis Cornfield did scratch his elbow, when he had sweetly invented to signify his name Saint Francis, with a friary cowl in a corn-field. Camden.

Other mechanical helps Aræteus uses to procure sleep, particularly the scratching of the temples and the ears. Arbutnot.

Be mindful, when invention fails, To scratch your head, and bite your nails. Swift.

6. To write or draw awkwardly.

If any of their labourers can scratch out a pamphlet, they desire no wit, style, or argument. Swift.

SCRATCH. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. An incision ragged and shallow.

The coarse file cuts deep, and makes deep scratches in the work; and before you can take out those deep scratches with your finer cut files, those places where the risings were when your work was forged, may become dents to your hammer dents. Moxon, Mech. Ex.

The smaller the particles of those substances are, the smaller will be the scratches, by which they continually fret and wear away the glass until it be polished; but be they never so small, they can wear away the glass no otherwise than by grating and scratching it, and breaking the protuberances; and therefore polish it no otherwise than by bringing its roughness to a very fine grain, so that the scratches and frettings of the surface become too small to become visible. Newton, Opt.

2. Laceration with the nails.

These nails with scratches shall deform my breast, Lest by my look or colour be express'd The mark of aught high-born, or ever better dress'd. Prior.

3. A slight wound.

The valiant beast turning on her with open jaws, she gave him such a thrust through his breast, that all the lion could do was with his open paw to tear off the mantle and sleeve of Zelmae, with a little scratch rather than a wound. Sidney.

Heaven forbid a shallow scratch should drive The prince of Wales from such a field as this. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

SCRA'TCHER. n. s. [from scratch.] He that scratches.

SCRA'TCHES.† n. s. pl. Cracked ulcers or scabs in a horse's foot. Ainsworth.

Thou'lt ha' vapours i' thy leg again presently;
pray thee go in, it may turn to the scratches else.

B. Jonson, Barthol. Fair.

SCRA' TOCHINGLY. adv. [from scratching.]

With the action of scratching.

Making him turn close to the ground, like a cat, when scratchingly she wheels about after a mouse.

Sidney.

SCRAW. n. s. [Irish and Erse.] Surface or scurf.

Neither should that odious custom be allowed, of cutting scraws, which is flaying off the green surface of the ground to cover their cabins, or make up their ditches.

Swift.

To SCRAWL. v. a. [I suppose to be corrupted from scrabble.] To draw or mark irregularly or clumsily.

Peruse my leaves through ev'ry part,
And think thou see'st its owner's heart,
Scrawl'd o'er with trifles thus, and quite
As hard, as senseless, and as light,

Swift.

To SCRAWL. v. n.

1. To write unskilfully and inelegantly.

Think not your verses sterling,
Though with a golden pen you scrawl,
And scribble in a Berlin.

Swift.

2. [From crawl.] To creep like a reptile.

Ainsworth.

SCRAWL. n. s. [from the verb.] Unskilful and inelegant writing.

The left hand will make such a scrawl, that it will not be legible.

Arbutnot, J. Bull.

Mr. Wycherly, hearing from me how welcome his letters would be, writ to you, in which I inserted my scrawl.

Pope.

SCRA'WLER. n. s. [from scrawl.] A clumsy and inelegant writer.

SCRAY.† n. s. [hirundo marina.] A bird called a sea-swallow.

Ray, Rem. p. 226.

SCRE'ABLE. adj. [scriabilis, Lat.] That may be spit out.

Bailey.

To SCREAM.† v. n. [Properly creak, or shriek, from skrige, Dan. Dr. Johnson. — Scream is no improper word, having the Icel. skraeka, and the Su. Goth. skrika, to support it. And it is used by Spenser, and by Sandys in his elegant translation of sacred songs, in 1648.] To make a shrill or loud noise.

The little babe did loudly scree and squall.

Spenser, F. Q. vi. iv. 18.

Women groaning with their load,
The time of their delivery near,
Anticipating pain with fear,
Screeke in their pangs.

Sandys, Paraphr. Is. 26.

SCREAK.* n. s. [from the verb.] A screech.

She used many scrikes and grievous lamentations.

Palmerin of Eng. P. i. ch. 33.

Others peep forth into the light, as it were only to see it; and having, by a screek or two, given testimony to the misery of this life, presently die and vanish.

Bp. Bull, Works, iii. 801.

To SCREAM.† v. n. [hpeman, Sax. Dr. Johnson. — Serenius notices the Saxon word, with Lye's addition of the Icel. hveimer; but considers our word as also connected with the Swed. skraema, to frighten or be frightened.]

1. To cry out shrilly, as in terror or agony.

Soon a whirlwind rose around,
And from afar he heard a screaming sound,

As of a dame distress'd, who cry'd for aid,
And fill'd with loud laments the secret shade.

Dryden.

The fearful matrons raise a screaming cry,
Old feeble men with fainter groans reply;
A jarring sound results, and mingles in the sky.

Dryden.

If chance a mouse creeps in her sight,
Can finely counterfeit a fright;
So sweetly screams, if it comes near her,
She ravishes all hearts to hear her.

Swift.

2. To cry shrilly.

I heard the owl scream, and the crickets cry.

Shakespeare.

SCREAM. n. s. [from the verb.] A shrill, quick, loud cry of terror or pain.

Our chimneys were blown down; and, as they say,
Lamentings heard i' th' air, strange screams of death.

Shakespeare.

Then flash'd the livid lightning from her eyes,
And screams of horror rend the affrighted skies.

Pope.

SCRE'AMER.* n. s. [from scream.] A bird. Pennant.

To SCREECH.† v. n. [skraeka, to cry, Icelandic.]

1. To cry out as in terror or anguish.

Screeching is an appetite of expelling that which suddenly strikes the spirits.

Bacon.

2. To cry as a night owl: thence called a screechowl.

Whilst the screech-owl screeching loud

Puts the wretch that lies in woe

In remembrance of a shroud.

Shakespeare, M. N. Dream.

There's not a plume her body bears,

But under it a watching eye doth peep —

By night 'tween earth and heaven she doth sweep

Screeching, nor shuts her eyes with balmy sleep.

Ranshaw, Tr. of Virg. Æn. 4. Poems, p. 280.

SCREECH.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Cry of horror and anguish.

The senate, hearing their groans and scratches, stood amazed.

Hakewill on Prov. p. 338.

Their strength [he] slew; which fill'd their ears
With female screeches, and their hearts with fears,

Sandys, Ps. cv.

2. Harsh horrid cry.

The birds obscene, that nightly flock'd to taste,
With hollow screeches fled from the dire repast;
And ravenous dogs, allur'd by scented blood,
And starving wolves, ran howling to the wood.

Pope.

SCREE'CHOWL. n. s. [screech and owl.] An owl that hoots in the night, and whose voice is supposed to betoken danger, misery, or death.

Deep night,
The time of night when Troy was set on fire,
The time when screechowls cry, and bandogs howl.

Shakespeare.

Let him, that will a screechowl ay be call'd,
Go into Troy, and say there, Hector's dead.

Shakespeare.

By the screechowl's dismal note,
By the black night raven's throat,
I charge thee, Hob.

Drayton.

Jupiter, though he had joggled the balance to weigh down Turnus, sent the screechowl to discourage him.

Dryden.

Sooner shall screechowls bask in sunny day,
Than I forget my shepherd's wonted love.

Gay.

SCREEN. n. s. [escrian, Fr.]

1. Any thing that affords shelter or concealment.

Now near enough: your leavy screens throw down,

And show like those you are.

Shaksp. Macbeth.

Some ambitious men seem as screens to princes in matters of danger and envy

Bacon.

Our people, who transport themselves, are settled in those interjacent tracts, as a screen against the insults of the savages.

Swift.

My juniors by a year,

Who wisely thought my age a screen,
When death approach'd, to stand between,
The screen remov'd, their hearts are trembling.

Swift.

2. Any thing used to exclude cold or light.

When there is a screen between the candle and the eye, yet the light passeth to the paper whereon one writeth.

Bacon.

One speaks the glory of the British queen,

And one describes a charming Indian queen.

Pope.

Ladies make their old clothes into patchwork for screens and stools.

Swift.

3. A riddle to sift sand.

To SCREEN. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To shelter; to conceal; to hide.

Back'd with a ridge of hills,

That screen'd the fruits of th' earth and seats of men
From cold Septentrion blasts.

Milton, P. R.
A good magistrate's retinue of state screens him from the dangers which he is to incur for the sake of it.

Atterbury.

This gentle deed shall fairly be set foremost,
To screen the wild escapes of lawless passion.

Rowe.

2. [Cerno crevi, Lat.] To sift; to riddle.

Let the cases be filled with natural earth, taken the first half spit, from just under the turf of the best pasture ground, mixed with one part of very yellow soil screened.

Evelyn.

SCREW. n. s. [scroove, Dutch; escroué, French.] One of the mechanical powers, which is defined a right cylinder cut into a furrowed spiral: of this there are two kinds, the male and female, the former being cut convex, so that its threads rise outwards; but the latter channelled on its concave side, so as to receive the former.

Quincy.

The screw is a kind of wedge, that is multiplied or continued by a helical revolution about a cylinder, receiving its motion not from any stroke, but from a twist at one end of it.

Wilkins, Math. Magic.

After your apples are ground, commit them to the screw press, which is the best.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

To SCREW. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To turn or move by a screw.

Some, when the press by utmost vigour screw'd,
Has drain'd the pulpos mass, regale their swine
With the dry refuse.

Philips.

2. To fasten with a screw.

We fail!

But screw your courage to the sticking place,
And we'll not fail.

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

To screw your lock on the door, make wide holes, big enough to receive the shank of the screw.

Mozon.

3. To deform by contortions.

Sometimes a violent laughter screw'd his face,
And sometimes ready tears dropp'd down apace.

Cowley.

He screw'd his face into a harden'd smile,
And said, Sebastian knew to govern slaves.

Dryden.

With screwed face, and doleful whine, they ply you with senseless harangues against human inventions on the one hand, and loud outcries for a further reformation on the other.

South.

Let others screw their hypocritical face,
She shews her grief in a sincerer place.

Swift.

4. To force; to bring by violence.

He resolved to govern by subaltern ministers, who screwed up the pins of power too high.

Howell, Voc. For.

No discourse can be, but they will try to turn the tide, and draw it all into their own channel; or they will screw in here and there some intimations of what they said or did. Gov. of the Tongue.

The rents of land in Ireland, since they have been so enormously raised and screwed up, may be computed to be about two millions. Swift.

5. To squeeze; to press.

6. To oppress by extortion.

Our country landlords, by unmeasurable screwing and racking their tenants, have already reduced the miserable people to a worse condition than the peasants in France. Swift.

SCREW Tree. n. s. [isora, Latin.] A plant of the East and West Indies.

SCREWER.* n. s. [from screw.] Whoever or whatever screws.

Musick seemeth a *screw*er up of lower passions. Whitlock, Man. of the English, (1654), p. 484.

Popes were not then very scribations, or not so pragmatical. Barrow on the Pope's Supremacy.

To SCRIBBLE.† v. a. [scribo, scribillo, Latin.]

1. To fill with artless or worthless writing. Drugs, and doses, prescribed in strange affected terms of art, and ill scribbled bills; which seem to be as so many charms or spells.

Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 54.

How gird the sphere

With centrick and eccentric, scribbled o'er

Cycle and epicycle, orb in orb. Milton, P. L.

2. To write without use or elegance: as, he scribbled a pamphlet.

3. To comb wool.

To SCRIBBLE. v. n. To write without care or beauty. If a man should affirm, that an ape casually meeting with pen, ink, and paper, and falling to scribble, did happen to write exactly the Leviathan of Hobbes, would an Atheist believe such a story? And yet he can easily digest things as incredible as that. Benley.

If Mævius scribble in Apollo's spite, There are, who judge still worse than he can write. Pope.

Leave flattery to fulsome dedicators, Whom, when they praise, the world believes no more Than when they promise to give scribbling o'er. Pope.

SCRIBBLE. n. s. [from the verb.] Worthless writing.

By solemnly endeavouring to countenance my conjectures, I might be thought dogmatical in a hasty scribble. Boyle.

If it struck the present taste, it was soon transferred into the plays and current scribbles of the week, and became an addition to our language. Swift.

SCRIBBLER. n. s. [from scribble.] A petty author; a writer without worth.

The most copious writers are the arantest scribblers, and in so much talking the tongue runs before the wit. L'Estrange.

The actors represent such things as they are capable, by which they and the scribbler may get their living. Dryden.

The scribbler, pinch'd with hunger, writes to dine, And to your genius must conform his line. Granville.

To affirm he had cause to apprehend the same treatment with his father, is an improbable scandal flung upon the nation by a few bigoted French scribblers. Swift.

Nobody was concerned or surprised, if this or that scribbler was proved a dunce.

Letter to Pope's Dunciad.

SCRIBE.† n. s. [scribe, French; scriba, Latin.]

1. Written; not orally delivered. Wills are nuncupatory and scriptory. Swift, Tale of a Tub, § 2.

2. Serving to writing.

With such differences of reeds, vallatory, sagitary, scriptory, and others, they might be furnished in Judea. Sir T. Brown, Miscell. p. 82.

SCRIPTURAL. adj. [from scripture.] Contained in the Bible; biblical.

Creatures, the scriptural use of that word determines sometimes to men. Atterbury.

SCRIPTURE.† n. s. [scripture, old Fr. scriptura, Lat.]

1. Writing.

It is not only remembered in many scriptures, but famous for the death and overthrow of Crassus. Raleigh.

2. Sacred writing; the Bible.

With us there is never any time bestowed in divine service, without the reading of a great part of the holy scripture, which we account a thing most necessary. Hooker.

The devil can cite scripture for his purpose: An evil soul producing holy witness, Is like a villain with a smiling cheek. Shakespeare.

There is not any action which a man ought to do, or to forbear, but the scripture will give him a clear precept, or prohibition for it. South.

Forbear any discourse of other spirits, till his reading the scripture history put him upon that enquiry. Locke.

Scripture proof was never the talent of these men, and 'tis no wonder they are failed. Atterbury.

Why are scripture maxims put upon us, without taking notice of scripture examples, that lie cross 'em? Atterbury.

The Author of nature and the scriptures has expressly enjoined, that he who will not work shall not eat. Seed, Serm.

SCRIPTURIST.* n. s. [from scripture.] One who thoroughly understands the sacred writings.

Wicliffe was not only a good divine and scripturist, but well skilled in the civil, canon, and English law.

Abp. Newcome on the Eng. Transl. of the Bib. p. 6.

SCRIVENER.† n. s. [scrivano, Ital. Dr. Johnson. — Escrivain, French, from the old word scrivere, to write.]

1. One who draws contracts. We'll pass the business privately and well: Send for your daughter by your servants here, My boy shall fetch the scrivener. Shakespeare, Tam. of the Shrew.

2. One whose business is to place money at interest. How happy in his low degree, Who leads a quiet country life, And from the gripping scrivener free? Dryden, Hor.

I am reduced to beg and borrow from scriveners and usurers, that suck the heart and blood. Arbutnot, J. Bull.

SCROFULA. n. s. [from scrofa, Latin, a sow, as scrofa.] A depravation of the humours of the body, which breaks out in sores commonly called the king's evil.

If matter in the milk dispose to coagulation, it produces a scrofula. Wiseman of Tumours.

SCROFULOUS. adj. [from scrofula.] Diseased with the scrofula.

Scrofulous persons can never be duly nourished; for such as have tumours in the parotides often have them in the pancreas and mesentery. Arbutnot on Aliments.

English consumptions generally proceed from a scrofulous disposition. Arbutnot.

What would become of the race of men in the next age, if we had nothing to trust to, beside the scrofulous consumptive production furnished by our men of wit and pleasure? Swift.

SCROG.* n. s. [rcpob, Saxon.] A stunted shrub, bush, or branch; yet used in some parts of the north. A shrub was formerly called scrub, or scrob. See SHRUB.

SCROLL.† n. s. [Supposed by Minshew to be corrupted from roll; by Skinner derived from an escrouelle given by the heralds: whence parchment, wrapped up into a resembling form, has the same name. It may be observed, that a gaoler's list of prisoners is escrou. Dr. Johnson. — I may further observe, that our own old word is scrow. "Scrow, or schedule of paper." Huloet. The old French word escrouë is also a steward's roll of expences, a breviary of cases or causes in law; escrouet, any roll, a cylinder.] A writing wrapped up.

His chamber all was hanged about with rolls,
And old records from ancient times deriv'd;
Some made in books, some in long parchment
scrolls,
That were all worm-eaten, and full of canker holes.

We'll add a royal number to the dead,
Gracing the scroll, that tells of this war's loss,
With slaughter coupled to the name of kings.

Here is the scroll of every man's name, which is thought fit through all Athens to play in our interlude.

A Numidian priest, bellowing out certain superstitious charms, cast divers scrolls of paper on each side the way, wherein he cursed and banned
the Christians.

He drew forth a scroll of parchment, and delivered it to our foremost man.

Such follow him, as shall be register'd;
Fart good; fart bad: of bad the longer scroll.

With this epistolary scroll,
Receive the partner of my inmost soul.
Yet, if he wills, may change or spoil the whole;
May take you beauteous, mystick, starry roll,
And burn it, like an useless parchment scroll.

SCROYLE.† n. s. [It seems derived from escrouelle, French, a scrofulous swelling; as Shakespeare calls a mean fellow a scab from his itch, or a patch from his raggedness.] A mean fellow; a rascal; a wretch.

The scroyles of Angiers flout you kings,
And stand securely on their battlements,
As in a theatre.
Hang 'em, scroyles! there's nothing in them!
the world.

To SCRUB.† v. a. [skrubba, Swedish; schrobben, Dutch.] To rub hard with something coarse and rough.

Such wrinkles as a skilful hand would draw
For an old grandam ape, when, with a grace,
She sits at squat, and scrubs her leathern face.

She never would lay aside the use of brooms and scrubbing brushes.

Now Moll had whirl'd her mop with dextrous airs,

Prepar'd to scrub the entry and the stairs.

SCRUB.† n. s. [from the verb; schrobbet, Dutch, a vile or mean fellow.]

1. A mean fellow, either as he is supposed to scrub himself for the itch, or as he is employed in the mean offices of scouring away dirt.

They are esteemed scrubs and fools by reason of their carriage. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 127.

2. Any thing mean or despicable.

With a dozen large vessels my vault shall be stor'd;

No little scrub joint shall come on my board.

3. A shrub. See SHRUB.

4. A worn-out broom.

SCRUBBED.† adj. [scrubbet, Danish. Dr. Johnson. — Scrub formerly signified scrub, as Mr. Malone also has observed. Scrubbed may therefore apply to what is stunted, stubbed, or shrub-like, low, short, and thence to worthless, sorry, vile. Shakespeare and Swift illustrate this etymon of scrubbed, and scrubby, in their application of the words to a boy and a tree: See the examples.] Mean; vile; worthless; dirty; sorry.

I gave it to a youth,

A kind of boy, a little scrubbed boy,

No higher than thyself. Shaks. Merch. of Ven.

The scrubbiest cur in all the pack

Can set the mastiff on your back.

The scene a wood, produc'd no more

Than a few scrubby trees before.

To SCRUDGE.* v. a. To crowd thickly together; to squeeze. This is the northern word. In Middlesex it is scrouge: "We were so scrouged," i. e. crowded. See Grose, and Brockett.

See also TO SCRUIZE.

SCRUF. n. s. The same, I suppose, with scurf, by a metathesis usual in pronunciation.

SCRUPLE.† n. s. [scrupule, French; scrupulus, Latin. Dr. Johnson. — Originally scrupule and scrupulus mean a little sharp stone falling into a man's shoe, and hindering him in his gait. See Cotgrave and Ainsworth. Hence its application to difficulty or doubt of proceeding.]

1. Doubt; difficulty of determination; perplexity: generally about minute things.

Macduff, this noble passion,

Child of integrity, hath from my soul

Wip'd the black scruples, reconcil'd my thoughts

To your good truth.

Nothing did more fill foreign nations with admiration of his succession, than the consent of all estates of England for the receiving of the king without the least scruple, pause, or question.

For the matter of your confession, let it be severe and serious; but yet so as it may be without any inordinate anxiety, and unnecessary scruples, which only entangle the soul.

Men make no scruple to conclude, that those propositions, of whose knowledge they can find in themselves no original, were certainly the impress of God and nature upon their minds, and not taught them by any one else.

2. Twenty grains; the third part of a dram.

Milk one ounce, oil of vitriol a scruple, doth coagulate the milk at the bottom, where the vitriol goeth.

3. Proverbially, any small quantity.

Nature never lends

The smallest scruple of her excellence,

But, like a thrifty goddess, she determines

Herself the glory of a creditor.

Shakspeare, Meas. for Meas.

To SCRUPLE.* v. n. [from the noun.] To doubt; to hesitate.

He scrupled not to eat

Against his better knowledge; nor deceiv'd,

But fondly overcome with female charms.

Milton, P. L.

To SCRUPLE.* v. a. To cause to scruple or doubt.

Vulgar hearts wanted satisfaction in nothing concerning the king's integrity, but only in the matter of those letters, which did still scruple many of them. Symmonds, Vind. of K. Ch. I. (1648.)

SCRUPLER.† n. s. [from scruple.] A doubter; one who has scruples.

Away with those nice scruplers, who for some further ends have endeavoured to keep us in an undue sense.

By. Hall, Rem. p. 295.

The scruples which many public ministers would make of the worthiness of parents to have their children baptised, forced such questioned parents, who did not believe the necessity of having their children baptised by such scruplers, to carry their children unto other ministers.

Graunt, Bills of Mortality.

To SCRUPULIZE.* v. a. [from scruple.] To perplex with scruples.

Other articles may be so scrupulized.

Montagu, App. to Cas. (1625.) p. 244.

SCRUPULOSITY. n. s. [from scrupulous.]

1. Doubt; minute and nice doubtfulness.

The one sort they warned to take heed, that scrupulosity did not make them rigorous in giving unadvised sentence against their brethren which were free; the other, that they did not become scandalous, by abusing their liberty and freedom to the offence of their weak brethren, which were scrupulous.

So careful, even to scrupulosity, were they to keep their sabbath, that they must not only have a time to prepare them for that, but a further time also to prepare them for their very preparations.

2. Fear of acting in any manner; tenderness of conscience.

The first sacrilege is looked on with horror; but when they have made the breach, their scrupulosity soon retires.

Dec. of Chr. Piety.

SCRUPULOUS. adj. [scrupuleux, Fr. scrupulosus, Latin; from scruple.]

1. Nicely doubtful; hard to satisfy in determinations of conscience.

They warned them that they did not become scandalous, by abusing their liberty, to the offence of their weak brethren which were scrupulous.

Some birds, inhabitants of the waters, whose blood is cold as fishes, and their flesh is so like in taste, that the scrupulous are allowed them on fish-days.

2. Given to objections; captious.

Equality of two domestic powers

Breeds scrupulous faction. Shaks. Ant. and Cleop.

3. Nice; doubtful.

As the cause of a war ought to be just, the justice of that cause ought to be evident; not obscure, not scrupulous.

4. Careful; vigilant; cautious.

I have been the more scrupulous and wary, in regard the inferences from these observations are of importance.

Woodward.

SCRUPULOUSLY. adv. [from scrupulous.]

Carefully; nicely; anxiously.

The duty consists not scrupulously in minutes and half hours.

By. Taylor.

Henry V. manifestly derived his courage from his piety, and was scrupulously careful not to ascribe the success of it to himself.

Addison, Frecholder.

SCRUPULOUSNESS. n. s. [from scrupulous.]

The state of being scrupulous.

Others by their weakness, and fear, and scrupulousness, cannot fully satisfy their own thoughts.

Puller, Mod. of the Ch. of Eng. p. 16.
If the like scrupulousness was observed in registering the smallest changes in profane authors.

Bentley, Phil. Lips. § 32.

SCRUTABLE. adj. [from scrutor, Lat.] Discoverable by inquiry.

Shall we think God so scrutable, or ourselves so penetrating, that none of his secrets can escape us?

Decay of Chr. Piety.

SCRUTATION. n. s. [scrutor, Lat.] Search; examination; inquiry.

SCRUTATOR. † n. s. [scrutateur, Fr. from scrutor, Lat.] Enquirer; searcher; examiner.

The scrutators were two of the seculars.

Hales, Lett. from the Syn. of Dort, (1618,) p. 2.

In process of time, from being a simple scrutator, an archdeacon came to have jurisdiction more amply.

Ayliffe.

SCRUTINEER. n. s. [scrutator, Lat.] A searcher; an examiner.

SCRUTINOUS. adj. [from scrutiny.] Capacious; full of inquiries. A word little used.

Age is froward, uneasy, scrutinous,

Hard to be pleas'd, and parsimonious. Denham.

TO SCRUTINIZE. † v. a. [from scrutiny.]
TO SCRUTINY. } To search; to examine.

The compromissarii should chuse according to the votes of such, whose votes they were obliged to scrutinize.

Ayliffe.

SCRUTINY. † n. s. [scrutine, old French; scrutinum, Lat. The Saxon verb reputan, to scrutiny, has been used.] Enquiry; search; examination with nicety.

In the scrutinies for righteousness and judgment, when it is inquired whether such a person be a good man or no, the meaning is not what does he believe or hope, but what he loves.

Bp. Taylor, Rule of Living Holy.

I thought these worth my nearer view

And narrower scrutiny, that I might learn

In what degree or meaning thou art call'd

The Son of God. Milton, P. R.

They that have designed exactness and deep scrutiny, have taken some one part of nature. Hales.

Their difference to measure, and to reach,

Reason well rectify'd must nature teach;

And these high scrutinies are subjects fit

For man's all-searching and enquiring wit.

Denham.

We are admonish'd of want of charity to others, and want of a Christian scrutiny and examination into ourselves.

L' Etrange.

When any argument of great importance is managed with that warmth which a serious conviction of it generally inspires, somewhat may easily escape, even from a wary pen, which will not bear the test of a severe scrutiny.

Atterbury.

These, coming not within the scrutiny of human senses, cannot be examined by them, or attested by any body.

Locke.

SCRUTOIRE. n. s. [for scrittoire, or escri-toire.] A case of drawers for writing.

I locked up these papers in my scrutoire, and my scrutoire came to be unlocked.

Prior.

TO SCRUE. v. a. [Perhaps from screw.] This word, though now disused by writers, is still preserved, at least in its corruption, to scrue, in the London jargon.] To squeeze; to compress.

Tho' up he caught him 'twixt his puissant hands, And having scrue'd out of his carrior corse

The loathful life, now loos'd from sinful bands, Upon his shoulders carried him. Spenser, F. Q.

TO SCUD. † v. n. [squittire, Italian; skutta, Swedish; skiotur, swift, Icelandic.]

1. To flee; to run away with precipitation.

The vote was no sooner passed, but away they scudded to the next lake. L' Etrange.

The frighted satyrs, that in woods delight,
Now into plains with prick'd-up ears take flight;
And scudding thence, while they their horn-fest ply,
About their sires the little sylvens cry. Dryden.

Away the frighted spectre scuds,
And leaves my lady in the suds. Swift.

2. To be carried precipitately before a tempest: applied to a ship.

TO SCUD.* v. a. To pass over quickly.

A shepherd, from the lofty brow

Of some proud cliff, surveys his lessening flock

In snowy groups diffusive scud the vale.

Shenstone, Ruin'd Abbey.

SCUD.* n. s. [from the verb.] A cloud swiftly driven by the wind.

The combat thickens, like the storm that flies

From westward, when the showery scuds arise. Dryden.

TO SCUDGLE. v. n. [from scud.] To run with a kind of affected haste or precipitation. A low word: commonly pronounced scuttle.

SCUFFLE. † n. s. [This word is derived by Skinner from shuffe. Dr. Johnson.—

It seems to be directly from the Swedish skuffa, "animo irato impetere," to push angrily; to jostle. See Serenius.] A confused quarrel; a tumultuous broil.

His captain's heart,

In the scuffles of great fights hath burst

The buckles on his breast. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

Avowed atheists, placing themselves in the seat of the scorner, take much pleasing diversion, by deriding our eager scuffles about that which they think nothing.

Decay of Chr. Piety.

The dog leaps upon the serpent, and tears it to pieces; but in the scuffle the cradle happened to be overturned.

L' Etrange.

Popish missionaries mix themselves in these dark scuffles, and animate the mob to such outrages and insults.

Addison.

TO SCUFFLE. v. n. [from the noun.] To fight confusedly and tumultuously.

I must confess I've seen, in former days,

The best knights in the world, and scuffled in some frays. Dryden.

A gallant man had rather fight to great disadvantage in the field, in an orderly way, than scuffle with an undisciplined rabble.

King Charles.

TO SCUG.* v. a. [skugga, Swedish, shade.] To hide. Used in the north of England, according to Grose; and in the Craven dialect scug is a sheltered place.

TO SCULK. † v. n. [sculcke, Danish. Dr. Johnson.—Serenius more satisfactorily refers our word to the Su. Goth. skiolka, to seek hiding-places; from skiol, skiol, Icel. and Su. Goth. a covert or hiding-place.] To lurk in hiding-places; to lie close.

Are not you he that rather than you durst go an industrious voyage, being pressed to the islands, skulk'd till the fleet was gone?

Beaumont and Fl. Love's Cure.

It has struck on a sudden into such a reputation, that it scorns any longer to sculk, but owns itself publicly.

Gov. of the Tongue.

Fearing to be seen, within a bed

Of coleworts he conceal'd his wily head;

There skulk'd till afternoon, and watch'd his time.

Dryden.

My prophets and my sophists finish'd here

Their civil efforts of the verbal war;

Not so my rabbins and logicians yield;

Retiring still they combat; from the field

Of open arms unwilling they depart,
And skulk behind the subterfuge of art. Prior.

No news of Phyl! the bridegroom came,
And thought his bride had skulk'd for shame;
Because her father us'd to say
The girl had such a bashful way. Swift.

SCULKER. n. s. [from skulk.] A lurker; one that hides himself for shame or mischief.

SCULL. † n. s. [It is derived by Skinner from shell, in some provinces called shull; as testa and teste, or tête, signify the head. Lye observes more satisfactorily, that skola is in Icelandick the skull of an animal. Dr. Johnson.—Still the derivation is the same, as that of the word to which the skull is resembled. See Wachter in V. SCHALE. "Plures habet significatus, à notione tegendi desumptos; et hæc notio oritur à verbo Scandico antiquissimo skyla, skiuile, tegere.—Composita, hirsnschale, cranium, os quo cerebrum tegitur; nusschale, cortex nucis."] 1. The bone which incases and defends the brain; the arched bone of the head.

Fractures of the skull are at all times very dangerous, as the brain becomes affected from the pressure. Sharp.

2. A small boat; a cockboat. [See the etymology in SCULLER.] Sherwood.

3. One who rows a cockboat.

Like catiff vile, that for misdeed
Rides with his face to rump of steed;
Or rowing skull, he's fain to love,
Look one way and another move. Hudibras.

4. [Seeole, Sax. an assembly; a great collection of persons; and thence applied to shoals of fish: not peculiar to Milton, as Dr. Johnson states it, confining the word to his poetical style; but common in our old language. "Skull of fish," Prompt. Parv. and Barret. "examen vel agmen piscium." "Skull, a company of fish swimming together." Cockeram, and Bullokar. Mr. Horne Tooke and Dr. Jamieson deduce peole from peylan, to separate, skilia, Su. Goth. a skull seeming to signify one company disjoined from another.] A shoal of fish. The word is still applied, on the coast of Norfolk and Suffolk, to herrings.

They fly, or die, like scaled skulls
Before the belching whale. Shakspeare, Tr. and Cr.

Each bay

With fry innumerable swarm, and shoals
Of fish, that with their fins and shining scales
Glide under the green wave, in skulls that oft Bank the mid sea. Milton, P. L.

SCULLCAP. n. s. [scull and cap.]

1. A headpiece.

2. A nightcap.

SCULLER. † n. s. [Of this word I know not the etymology. Skola is, in Icelandic, a sort of vessel; and escuelle in French, a dish. Dr. Johnson.—Translatum videtur à Sueth. skol, fluxus aquæ; Goth. skiola, Sueth. skyla; vas quoddam, à skoelja, perfundere, eluere. Serenius.] 1. A cockboat; a boat in which there is but one rower.

Her soul already was consign'd to fate,
And shiv'ring in the leaky sculler sate. Dryden.

They hire their sculler, and, when once aboard,
Grow sick, and damn the climate like a lord. Pope.

2. One that rows a cockboat.

If they called a boat, says a waterman, I am first sculler; if they step to the Rose to take a bottle, the drawer would cry, Friend, we sell no ale. Swift.

SCULLERY.† n. s. [from skiola, a vessel, Icelandic; or escuelle, French, a dish. Dr. Johnson.—From the Icel. skola, Su. Goth. skœlja, to wash. Serenius, and Ihre. But the former derivation is the immediate one. See also SCULLION.] The place where common utensils, as kettles or dishes, are cleaned and kept.

Pyreicus was famous for counterfeiting base things, as pitchers, a scullery, and setting rogues together by the ears. Peacham.

SCULLION.† n. s. [sculier, old French; "officier qui a soin de la vaisselle et des plats." Lacombe. This refers to the other old word escuelle, a dish.] The lowest domestick servant, that washes the kettles and the dishes in the kitchen.

I must, like a whore, unpack my heart with words,
And fall a-cursing like a very drab,
A scullion, fye upon't! foh! about my brain. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

If the gentleman hath lain there, get the cook, the stablemen, and the scullion, to stand in his way. Swift.

SCULLIONLY.* adj. [from scullion.] Low; base; worthless.

This fellow brought forth his scullionly paraphrase on St. Paul. Milton, Colasterion.

To SCULP. v. a. [sculpo, Lat. sculper, Fr.] To carve; to engrave. A word not in use.

O that the tenor of my just complaint
Were sculpt with steel on rocks of adamant! Sondys.

SCULPTILE.† adj. [sculptilis, Lat.] Made by carving.

In a silver medal is upon one side Moses horned, and on the reverse the commandment against sculptile images. Brown.

All carved images they abhor, and anathematize the adorners of sculptile representations, Ricaut, State of the Greek Ch. p. 322.

SCULPTOR. n. s. [sculptor, Lat. sculpteur, Fr.] A carver; one who cuts wood or stone into images.

Thy shape's in every part
So clean, as might instruct the sculptor's art. Dryden.

The Latin poets give the epithets of trifidum and triviscum to the thunderbolt, from the sculptors and painters that lived before them, that had given it three forks. Addison.

SCULPTURE. n. s. [sculptura, Latin; sculpture, Fr.]

1. The art of carving wood, or hewing stone into images.

Then sculpture and her sister arts revive,
Stones leap'd to form, and rocks began to live. Pope.

2. Carved work.

Nor did there want
Cornice or freeze with bossy sculptures graven. Milton, P. L.

There too, in living sculpture, might be seen
The mad affection of the Cretan queen. Dryden.

3. The art of engraving on copper.

To SCULPTURE. v. a. [from the noun.] To cut; to engrave.

Gold, silver, ivory vases sculptur'd high,
There are who have not. Pope.

SCUM.† n. s. [escume, Fr. schiuma, Ital. skum, Dan. schum, Dutch. Dr. Johnson.—"In the Hebrew language choma signifies butter; we have prefixed an s or hiss before it, and thence have scum, butter being nothing but the valuable skimming of milk. And when we say the scum of the people, we mean the refuse of them; by a very easy metaphor, taken from the skimming of a boiling pot." Dr. Harris's Comment. on the 53d Ch. of Isaiah, 2d ed. 1739, p. 199.]

1. That which rises to the top of any liquor.

The rest had several offices assigned;
Some to remove the scum as it did rise;
Others to bear the same away did mind;
And others it to use according to his kind. Spenser, F. Q.

The salt part of the water doth partly rise into a scum on the top, and partly goeth into a sediment in the bottom. Bacon.

Gather'd like scum, and settled to itself,
Self-fed, and self-consum'd. Milton, Comus.

Away, ye scum,
That still rise upmost when the nation boils. Dryden.

They mix a medicine to foment their limbs,
With scum that on the molten silver swims. Dryden.

2. The dross; the refuse; the recrement; that part which is to be thrown away.

There flocked unto him all the scum of the Irish out of all places, that ere long he had a mighty army. Spenser.

Some forty gentlemen excepted, had we the very scum of the world, such as their friends thought it an exceeding good gain to be discharged of. Raleigh, Ess.

I told thee what would come
Of all thy vapouring, base scum. Hudibras.
The Scythian and Egyptian scum
Had almost ruin'd Rome. Roscommon.

You'll find, in these hereditary tales,
Your ancestors the scum of broken jails. Dryden, Jew.

The great and innocent are insulted by the scum
and refuse of the people. Addison, Freeholder.

To SCUM. v. a. [from the noun.] To clear off the scum; commonly written and spoken skim.

A second multitude
Severing each kind, and scumm'd the bullion dross. Milton, P. L.

Hear, ye sullen powers below;
Hear, ye taskers of the dead;
You that boiling cauldrons blow,
You that scum the molten lead! Dryden, and Lee, Ædipus.

What corns swim upon the top of the brine, scum
off. Mortimer, Husbandry.

SCUMBER. n. s. [from scum.] The dung of a fox.

SCUMMER.† n. s. [escumoir, Fr.] A vessel with which liquor is skimmed, commonly called a skimmer.

The salt, after its crystallizing, falls down to the bottom, and they take it out by wooden scummers, and put it in frails. Ray, Rem. p. 120.

SCUPPER HOLES.† n. s. [schoepen, Dutch to draw off.]

1. In a ship, small holes on the deck, through which water is carried into the sea. The leathers over those holes are called scupper leathers, and the nails with which they are fastened scupper nails. Bailey.

The blood at scupper holes run out. Ward.

2. Simply, scuppers.

Her scuppers may be left unset, whereby the water runs down her timbers years together.

Maydman, Naval Speculat. (1691.) p. 73.

SCURF.† n. s. [crupp, Saxon; skurf, Dan. schorft, Teut. skorf, Su. Goth. from skorpa, crusta, according to Serenius.]

1. A kind of dry military scab.
Her crafty head was altogether bald,
And, as in hate of honourable eld,
Was overgrown with scurf and filthy scald. Spenser, F. Q.

The virtue of his hands
Was lost among Patolcus' sands,
Against whose torrent while he swims,
The golden scurf peels off his limbs. Swift.

2. A soil or stain adherent.

Then are they happy, when by length of time
The scurf is worn away of each committed crime,
No speck is left. Dryden.

3. Any thing sticking on the surface.

There stood a hill, whose grisly top
Shone with a glossy scurf. Milton, P. L.
Upon throwing in a stone, the water boils; and at the same time are seen little flakes of scurf rising up. Addison.

SCURFINES.† n. s. [from scurf.] The state of being scurfy.

In wretched beggary,
And mangy misery,
In lousy lothumnesse,
And scabbed scurffynesse. Skelton, Poems, p. 81.

SCURFY.* adj. [from scurf.] Having scurf or scabs. Dr. Johnson has used it in defining scurffiness.

SCURRILE.† adj. [scurrilis, Latin. Dr. Johnson writes this word scurril; but it is most usual to write it scurrile, as fragile, docile, hostile, gracile, &c.] Low; mean; grossly opprobrious; lewdly jocose.

With him, Patroclus,
Upon a lazy bed, the live-long day
Breaks scurril jests. Shakespeare, Tr. and Cress.
Scurrile talk, obscene actions.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 496.
Were it not for quaffing, ribaldry, dalliance, scurrile profaneness, these men would be dull, and
(as we say) dead on the nest! Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 7.
Nothing can conduce more to letters than to examine the writings of the ancients, — provided the plagues of judging and pronouncing against them be away; such as envy, bitterness, precipitation, impudence, and scurril scoffing. B. Johnson.
Thou mov'st me more by barely naming him,
Than all thy foul unmanner'd scurril taunts. Dryden.

SCURRILITY. n. s. [scurrilite, Fr. scurrilitas, Lat.] Grossness of reproach; lewdness of jocularity; mean buffoonery.

Good master Holofernes, purge; so it shall please you to abrogate scurrility. Shakespeare.
Banish scurrility and profaneness, and restrain the licentious insolence of poets. Dryden.

SCURRILOUS. adj. [scurrilis, Lat.] Grossly opprobrious; using such language as only the license of a buffoon can warrant; lewdly jocular; vile; low.

Scurrilous and more than satirical immodesty. Hooker.

Let him approach singing. Forewarn him that he use no scurrilous words in his tunes. Shakespeare, Winter.

How often is a person, whose intentions are to do good by the works he publishes, treated in as scurrilous a manner as if he were an enemy to mankind! Addison, Freeholder.

Amphibious, between sea and land,
The river horse. Milton, P. L.

The pilot ———
Moors by his side under the lee, while night
Invests the sea. Milton, P. L.

Small fragments of shells, broken by storms on some shores, are used for manuring of sea land.

They put to sea with a fleet of three hundred sail.
Arbuthnot.
Sea racing dolphins are train'd for our motion,
Moony tides swelling to roll us ashore.

Dryden's Albion.

But like a rock unmov'd, a rock that braves
The raging tempest, and the rising waves,

Propp'd on himself he stands : his solid sides
Wash off the sea weeds, and the sounding tides.
The sea could not be moved. Dryden.

The sea could not be much narrower than it is,
without a great loss to the world. Bentley.
So when the first bold vessel dar'd the seas,
High on the stern the Thersian wilds

While Argo saw her kindred trees
Descend from Pelion to the main, Pope.

By the sea of Galilee. St. Matth. iv. 18.
Proverbially for any large quantity.

That sea of blood which hath in Ireland been barbarously shed, is enough to drown in eternal infamy and misery the malicious author and insti-

Any thing rough and tempestuous.
To sorrow abandon'd, but worse felt within

And in a troubled sea of passion tost. Milton, P. L.
Half SEAS over. Half drunk.
 The whole magistracy was pretty well dismissed

The whole magistracy was pretty well disguised before I gave 'em the slip: our friend the alderman was half seas over before the bonfire was out.

EA is often used in composition, as will appear in the following examples.

ABA'NK.* [sea and bank.]
The sea shore.
I was, the other day, talking on the sea-bank

A fence to keep the sea within bounds.
So used in the north.

'ABAR. n. s. [from sea and bar; hirundo piscis, Lat.] The sea-swallow.

ABA'T.* n. s. [sea and bat.] A sort of flying fish. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

ABA THED.* adj. [sea and bathed.]
Bathed or dipped in the sea.
Sea bath'd Hesperus, who brings Fishes.

ABE'AST.* n. s. [sea and beast.] A large or monstrous animal of the sea.

That sea-beast
Leviathan, which God of all his works
Created hugest that swim the ocean stream.

ABEAT.† } adj. [sea and beat.] Dashed
ABE'ATEN. } by the waves of the sea

The sovereign of seas he blames in vain,
That, once sea-beat, will to sea again.

Ships — both extremely sea-beaten, and at last racked. Bp. Hall, Heaven upon Earth.
Darkness cover'd o'er

the face of things: along the sea-boat shore atiate we slept. Pope, Odys.
 ABOARD.* adv. Towards the sea: a

scutum, Lat.] The shield represented |

SE'ABORD.* } adj. [sea and border.]

SEABO'RDING.* } Bordering on the sea.

There shall a lion from the sea-board wood
Of Neustria come roving.

Spenser, F. Q. iii. iii. 47.
Those sea-bordering shores, of that point at France. Dragon, Polyolb. S. 17.

SE'ABORN. adj. [sea and born.] Born of the sea; produced by the sea.

Like Neptune and his sea-born niece, shall be
The shining glories of the land and sea. Waller.
All these in order march, and marching sing
The warlike actions of their sea-born king.

SE'ABOUND.* } adj. [sea and bound.]

SEABO'UNDED. } Bounded by the sea.

Our sea-bound Britain.

Mir. for Mag. p. 573.
Subject all nations to thy throne,
And make the sea-bound earth thine own.

Sandys, Ps. p. 2.
SE'ABOY. n. s. [sea and boy.] Boy employed on ship-board.

Canst thou, O partial slave, give thy repose
To the wet seaboy in an hour so rude,
And in the calmest and the stillest night
Deny it to a king? Shakspeare.

SE'ABREACH. n. s. [sea and breach.] Irruption of the sea by breaking the banks.

To an impetuous woman, tempests and sea-breaches are nothing. L'Estrange.

SE'ABREEZE. n. s. [sea and breeze.] Wind blowing from the sea.

Hedges, in most places, would be of great advantage to shelter the grass from the seabreeze.

Mortimer.
SE'ABUILT. adj. [sea and built.] Built for the sea.

Borne each by other in a distant line,
The seabuilt forts in dreadful order move. Dryden.
SEACA'BAGE. n. s. [crambe, Lat.] Seacole-wort. A plant.

It hath fleshy leaves like those of the cabbage. Miller.

SE'ACALF. n. s. [sea and calf; phoca.] The seal.

The seacalf, or seal, is so called from the noise he makes like a calf: his head comparatively not big, shaped rather like an otter's, with teeth like a dog's, and mustaches like those of a cat: his body long, and all over hairy: his forefeet, with fingers clawed, but not divided, yet fit for going: his hinder feet, more properly fins, and fitter for swimming, as being an amphibious animal. The female gives suck, as the porpoise, and other viviparous fishes. Grew, Mus.

SE'ACAP. n. s. [sea and cap.] Cap made to be worn on shipboard.

I know your favour well,
Though now you have no seacap on your head.

Shakspeare.
SE'ACARD.* n. s. [sea and card.] The mariner's card. See CARD.

It is as absurd as to affirm, out of the sea-card, of one and the same wind, that it stands north-south! By. Morton, Discharge, &c. p. 82.

We are all like sea-cards;
All our endeavours, and our motions,
(As they do to the north,) still point at beauty.

Beaumont and Fl. Chances.
SE'ACARP. n. s. [sea and carp; turdus marinus, Lat.] A spotted fish that lives among stones and rocks.

SE'ACHANGE.* n. s. [sea and change.]
Change effected by the sea.

Full fathom five thy father lies;
Of his bones are coral made;
Those are pearls that were his eyes;
Nothing of him that doth fade,
But doth suffer a sea-change. Shaks. Tempest.

SE'ACHART. n. s. [sea and chart.] Map on which only the coasts are delineated.

The situation of the parts of the earth are better learned by a map or seachart, than reading the description. Watts.

SE'ACIRCLED.* adj. [sea and circle.] Surrounded by the sea.

The daughters of sea-circled Tyre.

Sandys, Ps. p. 72.
SE'ACOAL. n. s. [sea and coal.] Coal, so called, not because found in the sea, but because brought to London by sea; pit-coal.

We'll have a posset soon at the latter end of a seacool fire. Shakspeare.

Bacon.
Seacool lasts longer than charcoal.
This pulmonique indisposition of the air is very much heightened, where a great quantity of seacool is burnt. Harvey.

SE'ACOAST. n. s. [sea and coast.] Shore;
edge of the sea.

The venturesome mariner that way,
Learning his ship from those white rocks to save,
Which all along the southern seacoast lay;
For safety's sake that same his searack made,
And nam'd it Albion. Spenser, F. Q.

Upon the seacoast are many parcels of land that would pay well for the taking in.

Mortimer, Husbandry.
SE'ACOB. n. s. [gavia, Lat.] A bird, called also seagull.

SEACOMPASS. n. s. [sea and compass.] The card and needle of mariners.

The needle in the seacompass still moving but to the north point only, with moveer immotus notified the respective constancy of the gentleman to one only. Camden, Rem.

SE'ACOOT. n. s. [from sea and coot; fulica marina, Lat.] Sea-fowl, like the moorhen.

SEACORMORANT, or Seadrake. n. s. [from sea and cormorant; corvus marinus, Lat.]
A seacrow.

SE'ACOW. n. s. [sea and cow.] The manatee.

The seacow is of the cetaceous kind.
It grows to fifteen feet long, and to seven or eight in circumference: its head is like that of a hog, but longer, and more cylindrical; its eyes are small, and it has no external ears, but only two little apertures. Its lips are thick, and it has two long tusks standing out. It has two fins, which stand forward on the breast like hands, whence the Spaniards called it manatee. The female has two round breasts placed between the pectoral fins. The skin is very thick and hard, and not scaly, but hairy.

Hill, Mat. Med.
SE'ACROW.* n. s. [sea and crow.] A name given to the seagull.

SE'ADOG. n. s. [sea and dog.] Perhaps the shark.

Fierce seadogs devour the mangled friends.

Roscommon.
When, stung with hunger, she embroils the flood,
The seadog and the dolphin are her food.

Milton, P. L.
SEAL.† n. s. [igel, Saxon; sigillum, Lat.]

Dr. Johnson.—Serenius notices the remarkable agreement of ancient languages in this word; M. Goth. sighian, to seal; Cym. sel, Icel. segle, a seal; and thinks it probable that the word is originally Scythian.]

1. A stamp engraved with a particular impression, which is fixed upon the wax that closes letters, or affixed as a testimony.

The king commands you
To render up the great seal. Shaks. Hen. VIII.

If the organs of perception, like wax over-hardened with cold, will not receive the impression of the seal; or, like wax of a temper too soft, will not hold it; or else supposing the wax of a temper fit, but the seal not applied with a sufficient force to make a clear impression: in any of these cases the print left by the seal will be obscure. Locke.

The same his grandsire wore about his neck
In three seal rings, which after, melted down,
Form'd a vast buckle for his widow's gown. Pope.

2. The impression made in wax.

Till thou canst rail the seal from off my bond,
Thou but offend'st thy lugs to speak so loud.

Shall be the label to another deed,

Or my true heart with treacherous revolt
Turn to another, this shall slay them both. Shaks.

3. To confirm; to ratify; to settle.

My soul is purg'd from grudging hate,
And with my hand I seal our true hearts' love.

Shakespeare, Rich. III.
When I have performed this, and sealed to them this fruit, I will come into Spain. Rom. xv. 28.

4. To shut; to close: with up.
Seal up your lips, and give no words, but mum!

Shakespeare.
At my death
Thou hast seal'd up my expectation.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.
The sense is like the sun; for the sun seals up the globe of heaven, and opens the globe of earth: so the sense doth obscure heavenly things, and reveals earthly things. Bacon.

5. To make fast.

Back to the infernal pit I drag thee chain'd,
And seal thee so, as henceforth not to scorn
The facil gates of hell too slightly barr'd.

Milton, P. L.

6. To mark with a stamp.

You'd rail upon the hostess,
And say you would present her at the feet,
Because she bought stone jugs, and no seal'd quarts.

Shakespeare.

Those who seriously search after or maintain truth, should study to deliver themselves without obscurity or equivocation. Locke.

It sufficeth that they have once with care sifted

the matter, and searched into all the particulars that could give any light to the question. Locke.

With piercing eye some search where nature plays,

And trace the wanton through her darksome maze. Tickell.

3. To seek; to try to find.

Your husband's coming, woman, to search for a gentleman that is here now in the house.

Shakespeare, M. W. of Windsor.

We in vain search for that constitution within a fly, upon which depend those powers we observe in them. Locke.

SEARCH. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Inquiry by looking into every suspected place.

The orb he roam'd

With narrow search, and with inspection deep.

Milton, P. L.

2. Examination.

The mind sets itself on work in search of some hidden idea, and turns the eye of the soul upon it.

Locke.

3. Inquiry; act of seeking: with of, for,
or after.

His reasons are as two grains of wheat hid in two bushels of chaff: you shall seek all day ere you find them, and when you have them, they are not worth the search. Shakespeare.

Who great in search of God and nature grow,
